Debentures and Stock.]—A husband transferred railway debentures into the names of himself and his wife and a stranger, one of the three trustees of his marriage settlement. He also transferred railway stock into the names of himself and his wife and two strangers, both trustees of the settlement :—Held, that the two investments were advancements for the benefit of the wife ; and the strangers in each case were trustees for her. Eykyn, In re, 6 Ch. D. 115 ; 37 L. T. 261.

Marriage with Wife's Sister.]—Purchase of stock in the names of the purchaser and his deceased wife's sister, whom (in form) he had married :—Held, not to raise a presumption that it was an advancement for her. Soar v. Foster, 4 K. & J. 152 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 406 ; 6 W. R. 265.

XI. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST HUSBAND AND WIFE.

1. ACTIONS GENERALLY.

a. Parties to Sue and be Sued.

See now Rules of Court, 1883, Ord. IX. r. 3 ; Ord. XVIII. r. 4.

Mortgage of Wife's Property.] — A woman had freehold and leasehold property devised to her separate use, and she being desirous of building and repairing some cottages upon part of it, and her husband wanting to pay off a debt, it was arranged, under the advice of their solicitor, that a loan of 550*l.* should be raised by the mortgage of her property, and the deposit of two policies of the husband of 500*l.* each on the life of the husband and wife respectively. The mortgage was executed by the husband and wife, and the husband covenanted for the repayment of the loan. The money was to be advanced by instalments, and a joint authority, signed by husband and wife, was given to the solicitor to receive the first instalment from the mortgagees. He received it, and paid the husband's debt, but he claimed to retain the balance for a debt due to him from the husband. An action was then brought by the husband and wife for the balance :—Held, that, on the facts, the joint action could be maintained. Jones v. Cuthbertson, 42 L. J.,

Q. B. 221; L. R. 8 Q. B. 504; 28 L. T. 673; 21 W. R. 919—Ex. Ch.

Action for Injuries—Prior Marriage of Wife.]—After judgment for husband and wife in an action for injuries to the wife, the defendant cannot assign for error in fact, that the female before her marriage with the male plaintiff had married A., who was then alive, as this was matter which the defendant might and ought to have pleaded to the action. Metropolitan Ry. v. Wilson, 40 L. J., C. P. 208; L. R. 6 C. P. 376; 24 L. T. 550; 19 W. R. 775.

Cognovit Interest of Wife.]—A declaration by husband and wife stated, that by agreement between them and the defendant reciting that L. had been arrested at their suit, that the defendant had become bail to the sheriff, that the bail had been forfeited, and that L. had given a cognovit for the debt and costs—it was agreed between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and the defendant promised, in consideration that the plaintiffs would not enter up judgment, or sue out execution against L. until a certain day, that he would render L. on that day, or, in default, pay the debt and costs. Averment, that the plaintiffs had not entered up judgment or sued out execution against L. before the day. Breach, that the defendant did not render L. on the day or pay the debt and costs:—Held, on motion in arrest of judgment, after verdict for the plaintiffs, first, that, as the agreement was stated to be with the plaintiffs, the promise must be taken after verdict to have been made to them. Secondly, that it sufficiently appeared that the wife had a joint interest, because the recital in the agreement of a cognovit by L. to the plaintiffs was an admission by the defendant of such joint interest. Thirdly, that, though the agreement by the wife was void, it might be rejected as surplusage, and that the count would then be good, as stating a promise to pay the debt and costs to the plaintiffs, in consideration that they would not enter up judgment, or sue out execution until a given day. Nurse v. Wills, 4 B. & Ad. 739; 1 N. & M. 765. S. C., Wills v. Nurse, 1 A. & E. 65—Ex. Ch.

For Injury to Wife's Property dum sola.]—An action for an injury done to the property of the wife dum sola must be brought by the husband and wife; but if such an action is brought by the wife alone, the defendant must plead the coverture in abatement, and not in bar. Milner v. Milnes, 3 Term Rep. 627.

By Wife Trading Separately.]—A feme covert cannot, as a feme sole, maintain an action for breaking and entering her house and seizing goods in her possession, by pleading, in answer to a plea of coverture, that her husband (a lawful subject) having deserted her and gone abroad, she was living separate, and traded, and contracted as a sole trader and single woman, and as such was lawfully possessed of the house and goods. Boggett v. Frier, 11 East, 301. See cols. 1027, 1115.

—— In the City of London.]—A feme covert cannot sue, without her husband, as a sole trader by the custom of London. Caudell v. Shaw, 4 Term Rep. 361. And see Clayton v. Adams, 6 Term Rep. 605.

When Husband an Alien Enemy.]—A feme covert cannot sue alone on a contract made with her before or after marriage, though her husband is an alien enemy. De Wahl v. Braune, 1 H. & N. 178; 25 L. J., Ex. 343.

As to Goods assigned to Wife dum sola.]—In trover by husband and wife for goods assigned to the wife before marriage:—Held, that the husband might sue alone, or the husband and wife might join. Ayling v. Whicher, 1 N. & P. 416; 6 A. & E. 259; W. W. & D. 154; 6 L. J., K. B. 134; 1 Jur. 54.

Interest or Contract of Wife or of Husband, or of Both.]—Wherever the suit will survive to the wife, she must be joined as a party. Dunstan v. Burweld, 1 Wils. 224.

The wife can only join with the husband in bringing an action where she is the meritorious cause of action. Rose v. Bowler, 1 H. Bl. 108.

Husband and wife may sue jointly a railway company for dividends on stock of the company purchased by the wife out of her own earnings, and of which stock she is the registered owner in the books of the company; and if the wife sues alone, the non-joinder of the husband is only a plea in abatement. Dalton v. Midland Ry., 13 C. B. 474; 1 C. L. R. 102; 22 L. J., C. P. 177; 17 Jur. 719; 1 W. R. 308.

Death of Husband—Summons by Wife—Election.]—In a suit in which husband and wife were co-plaintiffs, and the husband died before decree, and the wife, with knowledge of the death of the husband, took out a summons subsequent to the decree to vary it, defendant being, at the date of the summons, ignorant of the death of the husband:—Held, that the widow had elected to continue the suit. Mills v. Barlow, 1 N. R. 412.

b. Husband Suing Alone.

Generally.]—A husband and wife cannot join in assumpsit without stating the interest of the wife. Bidgood v. Way, 2 W. Bl. 1236.

Lands were demised to A. and B. his wife, for twenty-one years. A. afterwards granted a lease of them to C. for nine years:—Held, in an action by A. alone for an injury to his reversionary interest, that the allegation that the reversion belonged to him was well supported, and that the wife need not be joined in the action; but that, even if she ought, the objection should have been taken by a plea in abatement. Wallis v. Harrison, 5 M. & W. 142; 7 D. P. C. 395; 2 H. & H. 65; 8 L. J., Ex. 188.

Husband and wife declared for double rent, for not giving up possession of premises held by the defendant, as tenant, to them. They also brought an action for double value, the declaration in which stated that the plaintiffs were seised in their demesne as of freehold, in right of the female plaintiff, during her life, of a messuage held by the defendant, as tenant to the plaintiffs, for a year certain, the reversion belonging to them in right of the female plaintiff. It then alleged a demand and refusal to give up possession. The cause having been referred, the arbitrator found, that the defendant became tenant to the husband of the premises, and occupied as tenant to him for one year. The contract for this tenancy was by parol, and was made expressly with the husband alone in his own right, and the wife was no party thereto:—Held, that the wife was improperly joined in both actions, and that, as to the latter they could not sue as reversioners, the reversion not being in the two, but in the husband alone; neither could the averment of the tenancy, nor the words "to the plaintiffs," be rejected from the declaration. Harcourt v. Wyman, 3 Ex. 817; 18 L. J., Ex. 453.

By a marriage settlement leaseholds of the wife were assigned upon trust to pay or permit the wife to receive the rents and annual profits during her life, for her separate use. During the coverture the wife received some of the rents from the trustee, and deposited a portion with the defendant, and then died:—Held, that an action for money lent would lie by the husband in his own right to recover the money deposited. Bird v. Pegrum, 13 C. B. 639; 22 L. J., C. P. 166; 17 Jur. 577; 1 W. R. 352.

A declaration by husband and wife stated that the defendant was the maker and seller of lamps called "The Holliday lamp," and thereupon the husband bought of him one of those lamps, to be used by his wife and himself in his shop, and that the defendant then fraudulently warranted that the lamp was reasonably fit and proper for that purpose, whereas the lamp was dangerous and unsafe, by reason whereof, when the wife attempted to use the lamp, it exploded and injured her. At the trial it appeared that the accident arose from the defective construction of the lamp, but there was no proof that the defendant knew of the defect, and the jury found that he was not guilty of any fraudulent or deceitful representation:—Held, that the action could not be maintained by the wife, there being no misfeasance towards her independently of the contract, which was with the husband alone. Longmeid v. Holliday, 6 Ex. 671; 20 L. J., Ex. 430.

In an action by a husband for breach of a contract with him to carry his wife on a journey within a reasonable time, averring special damage to him; if he fails to prove the special damage, he can recover no more than nominal damages, though the wife had suffered great personal inconvenience from the breach of contract. Collier v. Dublin, Wicklow and Wexford Ry., Ir. R. 8 C. L. 21.

A wife can only be made a party to a suit instituted by her husband in respect of her separate estate; and the husband, by making her a party, in fact admits it to be her separate estate. Earl v. Ferris, 19 Beav. 67; 24 L. J., Ch. 20; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 5; 8 Eq. R. 57; 3 W. R. 36.

—— In Replevin.]—A declaration in replevin by S. and his wife, without showing any cause for joining the wife, is bad on demurrer. Serres v. Dodd, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 405.

—— For Harbouring Wife.]—If a wife by ill-treatment and fear of bodily injury is forced to quit her husband's house, any person may safely receive her, and not be subject to an action at the husband's suit. Berthon v. Cartwright, 2 Esp. 480.

So, if the wife is kept by the defendant from a principle of humanity, to secure her from the ill-treatment of her husband, an action will not lie even after notice. Philp v. Squire, Peake, 82; 3 R. R. 659.

—— For Injuries to Wife.]—A husband as administrator to his deceased wife, declared that the defendant was in the occupation of a brewery and an office, and a passage leading thereto from the public street used by the defendant for the reception of customers in his trade of a brewer, which passage was the usual means of access from the office to the public street; yet he wrongfully and negligently permitted a trap-door in the floor of the passage to be and remain open without being properly guarded and lighted, and the wife, who had been to the office as a customer of the defendant, and was lawfully passing along the passage on her return from the office to the street, fell through the aperture caused by the trap-door being and remaining open and not properly guarded and lighted, whereby she was killed:—Held, that the husband's right to sue as administrator, under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, sufficiently appeared, without express allegation of pecuniary damage. Chapman v. Rothwell, El. Bl. & El. 168; 27 L. J., Q. B. 315; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1180.

Held, also, that the duty of the defendant and breach sufficiently appeared. Ib.

In an action for negligence, whereby the wife was killed, the husband is not entitled to any damages for the loss of her society, or for his mental sufferings on her account, after the moment of her death. Baker v. Bolton, 1 Camp. 493; 10 R. R. 734.

In trespass, the plaintiff may give in evidence a consequential injury to his wife, not as a substantial ground of action, but to show how violent the defendant's conduct was. Huxley v. Bery, 1 Stark. 98.

By Husband's Assignees.]—Assignees of a bankrupt cannot, in their names alone, maintain an action on a chose in action (e.g. a promissory note) made to the wife of the bankrupt before her marriage. Sherrington v. Yates, 1 D. & L. 1032; 12 M. & W. 855; 13 L. J., Ex. 249—Ex. Ch.

When a right of action of a bankrupt or of an insolvent is of such a nature that if vested in the bankrupt or insolvent it would pass to his assignees, the interest of the bankrupt or insolvent in such right of action passes to his assignees, and a right of action for the conversion, before the marriage, of the wife's goods falls within this rule. Richbell v. Alexander, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 324; 30 L. J., C. P. 268.

An action brought to enforce such a right must be brought in the names of the wife and of the assignees, who are necessary parties; and an action by husband and wife must fail. Ib.

c. Wife suing without Husband.

i. Before Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

a. When Permitted.

When Husband is a Convict.]—A married woman, whose husband has been transported for seven years, may maintain an action as a feme sole, on the ground of the husband having abjured the realm, even though the term of transportation has expired. Carrol v. Blencow, 4 Esp. 27.

When Husband is Abroad.]—A replication to a plea of coverture, that the plaintiff's husband had been abroad for seven years, and was not known by the plaintiff to be living within that time, is bad. Lake v. Ruffle, 6 N. & M. 684; 2 H. & W. 203.

When Money is admitted to be Due to Wife alone.]—Where trustees for the separate use of the wife admitted that they held a sum of money to her separate use, but refused to pay it over without her separate receipt:—Held, that an action would not lie by husband and wife for the sum so admitted to be due to her. Bond v. Nurse, 10 Q. B. 244; 16 L. J., Q. B. 196; 11 Jur. 655.

Tort committed before Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]—A married woman married before 1st January, 1882, may bring and maintain an action in her own name alone after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, for torts committed against her property before the act came into operation; and since its coming into operation the previous leave of the court or a judge is no longer necessary. James v. Barraud, 49 L. T. 300; 31 W. R. 786.

Petition for Appointment of New Trustees.]—The presentation by a married woman of a petition for the appointment of new trustees of a fund in which she is interested in reversion is a "suing" within the meaning of s. 1, sub-s. 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and her husband need accordingly not be made a co-petitioner. Outwin's Trusts, In re, 48 L. T. 410; 31 W. R. 374.

b. Security for Costs.

Rule as to.] — The rule as to giving security for costs before a married woman can be allowed to sue separately under Ord. XVI. r. 8, is the same as in the ordinary case of giving security for costs by an appellant, and therefore she is to give such security if she has no available means to pay the costs if she loses, but not where she has such means. Brown v. North, 51 L. J., Q. B. 365; 9 Q. B. D. 52; 46 L. T. 361; 30 W. R. 531—C. A.

A married woman in receipt of a separate income of 1,500*l.* per annum was not required to give security for costs on obtaining leave to defend separately under r. 8 of Ord. XVI. Noel v. Noel, 13 Ch. D. 510.

c. Next Friend.

When Necessary—Suit as to Separate Estate—Husband Defendant.]—Since the Judicature Acts, as before, a wife suing to recover separate estate ought to sue by a next friend, making her husband a defendant. Roberts v. Evans, 47 L. J., Ch. 469; 7 Ch. D. 830; 38 L. T. 99; 26 W. R. 280. Richards v. Millett, 9 L. T. 13; 11 W. R. 1035. And see Griffith v. Hood, 2 Ves. 452; Sigel v. Phelps, 7 Sim. 239; Prince v. Howard, 14 Beav. 28.

—— Petition for Access.]—A married woman may petition, under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, for access to her children without her next friend. Groom, In re, 7 Hare, 38. And see Hakewill, In re, 1 Eq. R. 11.

—— Petition for Payment out.] — A petition by a married woman for payment out of court of her separate estate is a remedy for the pretection of such property within the meaning of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 93, s. 11, and she can present her petition without appearing by a next friend, as if the property in question belonged to her as an unmarried woman. Fisher's Trusts, In re, 45 L. T. 504; 30 W. R. 56.

—— Appeal.] — A married woman is not entitled to present a petition of appeal without a next friend, although another person joins in the petition, and the suit relates to her separate estate. Picard v. Hine, L. R. 5 Ch. 274. And see S. C., 18 W. R. 754; Elliott v. Ince, 7 De G. M. & G. 475; 26 L. J., Ch. 821; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 597; 5 W. R. 465.

—— Deserted Wife.] — A single woman married a Frenchman, and was deserted by him, and he being a minor, and having married without the consent of his parents, they alleged that the marriage was void. An application by the woman for leave to file a bill without a next friend refused. Caldicott v. Baker, 13 W. R. 449.

—— Petition for Taxation of Bill of Costs.]—In every case where a married woman seeks to tax a solicitor's bill, for business in respect of her separate estate, she must apply by her next friend. Waugh, In re, 15 Beav. 508; 21 L. J., Ch. 567.

The next friend will be liable for the costs of the order and taxation, but not for the amount of the bill. Ib.

A married woman having obtained an order to tax without the intervention of a next friend, was ordered to give security, and in default the order was to be discharged. Ib.

—— Suit as to Execution of Power.]—In a suit relating to the execution of a power vested in a married woman:—Held, that the wife ought to sue by her next friend. Hope v. Fox, 1 John. & H. 456; 30 L. J., Ch. 272; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 186; 9 W. R. 360.

Fitness of — Defendant acting as.] — A defendant cannot act as next friend of a plaintiff feme covert. Payne v. Little, 13 Beav. 141.

It is not a valid objection to a next friend of a married woman that they are co-defendants. Elliott v. Ince, 7 De G. M. & G. 475; 26 L. J., Ch. 821; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 597; 5 W. R. 465.

—— Must be Substantial Person.]—A married woman may sue alone in formâ pauperis, but if she sues by a next friend, he must be a substantial person and capable of answering the costs of the suit. If not, the defendants may obtain an order to stay proceedings in the suit until the plaintiff appoints some substantial person her next friend. Hind v. Whitmore, 2 Kay & J. 458; 25 L. J., Ch. 394; 4 W. R. 379.

The same rule does not hold in an infant's suit, because an infant does not choose his own next friend, and also because the court readily entertains a suit on behalf of an infant, and will, of its own accord, stay the proceedings in such a suit if not for the infant's benefit. Ib.

And see Sweeney v. Hall, Sau. & Sch. 662; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 22.

—— Suit In formâ pauperis.]—A feme covert being allowed to sue by her next friend, in formâ pauperis, the court would not require that such a party shall be of sufficient substance to answer the costs. Dowden v. Hook, 3 Beav. 399; 14 L. J., Ch. 383; 9 Jur. 544. Questioning Pennington v. Alvin, 1 Sim. & S. 264; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 202.

Death of.] — Prochein ami of feme plaintiff being dead, she was ordered to appoint new one in two months, or bill dismissed with costs out of fund in court. Barlee v. Barlee, 1 Sim. & S. 100.

Insolvency—Stay of Proceedings.]—If the next friend of a married woman be insolvent, the court will stay the proceedings until the next friend be changed or she shall give security for costs. M'Keon v. Walsh, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 608.

And see Wilton v. Hill, 2 De G. M. & G. 807; and D'Oechsner v. Scott, 24 Beav. 239.

And see McCann v. Borradaile, 37 L. J., Ch. 124; 17 L. T. 298; 16 W. R. 175; Drinan v. Mannix, 3 Dr. & War. 154; 2 Con. & L. 87; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 190; Pennington v. Pennington, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 71; and Pennington v. Alvin, 1 Sim. & S. 264; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 202.

—— Suspicion of not Enough.]—To disqualify a person from being a next friend to a married woman it is not sufficient that his insolvency be suspected; there must be either admitted insolvency, or an irresistible inference of it. The court will not, for the purpose of deciding whether a person is a proper next friend, admit of a number of affidavits to show whether or not he is solvent. Elliott v. Ince, 7 De G. M. & G. 475; 26 L. J., Ch. 821; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 597; 5 W. R. 465.

—— Onus of Proof on Defendant.]—The onus is on a defendant, who seeks to have a next friend removed on the ground of insolvency, to make out a clear case. Giacometti v. Prodgers, 28 L. T. 294; 21 W. R. 282.

—— Objection Cannot be Taken at Hearing.]—An objection to the solvency of the next friend of a married woman cannot be taken at the hearing. Monday v. Waghorn, 21 L. J., Ch. 353; 16 Jur. 737.

—— Security for Costs.]—The next friend of a married woman plaintiff must be a person who is capable of giving security for costs. Hind v. Whitmore, 25 L. J., Ch. 394; 4 W. R. 379. And see Stevens v. Williams, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 545; 21 L. J., Ch. 57.

The court will not order the next friend of a married woman to give security for costs, unless upon a distinct allegation that he is believed to be insolvent, or unable to answer the costs of the suit; a mere statement of belief that he is in poor circumstances is not sufficient. Beach v. Sleddon, 39 L. J., Ch. 123. And see Smith v. Etches, 1 Hem. & M. 711; 9 L. T. 757; 12 W. R. 368; and Schjott v. Schjott, 51 L. J., Ch. 368; 19 Ch. D. 94; 45 L. T. 333; 30 W. R. 329.

A married woman who had brought an administration action by her next friend, in which an order had been made directing certain inquiries, was an evidence that her next friend was a person of no means directed to give security for costs. Thompson, In re, Stevens v. Thompson, 57 L. J., Ch. 748; 38 Ch. D. 317; 59 L. T. 427—C. A.

—— Poverty.]—The poverty of the next friend of an infant will be no ground for the defendant's requiring security for costs. Drinan v. Mannix, 2 Con. & L. 87; 3 Dr. & W. 154; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 162, 190.

But the poverty of a next friend is a ground for requiring security for costs to be given, where the same person is next friend both of a feme covert and infants who are co-plaintiffs. Ib.

—— Form of Order.]—The form of the order in such a case is, that the proceedings be stayed, until the next friend of the feme covert be changed, or security for costs be given. Ib. And see Jones v. Fawcett, 2 Ph. 278; 16 L. J., Ch. 497; 11 Jur. 529.

—— Female Co-plaintiff.]—A female co-plaintiff upon being appointed next friend to her mother and brothers and sisters must give security for costs. Balguy v. Broadhurst, 2 Eq. R. 1270; 2 W. R. 680.

—— Second Action—New Next Friend—Costs not paid.]—An action was brought by a married woman by her next friend, and an order was made that the next friend should give security for costs on the ground of poverty. That order not having been complied with the action was dismissed with costs. Afterwards the plaintiff by a different next friend brought another action for the same purpose:—Held, that the second action ought to be stayed till the costs of the first action were paid. Hind v. Whitmore (2 Kay & J. 458) not followed. Payne, In re, Randle v. Payne, 52 L. J., Ch. 544; 23 Ch. D. 288; 48 L. T. 194; 31 W. R. 509. And see Bligh v. Tredgett, 5 De G. & Sm. 74; 21 L. J., Ch. 204; 15 Jur. 1101.

Change of.]—An application by a married woman, plaintiff, for leave to change her next friend, is in the discretion of the court, and will not be granted if there be reason to believe that the defendant's security for costs will be thereby prejudiced. Jones v. Fawcett, 2 Ph. 278; 16 L. J., Ch. 497; 11 Jur. 529.

And see Lander v. Parr, 16 L. J., Ch. 269; 11 Jur. 271; and Crace v. Crace, 3 W. R. 146.

Security for Costs.]—If the next friend of a married woman is changed during the suit, he must not only give his own security for the costs incurred, but find a security to join him in such amount as the master in his discretion shall fix. Payne v. Little, 22 L. J., Ch. 1037. And see S. C., 1 W. R. 238; and Waugh, In re, 15 Beav. 508; 21 L. J., Ch. 567; Payne v. Little, 14 Beav. 652; 21 L. J., Ch. 718; Ring v. Nettles, Fl. & K. 51; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 53; and Lawley v. Halpen, Bunb. 310.

New Next Friend — Liability for Costs.]—A bill was filed by a married woman purporting to sue in respect of her separate estate; and the next friend having died, a new next friend was appointed without his knowledge. An order having been made dismissing the bill for want of prosecution with costs, to be paid by the new next friend:—Held, on a motion by the new next friend to vary the order by charging the costs on the plaintiff's solicitor, that the order was right, and the next friend was liable. Bligh v. Tredgett, 5 De G. & Sm. 74; 21 L. J., Ch. 204; 15 Jur. 1101.

A next friend, substituted for one who had previously died, is liable for all the costs, from the commencement of the suit, and not only for such as have been incurred during the time his name has been on the record. Ib.

Semble, a next friend, appointed without his own knowledge, is liable, as between himself and the defendants, to all the costs of the suit, and has a remedy against the solicitor who appointed him. Ib.

A married woman by her next friend filed a petition for appointment of new trustees, and the petition was supported by an affidavit, which contained charges of gross misconduct on the part of her husband. The court made the next friend pay the costs incurred by the allegations of misconduct on the part of the husband. Wills, In re, 9 L. T. 570 ; 12 W. R. 97.

And see Glanvill, In re, Ellis v. Johnson, 55 L. J., Ch. 325 ; 31 Ch. D. 532 ; 54 L. T. 411 ; 34 W. R. 309 ; 50 J. P. 662—C. A.

When a next friend of a married woman institutes, without her consent, a useless suit, he will be ordered to pay the costs. Kenrick v. Wood, 39 L. J., Ch. 92 ; L. R. 9 Eq. 333 ; 19 W. R. 57.

—— Security may be ordered at any time.]—Under rules of S. C., r. 8 of Ord. XVI., the court has a judical discretion to direct security for costs to be given at any time. Martano v. Mann, 49 L. J., Ch. 510 ; 14 Ch. D. 419—C. A.

—— Writ issued by—Lay next Friend acting as Solicitor.]—A writ issued by the next friend of a married woman on her behalf without the employment of a solicitor will be, together with all subsequent proceedings, set aside, with costs against the person issuing such writ. Swann v. Swann, 43 L. T. 530. And see Kenrick v. Wood, 39 L. J., Ch. 92 ; L. R. 9 Eq. 333 ; 19 W. R. 57.

Authority.]—The authority given by a married woman to her next friend to commence an action cannot be filed. Rogers v. Horn, 26 W. R. 432.

A next friend must be prepared when challenged to show his authority. Schjott v. Schjott, 51 L. J., Ch. 368 ; 19 Ch. D. 94 ; 45 L. T. 333 ; 30 W. R. 329—C. A.

—— Action Brought without Husband's Authority.]—An action having been brought by a married woman as executrix in which her husband was made a co-plaintiff, the court refused to order the proceedings to be stayed altogether, but ordered they should be stayed until security was given to the husband by the attorney against the costs of the action, the affidavits showing that the husband and wife were living separate, and that the action was brought without his sanction and against his will. Proctor v. Brotherton, 9 Ex. 486 ; 2 C. L. R. 496 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 116 ; 2 W. R. 195.

Where an action is brought (without the authority of the husband) in the name of husband and wife, for an assault upon the latter, the husband will be entitled to stay the proceedings until he receives an indemnity against costs. Harrison v. Almond, 4 D. P. C. 321 ; 1 H. & W. 519.

So where husband and wife lived separate, and an action was brought by the wife for a debt due to herself in the name of the husband and wife, without his authority, the court ordered proceedings to be stayed until an indemnity was given to the husband. Morgan v. Thomas, 2 C. & M. 388 ; 2 D. P. C. 332 ; 3 L. J., Ex. 90.

An action having been brought by a wife of a lunatic (not so declared by commission) in his name, for the recovery of a debt, the defendant paid the money into court. The court made absolute a rule for payment of the money out to the wife. Gliddon v. Trebble, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 367 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 160.

Unmarried Woman representing herself to be a Feme Covert.]—A man and woman had been married and were cohabiting together. Goods which had belonged to the woman before the marriage were seized and sold under an execution against the man. The woman afterwards discovered that the marriage was void :—Held, that she might recover in trover against the sheriff the full value of the goods, though exceeding the price for which they were sold. Glaspool v. Young, 4 M. & Ry. 533 ; 9 B. & C. 696 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 305.

The plaintiff hired a house of the defendant, representing herself at the time to be a feme covert, and, upon the faith of the like representations, she obtained goods from various tradesmen :—Held, that her assertions that she was a feme covert estopped her from suing as a feme sole in respect of a trespass committed by the defendant under colour of a distress for rent. Langford v. Foot, 2 M. & Scott, 349.

Action by Wife's Representative.]—In an action by the administratrix of a wife it appeared that the defendant had written letters to the wife promising to hold at her disposal a sum of money which he had received from a third person. The husband did not interfere either to allow her to have the control of the money or to prevent her from dealing with it. He survived her, and then died :—Held, that the gift of money was a chose in action conferred on the wife with which the husband did not during coverture interfere, and therefore the action was properly brought by the representative of the wife. Fleet v. Perrins, 9 B. & S. 575 ; 37 L. J., Q. B. 233 ; L. R. 3 Q. B. 536 ; 19 L. T. 147. Affirmed, 9 B. & S. 575 ; 38 L. J., Q. B. 257 ; L. R. 4 Q. B. 500 ; 20 L. T. 814 ; 17 W. R. 862—Ex. Ch.

Under Married Women's Property Act, 1870.]—Since the Judicature Acts, as before, a wife suing to recover separate estate ought to sue by a next friend, making her husband a defendant. Roberts v. Evans, 47 L. J., Ch. 469 ; 7 Ch. D. 830 ; 38 L. T. 99 ; 26 W. R. 280.

In an action of this kind the husband was made a co-plaintiff. The defendant by his statement of defence objected that the husband ought to have been a defendant. The statement of claim was afterwards amended for another purpose, but no alteration was made as to the parties. At the trial the court ordered the husband to be made a defendant, and, in giving judgment for the wife, deprived her of the costs of the pleadings subsequently to the time when the defendant took the objection. Ib.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), enables a married woman to maintain an action in her own name to recover damages against her bankers for dishonouring cheques drawn by her in the course of a trade which she carries on separately from her husband, or for not duly presenting or not giving due notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange acquired by her in such trade, and intrusted to them by her for presentment, it being a remedy "for the protection and security" of her separate property, within s. 11. Summers v. City Bank, 43 L. J., C. P. 261 ; L. R. 9 C. P. 580 ; 31 L. T. 268.

A feme covert can sue her husband in respect of money lent to him out of her separate estate. The plaintiff lent to her husband 1,000*l.*, out of money left by will to her sole and separate use, upon the security of his promissory note :—Held, that she was entitled to recover. Horrell v.

Horrell, 46 J. P. 295. See also Woodward v. Woodward, 3 De G. J. & S. 672.

In a suit by married women as to their separate estates, leave given after answer to amend by striking out their husbands as co-plaintiffs, and making them defendants. The amendment is not within the fiftieth General Order. Greer v. Greer, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 32.

Petition for Payment out of Court—Next Friend Unnecessary.]—A petition by a married woman for payment out of court of her separate estate is a remedy for the protection of such property within the meaning of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 93, s. 11, and she can present her petition without appearing by a next friend, as if the property in question belonged to her as an unmarried woman. Fisher's Trusts, In re, 45 L. T. 504; 30 W. R. 56.

Right to bring Action of Trespass.]—Under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, a married woman can maintain an action in her own name against a wrongdoer for her expulsion from a beerhouse, in which she carried on business apart from her husband, and for loss of profits, stock-in-trade and fixtures, which she had purchased with her separate earnings, it being a remedy for the protection of her property within the meaning of s. 11. Moore v. Robinson, 48 L. J., Q. B. 156; 40 L. T. 99; 27 W. R. 312.

Action by Husband.]—A., a feme sole, entitled to the profits of an estate vested in trustees for her separate use, conveyed them to B., a married woman, for her separate use, without the interposition of a trustee. A. married, and the trustees, without notice of the conveyance to B., paid the profits to A. B.'s husband cannot maintain an action against A.'s husband for the money as money received to his use. Davison v. Atkinson, 5 Term Rep. 434.

Sufficient Separate Estate presumed.] — A married woman suing as a member of a firm must be assumed to have (unless the contrary be shown), sufficient separate estate to justify her in maintaining an action. Eddowes v. Argentine Loan Co., 63 L. T. 364—C. A.

Execution—Marriage before Final Judgment.] —A feme sole, who marries before final judgment, may sue out execution, without making her husband a party to the record, the marriage being only matter of plea in abatement. Walker v. Golling, 2 D. (N.S.) 776; 11 M. & W. 78; 12 L. J., Ex. 185.

ii. Since Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

Statute.]—By 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 1, sub-s. 2, a married woman shall be capable, in respect of her separate property, of suing either in contract or in tort or otherwise in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined with her as plaintiff or be made a party to any action or other legal proceeding brought by her.

And by s. 12, every woman, whether married before or after this act, shall have in her own name against all persons whomsoever, including her husband, the same civil remedies, and also (subject, as regards her husband, to the proviso hereinafter contained) the same remedies and redress by way of criminal proceedings, for the protection and security of her own separate property, as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole, but, except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for a tort. In any indictment or other proceeding under this section it shall be sufficient to allege such property to be her property; and in any proceeding under this section a husband or wife shall be competent to give evidence against each other, any statute or rule of law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that no criminal proceeding shall be taken by any wife against her husband by virtue of this act while they are living together, as to or concerning any property claimed by her, nor while they are living apart, as to or concerning any act done by the husband while they were living together, concerning property claimed by the wife, unless such property shall have been wrongfully taken by the husband when leaving or deserting, or about to leave or desert, his wife.

Suing as Feme Sole—Security for Costs.]—A married woman being empowered by s. 1, sub-s. 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, to sue as a feme sole, may sue without her husband or a next friend, and cannot be ordered to give security for the costs of the action, even though she have at the time of the action no separate estate. Isaac, In re, Jacob v. Isaac, 54 L. J., Ch. 1136; 30 Ch. D. 418; 53 L. T. 478; 33 W. R. 845.

And see Severance v. Civil Service Supply Association, 48 L. T. 485, and Threlfall v. Wilson, 8 P. D. 18; 48 L. T. 238; 31 W. R. 508; 47 J. P. 279. See col. 1303.

Suing Alone—Tort committed before 1882.]—A married woman is entitled under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1, sub-s. 2, to bring an action in respect of a tort committed upon her during coverture before the commencement of the act, without joining her husband as plaintiff. Weldon v. Winslow, 53 L. J., Q. B. 528; 13 Q. B. D. 784; 51 L. T. 643; 33 W. R. 219—C. A.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not enable a married woman to bring an action for an assault committed upon her during coverture before the passing of the act without joining her husband. Weldon v. Riviere, 53 L. J., Q. B. 448.

—— Tort when barred by Statute of Limitations.]—The right of a married woman whose husband is alive to bring an action in her own name, dates from the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (January 1, 1883). For that purpose she is a feme discovert within the Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), and she may within the statutable limits from that date bring an action for a cause which accrued many years previously to that date while she was a married woman. Weldon v. Neal, 51 L. T. 289; 32 W. R. 828.

The effect of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is to make a married woman discovert from the date of the passing of the act in respect of torts committed against her during coverture, and she is entitled to bring an action in respect of a tort committed during coverture and before 1882, which would otherwise be barred by 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3; for that statute begins to run only from the date of the passing of the act of 1882. Lowe v. Fox, 54 L. J., Q. B. 561; 15 Q. B. D. 667; 53 L. T. 886; 34 W. R. 144; 50 J. P. 244—C. A.

—— House Settled to Separate Use.]—When a husband, by a post-nuptial deed, has settled a house and business to the separate use of his wife, to be managed by her for the benefit of herself as if a feme sole, he can be restrained from in any way interfering with the business, and even from entering the house. Wood v. Wood, 19 W. R. 1049.

Husband Claiming Right — Interim Injunction.]—On a marriage a leasehold house was settled upon the usual trusts for the wife for life, for her separate use, and the husband and wife continued to reside in the house. Differences arose between them, they ceased to cohabit, and the wife instituted proceedings for divorce or judicial separation. The husband claimed the right to go to and to use the house when and as he thought fit, not for the purpose of consorting with his wife, but for his own purposes. In an action by the wife against the trustees and her husband, claiming administration of the trusts of the settlement and an injunction to restrain the husband from entering the house:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the wife was entitled to an interim injunction. Symonds v. Hallett, 53 L. J., Ch. 60; 24 Ch. D. 346; 49 L. T. 380; 32 W. R. 103—C. A. And see Wood v. Wood, 19 W. R. 1049.

House in Sole Occupation of Wife as her Separate Property — Trespass.]—A married woman in the sole occupation of a house, bought by her out of her own earnings, since the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, can now, after the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, sue alone, without her husband, in an action for trespass, a person who has entered such house against her will, though he did no injury to the house, and entered it with the authority of her husband, but for a purpose unconnected with the husband's desire to live with his wife:—Quære, if the husband himself has a right to enter such house. Weldon v. De Bathe, 54 L. J., Q. B. 113; 14 Q. B. D. 339; 53 L. T. 520; 33 W. R. 328—C. A.

Application for Injunction—Undertaking as to Damages.]—Where an interlocutory injunction is granted upon the application of a married woman, her sole undertaking as to damages is sufficient. A married woman living and carrying on business apart from her husband brought her action for specific performance of an alleged agreement to grant a lease, and moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant from dealing with the property. The defendant alleged that the plaintiff had not sufficient separate property to satisfy her present liabilities, and that her undertaking in damages would be illusory, and asked for the undertaking of some responsible person:—Held, that since a married woman was for the purpose of suing in the same position as a feme sole, no distinction could be made between her and a male plaintiff; and that, therefore, her sole undertaking for damages was sufficient. Pike v. Cave, 62 L. J., Ch. 937; 68 L. T. 650.

An application was made on behalf of a married woman for an injunction restraining the Bank of England, until further order, from permitting the transfer of a sum of new three per cent. annuities, standing in the names of the executors of a testator, and to which the married woman claimed to be beneficially entitled. An injunction was granted for a fortnight on the usual undertaking of the married woman to be answerable in damages. The registrar refused to draw up the order on the sole undertaking of the married woman as to damages:—Held, that the sole undertaking of the married woman must be accepted. Prynne, In re, 53 L. T. 465. See also Hunt v. Hunt, 54 L. J., Ch. 289.

d. Actions against Wife.

Statute.]—By 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 1, sub-s. 2, a married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract, and of suing and being sued, either in contract or in tort, or otherwise in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined with her as plaintiff or defendant, or be made a party to any action or other legal proceeding brought by or taken against her.

And see R. S. C., 1883, Ord. XVI., r. 16.

Married Woman as Executrix or Trustee.]—By 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 18, a married woman who is an executrix or administratrix alone or jointly with any other person or persons of the estate of any deceased person, or a trustee alone or jointly as aforesaid of property subject to any trust, may sue or be sued, and may transfer or join in transferring any such annuity or deposit as aforesaid, or any sum forming part of the public stocks or funds, or of any other stocks or funds transferable as aforesaid, or any share, stock, debenture, debenture stock, or other benefit, right, claim, or other interest of or in any such corporation, company, public body, or society in that character, without her husband, as if she were a feme sole.

Appearance.]—In an action against husband and wife for a debt incurred by the wife dum sola, the court refused at the instance of the husband, to set aside an appearance entered for both, it appearing that the wife had given instructions to the attorney. Williams v. Smith, 1 D. P. C. 632.

Pleading—Statement of Claim—No Appearance entered.]—Where a married woman is defendant in an action on a contract, and has made default in the delivery of a defence, the statement of claim must contain an allegation that the defendant has separate estate; otherwise the court will refuse to make an order against the defendant on the statement of claim under Ord. XXVII. r. 11, of the Rules of 1883, Tetley v Griffith, 57 L. T. 673; 36 W. R. 96. But see now the Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 1.

Money Paid by Husband for Wife after Marriage.]—Before the coming into operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a husband in a court of equity might make his wife a defendant to a suit respecting her separate estate, and might obtain a decree against her for breach of any contract, whereby she had intended to bind the same, and that statute has not deprived a husband of any right or remedy, to which, if it had not been passed, he would have been entitled as against his wife in respect of her separate estate; and therefore it is now competent to a husband to maintain an action against his wife, and to charge her separate estate for money lent by him to her after their marriage, and for money paid by him for her after their marriage at her request made before or after their marriage. Butler v. Butler, 55 L. J., Q. B. 55; 16 Q. B. D. 374; 54 L. T. 591; 34 W. R. 132—C. A.

Action by Executors against Legatee for Indemnity.]—A married woman became entitled to the residue of a testator's estate for her separate use. A part of the residue consisted of certain shares not fully paid-up. The certificates for the shares were handed to her by the executors, but no transfer was executed. A call was afterwards made on the shares, which the married woman refused to pay. The executors commenced an action against the married woman for an indemnity:—Held, that they were entitled thereto; that the words "or otherwise" in s. 1, sub-s. 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, gave the executors the right to sue her in respect of her separate estate. The object and effect of s. 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is to enable a married woman to be sued on any cause of action on which a man can be sued, subject to the fact that her power to contract is limited, and the remedy against her is confined to her separate estate. Kershaw, In re, Whittaker v. Kershaw, 60 L. J., Ch. 9; 45 Ch. D. 320; 63 L. T. 203; 39 W. R. 23—C. A.

Joint and Several Promissory Note.]—A woman, married since the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, joined her husband in signing a joint and several promissory note for money lent to him. The husband became bankrupt:—Held, that her separate estate was liable for the amount due on the note, and that it was not necessary to make any trustees for the wife parties to the action. Davies v. Jenkins, 6 Ch. D. 728; 26 W. R. 260.

Liability for Tort after Marriage.]—The plaintiff may sue the wife alone or the husband and wife jointly for wrongs committed by her after marriage. Seroka v. Kattenburg, 55 L. J., Q. B. 375; 17 Q. B. D. 177; 54 L. T. 649; 34 W. R. 542.

Third Party—Married Woman—Judgment against—Refusing to state Defence.]—Judgment may be ordered, under Ord. XVI., r. 52, against a third party who has appeared after a third party notice has been served on him, if the third party, on the hearing of an application for directions, declines to state any defence, and if the judge is not satisfied that there is any question proper to be tried. Such judgment may be ordered against a married woman as a feme sole declaring her separate estate liable, although the liability was incurred prior to the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Gloucestershire Banking Co. v. Phillips, 53 L. J., Q. B. 493; 12 Q. B. D. 533; 50 L. T. 360; 32 W. R. 522.

Order XIV.—Payment into Court—Right of Plaintiff to Money.]—In an action against a married woman who had separate estate not subject to a restraint on alienation, she was ordered to pay the sum claimed into court as a condition to defending the action. At the trial the plaintiff obtained judgment for the amount paid in:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an immediate order for payment out of court, and that no inquiry could be ordered as to whether the defendant had any and what separate estate available for execution. Bird v. Barstow, 61 L. J., Q. B. 1; [1892] 1 Q. B. 94; 65 L. T. 656; 40 W. R. 71; 56 J. P. 196—C. A.

—— Delay in Entering Judgment.] — The plaintiff obtained leave, under Ord. XIV., to enter final judgment for a debt against a married woman possessed of separate estate with a restraint on anticipation. He delayed entering judgment for three months, when he knew that arrears had just become due, and then entered judgment and obtained an order for a receiver:—Held, that an order for a receiver ought not to be made under such circumstances. Colyer v. Isaacs, 77 L. T. 198—C. A.

—— Judgment under—Evidence of Separate Estate.] — In an action against husband and wife to recover a debt of the wife contracted before marriage, where the marriage has taken place after the coming into operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, and the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1874, but before the coming into operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, judgment may be entered against the wife under Ord. XIV., r. 1, making the debt and costs payable out of her separate property, with a limitation as regards execution similar to that in the form settled in Scott v. Morley (20 Q. B. D. 120), without proof of the existence of separate estate at the date of the judgment. Downe v. Fletcher, 21 Q. B. D. 11; 59 L. T. 180; 36 W. R. 694; 52 J. P. 375.

Form of Judgment.] — The proper form of judgment against a married woman under s. 1, sub-s. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, settled by the court. Scott v. Morley, 57 L. J., Q. B. 43; 20 Q. B. D. 120; 57 L. T. 919; 36 W. R. 67; 4 Morrell, 286; 52 J. P. 230—C. A.

When judgment was recovered against a married woman, an order was made, on the application of the plaintiff, that the judgment debtor should pay the amount due upon the judgment by instalments out of her separate estate not subject to restraint against anticipation; or which, being so subject, was nevertheless liable to execution under s. 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Johnstone v. Browne, 18 L. R. Ir. 428.

When judgment is obtained against a married woman, execution is limited to such separate estate as she is not restrained from anticipating; unless such restraint exists under any settlement or agreement for a settlement of her own property, made or entered into by herself. Bursill v. Tanner, 13 Q. B. D. 691; 50 L. T. 589; 32 W. R. 827. See also Gloucestershire Banking Co. v. Phillips, 53 L. J., Q. B. 493; 12 Q. B. D. 533; 50 L. T. 360; 32 W. R. 522.

The plaintiff sued the defendant, a widow, as maker of a promissory note during the lifetime of her husband. The defendant pleaded that at the making of the note she was not entitled to separate property, and that she did not afterwards become possessed of or entitled to any property which she could charge, alien or dispose of; that the only separate estate she possessed or was entitled to at the date of the note, and afterwards during coverture, was separate estate subject to a restraint on anticipation; and that there were not, at the date of the alleged contract, or subsequently, arrears thereof due:—Held, on demurrer, a valid defence to the action. The principle of Pike v. Fitzgibbon (17 Ch. D. 454) has not been altered by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75). Myles v. Burton, 14 L. R. Ir. 258.

At the trial of an action, brought against husband and wife to recover the amount of a bill of exchange indorsed by the wife to the plaintiff, it appeared that the wife, when she indorsed the bill, was a married woman possessed of a life interest in certain property settled to her separate use, without any restraint upon anticipation, and that after writ issued, but before trial, her life interest was, by deed, resettled upon her for her separate use without power of anticipation. Judgment having been entered for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with a direction to the master to inquire as to the wife's separate estate and report to the court, and also with an injunction restraining the defendants from dealing with the separate estate until the debt was paid or the money paid into court:—Held, on appeal, that this judgment was wrong, that the proper order to make was one declaring that the plaintiff entitled to be paid the amount of the debt out of the estate (if any) to which the wife might be entitled for her separate use without restraint on her power of dealing therewith; judgment to be entered for the husband; and (the plaintiff having failed to show that the wife at the time of the trial was entitled to any separate estate with power of dealing therewith) no further order to be made, except that the judgment was to be without prejudice to such proceedings as the plaintiff might be advised to take in order to set aside the deed of resettlement. Barber v. Gregson, 49 L. J., Ex. 731; 43 L. T. 428—C. A.

Restraint on Anticipation — Duration of Restraint—Arrears of Income.]—The restraint on anticipation of a married woman's separate income ceases to attach to such income as soon as it becomes due and payable to her under the trusts of the instrument under which she is entitled. Hood Barrs v. Catheart, 63 L. J., Q. B. 602; [1894] 2 Q. B. 567; and Pillers v. Edwards (71 L. T. 788) overruled. Hood Barrs v. Heriot 65 L. J., Q. B. 352; [1896] A. C. 174; 74 L. T. 353; 44 W. R. 481; 60 J. P. 612—H. L. (E.)

Rents accruing after judgment of property subject to a restraint on anticipation cannot be taken in execution under a writ of sequestration, or by means of a receiver. Hood Barrs v. Catheart (supra) followed. Lumley, In re, Hood Barrs v. Catheart, 63 L. J., Ch. 897; [1894] 3 Ch. 135; 7 R. 400; 71 L. T. 7; 42 W. R. 633—C. A.

—— Execution Limited.] — Where, upon motion to enter final judgment against a married woman, she denied by affidavit having separate estate, save property settled on her marriage, with a restraint on anticipation, the court, in allowing judgment to be entered, limited execution to such separate property as she was not restrained from anticipating, unless such restraint existed under a settlement or agreement for a settlement of her own property made or entered into by herself. Form of Order. Nicholls v. Morgan, 16 L. R. Ir. 409. See now, as to Costs, col. 1307

Writ of Sequestration—Form.]—The general form of a writ of sequestration against "the estate and effects" of a married woman without any express limitation therein to separate property of the wife not subject to a restraint on anticipation is correct; but the writ can only operate on her separate property which is not so subject. Hyde v. Hyde, 57 L. J., P. 89; 13 P. D. 166; 59 L. T. 529; 36 W. R. 708—C. A.

Inquiry as to Property.]—A charge given by a married woman upon her separate estate is sufficient evidence of the existence of separate estate to entitle a plaintiff, with whom she has contracted, to an inquiry. London Alliance Discount Co. v. Kerr, 1 Cab. & E. 5.

Receiver—In what Cases—Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8.]—M., a married woman, by her next friend, applied to tax the bill of costs of her solicitor, incurred in a suit relating to her separate estate. After the taxing-master's certificate had been filed, an order was made on the application of the solicitor, directing an inquiry of what M.'s separate estate consisted at the date of the filing of the certificate capable of being reached by the judgment and execution of the court, and appointing a person to receive it until the amount found due on taxation was paid:—Held, that this order was proper, and that it was not necessary to take separate proceedings by action to enforce the demand against the separate estate. Peace and Waller, In re, 24 Ch. D. 405; 49 L. T. 637; 31 W. R. 899—C. A.

—— Who Appointed—Prior Charges.]—In an action against a married woman alleged to be possessed of separate estate, no defence being delivered, the master, by his report, found that she was entitled to separate estate vested in trustees, and subject to certain charges. The report being confirmed, the plaintiff was appointed receiver, without security, of the residue of the income of the separate estate, after payment of the prior charges, the plaintiff undertaking to act without commission. M'Garry v. White, 16 L. R. Ir. 322.

Garnishee Proceedings.]—A judgment for a debt against a married woman enforceable only against property to her separate use which she is not restrained from anticipating, is a "judgment" within the meaning of Ord. XLV. r. 1, which entitles the judgment creditor to institute garnishee proceedings, and to attach a debt owing or accruing to such married woman. Holtby v. Hodgson, 59 L. J., Q. B. 46; 24 Q. B. D. 103; 62 L. T. 145; 38 W. R. 68—C. A.

Actions on Judgments against Wife.]—Action against husband and wife on a judgment recovered against the wife dum sola. On producing the record, it appeared that the original action was against the wife and others:—Held, no variance, but, at the most, only a ground for a plea in abatement. Cocks v. Brewer, 2 D. (N.S.) 759; 11 M. & W. 51; 12 L. J. Ex. 225; 7 Jur. 218.

And see EXECUTION.

Order of Committal — Jurisdiction — Debtors Act, 1869, s. 5.]—Under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, there is no power to commit to prison a married woman for her default in paying a sum for which judgment has been recovered against her by virtue of s. 1, sub-s. 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Scott v. Morley, 57 L. J., Q. B. 43; 20 Q. B. D. 120; 57 L. T. 919; 36 W. R. 67; 4 Morrell, 286; 52 J. P. 230—C. A.

Judgment for a debt and costs was recovered against a married woman, execution being, by the terms of the judgment, limited to her separate property not subject to any restraint upon anticipation, unless by reason of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, such property should be liable to execution notwithstanding such restraint. Upon an application for an order of committal against her under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, the only evidence of her ability to pay was that since the date of the judgment she had received sufficient income of separate property subject to a restraint upon anticipation:—Held, that no order could be made against her upon that evidence, because s. 5 did not apply to the judgment. Draycott v. Harrison, 17 Q. B. D. 147; 34 W. R. 546.

An order under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 5, may be made upon a married woman. Dillon v. Cunningham, 42 L. J., Ex. 11; L. R. 8 Ex. 23; 27 L. T. 830.

Upon a judgment summons issued under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, against a married woman who has only separate estate which she is restrained from anticipating, an order for payment cannot be made unless it is shown that, since the date of the judgment, she has received some of her separate income. If in the judgment execution is limited to separate estate which she is not restrained from anticipating, quære, whether s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, applies at all. Dillon v. Cunningham (L. R. 8 Ex. 23) distinguished. Meager v. Pellew, 14 Q. B. D. 973; 53 L. T. 67; 33 W. R. 573—C. A.

An order, under the Debtors Act, for payment by instalments will not be made against a married woman whose only separate estate is subject to restraint on anticipation, even though, since the date of the judgment against her, she has received income of the separate estate. Morgan v. Eyre, 20 L. R. Ir. 541.

—— No separate Estate.] — A married woman without separate property cannot be imprisoned for non-payment of the costs of an action. Walter, In re, 55 J. P. 551.

Where to an action against husband and wife, on a judgment against the wife, they pleaded that she was covert when the action in which the judgment was recovered was commenced, and thence until the judgment, and that her husband was not a party to the judgment, or a defendant in the action:—Held, that the plea was bad, inasmuch as it contained matter which afforded ground for a writ of error, and could not be pleaded in bar to an action on the judgment. Dick v. Tolhausen, 4 H. & N. 695.

Section 141 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76 does not apply to the case of the marriage of a female defendant after judgment. Morris v. Coates, 3 W. R. 524.

If after interlocutory judgment against a feme upon a contract she marries; yet the plaintiff may proceed to judgment and execution against her, without joining the husband by scire facias, or now by suggestion or writ of revivor (see s. 141 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), and a ca. sa. against her following the judgment is, at all events, regular, though the plaintiff had notice of the marriage before. Cooper v. Hunchin, 4 East, 521; 1 Smith, 282.

Ejectment against a feme sole who married before trial, and verdict and judgment against her by her original name:—Held, that it was regular to issue an habere facias possessionem and fi. fa. against her by the same name, though the fi. fa. was inoperative. Doe d. Taggart v. Butcher, 3 M. & S. 557.

Setting aside Judgments in Actions against Married Woman.]—Judgment by default in an action against a married woman is irregular. Dobson v. Easton, 2 F. & F. 371.

The court set aside a judgment signed against a married woman (sued as a feme sole), but without costs, there being some doubt whether she had not, when she contracted the debt, held herself out as being unmarried. Wilson v. Hollings, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 783; 3 F. & F. 96; 5 L. T. 643.

A writ of summons against a woman, sued as a feme sole, specially indorsed, may be set aside before appearance, on an affidavit that she was married when the cause of action accrued, and that she believed, and had no reason to doubt, that her husband was alive (abroad) when the writ issued. Hiscock v. Hollings, 3 F. & F. 95.

A husband and wife having signed a joint and several promissory note, a writ was issued against them both, and judgment was signed in 1880 against both for default of appearance. Certain summonses and orders were afterwards served on the wife. She always handed all documents so served on her to her husband until November, 1881, and her affidavit showed that until that date she was ignorant of the nature of the proceedings. In November, 1881, the husband filed a liquidation petition. In February, 1882, a summons for committal was served on the wife. She instructed solicitors and opposed the summons, but an order was made. She then moved to set aside the original judgment:—Held, that, as the judgment, being a personal judgment against a married woman, was irregular and wrong, and as the plaintiff had not been prejudiced or misled, it ought to be set aside, notwithstanding the delay. Atwood v. Chichester (3 Q. B. D. 722) followed. Davis v. Ballenden, 46 L. T. 797—C. A.

e. Actions against Husband or Wife.

Parties to be Sued Generally.]—In an action for double the yearly value, under 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, the plaintiff, after stating a demise to the defendant's wife, and her subsequent intermarriage with the defendant, alleged in the first count a notice to quit and demand of possession delivered to the defendant and his wife, and in the second count alleged a notice to quit and demand of possession delivered to the wife previous to her intermarriage with the defendant:—Held, that, to support the second count, the husband need not be joined for conformity; and that, to sustain the action, it was not necessary to have given a notice to the husband subsequent to the intermarriage. Lake v. Smith, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 174.

In an action against a husband for goods sold to the wife dum sola, it is not competent to the judge at nisi prius to amend the record by making the female a co-defendant. Garrard v. Guibilei, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 832; 31 L. J., C. P. 270; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1077; 10 W. R. 565—Ex. Ch.

A feme covert, eloping from her husband, and incurring debt, cannot be sued alone. Hatchett v. Baddeley, 2 W. Bl. 1079.

A woman divorced à mensâ et thoro, and living apart from her husband upon a separate maintenance, is a feme covert, and cannot be sued as a feme sole. Lewis v. Lee, 5 D. & R. 98; 3 B. & C. 291; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 22.

A feme covert cannot contract and be sued as a feme sole, even though she is living apart from her husband, having a separate maintenance secured to her by deed. Marshall v. Rutton, 8 Term Rep. 545.

Husband and wife may be jointly sued in trespass for their joint act. Vine v. Saunders, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 96; 5 Scott, 359; 6 D. P. C. 233; 3 Hodges, 291; 7 L. J., C. P. 30; 2 Jur. 136.

The name of a defendant, who was also the next friend of the plaintiff, and whose wife was a defendant, was struck out, and liberty was given to the wife to defend separately. Lewis v. Nobbs, 47 L. J., Ch. 662; 8 Ch. D. 591; 26 W. R. 631.

When a wife is living apart from her husband she may, on an ex parte motion, obtain an order to defend separately. English v. Chute, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 338.

—— When Wife is a Sole Trader in City of London.]—A feme covert sole trader in the city of London is not liable to be sued as such in the courts at Westminster; and even in the city courts the husband should be joined for conformity. Beard v. Webb, 2 Bos. & P. 93.

—— Where Husband is abroad or a Foreigner.]—Though the husband is abroad, and has lived abroad many years, and the wife has been paid a weekly sum for her subsistence, and though she has appeared as a feme sole, and has contracted as such, if the husband is living at the time of the action, no action can be maintained against her. M'Namara v. Fisher, 3 Esp. 18.

Where the husband (a foreigner) resides abroad, and the wife trades and obtains credit in this country as a feme sole, she is liable for her own debts, but not unless she represents herself as a feme sole. De Gaillon v. L'Aigle, 1 Bos. & P. 357.

To a plea of coverture, the plaintiff replied that the defendant's husband lived and resided in parts beyond the seas, viz., in Ireland, and that the defendant lived in this kingdom separate and apart from her husband, as a single woman, and as such single woman promised, &c.:—Held, bad upon general demurrer, Farrar v. Granard (Countess), 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 80.

To a plea of coverture, the plaintiff replied that before the cause of action accrued the defendant's husband became bankrupt, absconded without appearing to his commission, and continued to reside in foreign parts; and that during all that time the defendant lived in this kingdom separate and apart from her husband, and carried on business as a sole trader; and that the plaintiff did not give credit to the husband, but dealt with the defendant as a feme sole; and that the defendant made the promises as such feme sole:—Held, that the replication was bad in substance, as it did not contain an averment that the promises were made during the absence of the husband. Williamson v. Dawes, 2 M. & Scott, 352; 9 Bing. 292; 2 L. J., C. P. 3.

An Englishman employed in the service of the British government, residing in a foreign country, and having lands there, upon the cessation of his employment, in consequence of war between the two countries, sent his wife and family to this country, but continued to reside abroad himself:—Held, that the wife, not having represented herself as a feme sole, was not liable to be sued as such. Marsh v. Hutchinson, 2 Bos. & P. 226.

The wife of a person who resides in Ireland, herself living in England, and having a separate maintenance under articles of separation, may be sued after the death of her husband for a debt contracted by her in England during his lifetime. Ringstead v. Lanesborough (Lady), 3 Dougl. 197.

To an action for goods sold and delivered the defendant pleaded her coverture. The plaintiff replied, that the husband was an alien, and never was within this kingdom; that the causes of action accrued to the plaintiff, and the promise was made by the defendant, within the realm of England, while she lived separate and apart from her husband as a single woman, and that the plaintiff did not give any credit to the husband, but contracted with her as a feme sole, on her own credit and responsibility, and that she made the promise as such feme sole. Rejoinder, that the husband was not an alien, nor did the causes of action accrue to the plaintiff, nor was the promise made by her, while she lived separate and apart from her husband as a single woman; nor did the plaintiff contract with the defendant as a feme sole, and on her own credit and responsibility, nor did she make the promise in the declaration mentioned; on which issue was joined:—Held, that on this issue the plaintiff was bound to prove that the defendant represented herself to the plaintiff as a feme sole, or that he dealt with her, believing her to be such:—Held, also, that evidence of the defendant's dealings with other tradesmen, to whom it was alleged she had held herself out as a single woman, was not admissible, unless her representations to them were so made as to come to the plaintiff's knowledge. Barden v. Keverberg, 2 M. & W. 61; 2 Gale, 201; 6 L. J., Ex. 66.

To a plea of coverture, a replication that the husband was an alien, not a subject of this country by naturalisation or otherwise, and at the time of the contract residing in France; that the defendant lived in this kingdom separate from her husband, and that the plaintiff gave no credit to her husband, but contracted with her as a feme sole, is ill. Stretton v. Busnach, 4 M. & Scott, 678; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 139; 3 L. J., C. P. 224.

—— Where Wife is an Alien.]—A woman, by birth an alien, cannot be sued as a feme sole, if her husband has lived with her in this country, although he has left her here and entered into the service of a foreign state. Kay v. De Pienne (Duchess), 3 Camp. 123.

—— Against Wife's Executors for Conversion.

of Property of Lunatic Husband.]—An action was brought by the representative of a deceased husband against the representatives of his deceased wife, and the statement of claim stated that the wife during the lifetime of the husband (who was a lunatic, though not so found by inquisition) took possession of and sold certain of the husband's chattels and applied the proceeds of sale to her own use, and claimed to recover the proceeds from the wife's estate in the hands of her executors:—Held, on demurrer, that the action was sustainable. Williams, In re, Williams v. Stratton, 50 L. J., Ch. 495; 44 L. T. 600.

Parties to Action to Charge—Husband and Trustees.]—A husband must be joined with his wife as a defendant in an action to charge wages and earnings which are her separate property under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870. Hancocks v. Lablache, 47 L. J., C. P. 514; 3 C. P. D. 197; 38 L. T. 753; 26 W. R. 402. And see Lillia v. Airey, 1 Ves. J. 278.

A woman married after allowing judgment to go by default in the action, the court added the husband as the co-defendant, but upon the understanding that he was to be liable only to the extent of the assets of the wife which should come to his hands. Torahan v. Lisgar, 2 L. R. Ir. 428.

A wife, having a separate estate without power of anticipation, is not liable to be sued personally in respect of a debt contracted during her coverture; and in order that a creditor may obtain payment out of her personal estate, he must join as defendants her husband and the trustees of her settlement. Atwood v. Chichester, 47 L. J., Q. B. 300; 3 Q. B. D. 722; 38 L. T. 48; 26 W. R. 320.

The trustees are not necessary parties to the action. Davies v. Jenkins, 6 Ch. D. 728; 26 W. R. 260; and Collett v. Dickinson, 11 Ch. D. 687; 40 L. T. 394.

The court will not on a motion for judgment under Ord. XL. r. 11, or admissions of fact, make a declaration, charging the separate estate of a married woman with the amount of debts contracted by her with reference to such estate, in the absence of the trustee of such estate, unless the trustee cannot be found. Collett v. Dickinson (11 Ch. D. 687) distinguished. Pike v. Fitz-Gibbon, 41 L. T. 148; 28 W. R. 667.

An action may be brought to enforce a charge given upon property coming to a married woman under a will without the trustees of the will being made parties, and in such an action the charge upon the property may be declared as against the married woman. Flower v. Buller, 49 L. J., Ch. 784; 15 Ch. D. 665; 43 L. T. 311; 28 W. R. 948.

Where A. enters into such a written agreement with B. alone for the purpose of giving B. a security for the repayment of money which the recitals show to have been in fact advanced by C. and D. jointly with B., C. and D. are entitled to sue on the agreement either directly or through B. as trustee for them. Ib.

2. Procedure, Pleadings, and Practice.

a. Claim.

See now Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. XVIII. r. 4; Ord. IX. r. 3.

On Money Counts.]—A summons and plaint against husband and wife containing the ordinary money counts, and omitting to state whether any of the causes of action had accrued before or after their marriage, are bad. Cuming v. Montgomery, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 170.

A declaration by husband and wife on an account stated must show that the accounting was concerning matters in which the wife had an interest. Johnson v. Lucas, 1 El. & Bl. 659; 22 L. J., Q. B. 174; 17 Jur. 1066.

A count for money lent to the wife at the request of the husband is good. Stephenson v. Hardy, 3 Wils. 388.

But a declaration against husband and wife, on the common money counts, one alleging that the husband was indebted for money lent to the wife at her request, is bad on writ of error. Stone v. Macnair, 1 Moore, 126; 7 Taunt. 432; 4 Price, 48.

Other Cases.]—If a declaration against husband and wife, for a debt of the wife contracted before marriage, alleges a promise by her made after the marriage to pay the debt, it is bad. Morris v. Norfolk, 1 Taunt. 212.

In an action on a bond, conditioned for the payment of a separate maintenance to the obligor's wife, the declaration alleged that certain sums became due and owing from the defendant to the plaintiff; judgment was arrested, because the breach should have alleged the money to be due to the wife. Lunn v. Payne, 1 Marsh, 495; 6 Taunt. 140.

In trover against husband and wife, the declaration stated a conversion by both:—Held, sufficient after verdict. Keyworth v. Hill, 3 B. & Ald. 685.

In an action on a covenant by the husband of the tenant in fee, he must declare on a seisin in fee in himself and his wife, in right of his wife. Polyblank v. Hawkins, 1 Dougl. 329.

b. Defence.

Coverture.]—Coverture of the defendant is an issuable plea to an action on a contract. Burch v. Leake, 7 Man. & G. 377; 2 D. & L. 88; 8 Scott (N.R.) 66; 8 Jur. 474.

In an action on a promissory note, to which the defendant pleads her coverture only, she has the right to begin, although the plaintiff seeks to recover interest upon the note which is not made payable upon the face of the instrument. Cannan v. Farmer, 3 Ex. 698; 2 Car. & K. 746.

Under a plea of coverture, where it appeared that the defendant's husband went abroad twelve years before:—Held, that she was bound to prove that he was alive within seven years. Hopewell v. De Pinna, 2 Camp. 113.

To an action on a note a plea in bar, that, when the note was made the plaintiff was the wife of G., and that the consideration was G.'s money, advanced by the plaintiff without G.'s knowledge, and that the plaintiff received and held the note without G.'s authority, and never had any property in or right to the note, is an informal plea of coverture, and bad for not being pleaded in abatement. Guyard v. Sutton, 3 C. B. 153; 15 L. J., C. P. 225; 10 Jur. 459.

To an avowry for rent in arrear, the plaintiff pleaded in bar, that before and at the time of the demise, and when the rent became due, she was married to C.:—Held, that whether it was to be presumed that the coverture continued up to the time when the distress was taken, or not, the plea was no answer to the avowry. Clarke v. Davies, 2 Marsh. 386; 7 Taunt. 72.

Action for goods sold. Plea, coverture; replication, that, at the time when the debt was contracted, the defendant was living apart from her husband, in a state of adultery; that the plaintiff, without knowledge of these circumstances, dealt with her as a feme sole, and that after her husband's death, in consideration of the premises, she promised:—Held, to be a departure from the declaration. Meyor v. Haworth, 8 A. & E. 467; 3 N. & P. 462; 1 W. W. & H. 456; 7 L. J., Q. B. 211; 2 Jur. 467.

On a plea in bar by a married woman of her coverture, and a verdict in her favour thereupon, she is entitled to costs. Findley v. Farquharson, 3 C. B. 347; 4 D. & L. 185; 15 L. J., C. P 262.

It is no defence to an ejectment that the defendant is the wife of one of the plaintiffs. Doe d. Daley v. Daley, 8 Q. B. 934; 15 L. J., Q. B. 295; 10 Jur. 691.

A statement by way of defence, that the plaintiff at the time of bringing the action was a married woman, is no defence, and may be demurred to. Abouloff v. Oppenheimer, 30 W. R. 429.

In an action for wrongfully discharging the plaintiff and his wife from the service of the defendant into which they had entered as dyers, the defendant pleaded in justification, that the wife of the plaintiff "obstinately refused to work for the defendant in the capacity agreed on":—Held bad, on general demurrer. Jacquot v. Boura, 7 D. P. C. 348; 3 Jur. 776.

—— Indictment.]—On an indictment for highway robbery with violence D. and his wife were found guilty, the jury finding as to the wife that she had acted under the compulsion of her husband:—Held, that as to the wife the verdict amounted to one of not guilty. Reg. v. Dykes, 15 Cox, C. C. 771.

Separate Defence—Special Leave.]—A married woman cannot appear or defend separately from her husband without first obtaining special leave under Rules of Court, 1875, r. 8 of Ord. XVI. An order for leave obtained upon a petition of course is irregular. Noel v. Noel, 13 Ch. D. 510; 28 W. R. 720.

Statute of Limitations—Promissory Note.]—A declaration against husband and wife, upon a joint and several promissory note made by the wife, before coverture, and A., alleged a promise by the wife, dum sola. The defendants pleaded the Statute of Limitations. The declaration was amended by inserting an allegation of a subsequent promise by the husband. The plaintiff proved a payment of interest within six years, made by the wife after marriage, with money sent by A., but without the privity or subsequent ratification of the husband:—Held, that such payment raised no promise, either by the husband or the wife, so as to take the case out of the statute of limitations; inasmuch as, the wife being incapable of making any promise in law, express or implied, payment by her or the other joint maker of the note, could create no promise on her part, and as such payment was not made by the husband, nor for any consideration affecting him, nor with his sanction, it raised no implied promise on his part. Neve v. Hollands, 18 Q. B. 262; 21 L. J., Q. B. 289; 16 Jur. 933.

If the payment had been by the husband, or with his sanction, the declaration, as amended, would have been bad in arrest of judgment, as the wife would then have been improperly joined in the action. Ib.

Action on a promissory note by payee against maker. Plea, the statute of limitations. Replication, that, when the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff, she was a feme covert, the wife of B., and so remained until his death, when she became discovert; and that the action was commenced within six years after his death. Rejoinder, that the note was payable to the order of the plaintiff; that after it was made, and before it became payable, B., then her husband, authorised her to indorse in her own name and deliver, and that she did by such authority indorse and deliver the note to F. for value by him paid; that when the note became due, it was in the hands of G., holder and indorsee thereof, and entitled to sue thereon, who then presented it for payment, and the note came into the plaintiff's possession from G. by delivery, he being such holder and indorsee and entitled to sue thereon:—Held ill; because, first, if it intended to allege that the note was satisfied when it came to the plaintiff's hands, and that she had no cause of action, it was a departure from the plea; and, secondly, because it was no answer to the replication, as it contained no denial of the death of B. within six years of the commencement of the suit. Scarpellini v. Atcheson, 7 Q. B. 864; 14 L. J., Q. B. 333; 9 Jur. 827.

Plea in Abatement.]—To a declaration for work and labour against several defendants, charging the promise to have been made by them generally, they pleaded in abatement the non-joinder of two others. The court refused to arrest the judgment, on the ground that one was a feme covert, sued jointly with her husband, and the declaration did not state that the promise was made by her before the marriage, the ambiguity in the declaration being aided by the plea. France v. White, 1 Scott (N.R.) 604; 1 Man. & G. 731; 9 L. J., C. P. 337; 4 Jur. 746.

To an action against a sheriff for the escape of a debtor taken in execution under a ca. sa. on a judgment, the defendant pleaded in bar, that at and from the time of the accruing of the debt on which the judgment was recovered, and until the time of the arrest and escape, and hitherto, the plaintiff was and is married to H. S., who is still living:—Held, bad, as being properly pleaded in abatement only. Morgan v. Cubitt, 3 Ex. 612; 6 D. & L. 444; 18 L. J., Ex. 288.

The coverture of the plaintiff cannot be pleaded in bar to an action on a covenant for an annuity granted to her during marriage, but is matter of abatement only. Bendix v. Wakeman, 1 D. & L. 450; 12 M. & W. 97; 13 L. J., Ex. 15.

—— 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 141.]—If a plaintiff took a husband after suing out the writ, and before declaration, the defendant must have pleaded the coverture in abatement. Morgan v. Painter, 6 Term Rep. 265.

Counter-claim.]—To an action by executors for the purpose of charging a wife's separate estate with a debt to their testator contracted on the faith of such separate estate, the husband, who had been made a defendant, and his wife raised a counter-claim for money belonging to the wife, not part of her separate estate, and for certain chattels in the possession of the testator at his death, which it was alleged were the property of the husband:—Held, that the claim to the chattels and money was a proper subject of counter-claim. Hodson v. Mochi, 47 L. J., Ch. 604; 8 Ch. D. 569; 38 L. T. 635; 26 W. R. 590.

Replication to Defence of Coverture.]—In an action against a married woman she pleaded coverture. The reply set out that, until after action brought, the plaintiff was not aware of the coverture; that the defendant obtained credit by representing herself to be entitled to an annuity; and that the plaintiff had since discovered that under a separation deed she was entitled to an annuity:—Held, that the reply did not raise a new ground of claim, or contain an allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleading, within Ord. XIX. r. 19. Collett v. Dickinson, 26 W. R. 403.

Costs.]—A wife being a defendant in a probate action, having separate estate with restraint on anticipation, may be condemned in costs, although her husband has been joined as a co-defendant. Morris v. Freeman, 47 L. J., P. 79; 3 P. D. 65; 39 L. T. 125; 27 W. R. 62. See col. 1303.

Costs Paid to Husband in prior Action against him.] — In an action in the queen's bench division against a husband and wife jointly for a debt contracted by the wife before marriage, costs of defence were recovered by the husband under the Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 50), s. 3, and were paid to him by the plaintiff. In a subsequent action (commenced by the plaintiff in the chancery division for the purpose of enforcing the judgment obtained by him in the first action against the wife) the same costs were ordered to be repaid to the plaintiff out of the wife's separate estate. London and Provincial Bank v. Bogle, 47 L. J., Ch. 301; 7 Ch. D. 773; 37 L. T. 780; 26 W. R. 573.

Discovery—Affidavit of Documents—Husband and Wife.]—A husband and wife sued as co-plaintiffs in respect of an alleged breach of trust by the trustees of their marriage settlement. The wife had a life estate for her separate use, and sued without a next friend. An order was made that the plaintiffs should file an affidavit stating "whether they or either of them" had in the possession or power "of them or either of them," any documents relating to the matters in question. They filed an affidavit admitting the possession of various documents, which they scheduled, and going on to say, "We have not now, and never had in our possession, custody, or power, or in the possession, custody, or power of any other person or persons on our behalf, any deed, &c., other than and except the documents set forth in the said schedule":—Held, that the plaintiffs must be ordered to file a further and better affidavit, for that an affidavit relating only to documents in the joint custody of the husband and wife did not comply with the order, and that the order was right in requiring them to answer as to documents in the possession of either of them. Fendall v. O'Connell, 54 L. J., Ch. 756; 29 Ch. D. 899; 52 L. T. 553; 33 W. R. 619—C. A.

c. Other Points of Practice.

Joinder of Claims.]—See Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. XVIII. r. 4.

The 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76 (C. L. P. Act of 1852), s. 40, is permissive only, not imperative. Brockbank v. Whitehaven Junction Ry., 7 H. & N. 834; 31 L. J., Ex. 349.

A count for breaking and entering the premises of the husband may be joined with a count by the husband and wife for assaulting and imprisoning the wife. Morris v. Moore, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 359.

Before 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 40, in an action by husband and wife for slanderous words, actionable in themselves, spoken of the wife, they could not recover for special damage the loss sustained by reason of a party having refused to employ the wife as a servant; the action lay only in the name of the husband. Dengate v. Gardiner, 4 M. & W. 5; 7 L. J., Ex. 201; 2 Jur. 470.

—— For Injuries to Wife.] — The claims which a husband may add in his own right are not limited to claims arising consequentially from the injury to the wife. Hemstead v. Phœnix Gas Light and Coke Co., 3 H. & C. 745; 34 L. J., Ex. 108; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 626; 12 L. T. 313; 13 W. R. 662.

Two actions were brought for injuries caused by the negligent explosion of gas pipes. In the one action a husband and wife claimed damages for her personal injuries (the husband also claiming consequential damages); in the other, the husband claimed for injuries to his house, goods and fixtures, for loss of profits, and personal injuries; a judge's order having been made to consolidate these actions, the court refused to rescind it. Ib.

An action by a husband for an injury done to himself, may be consolidated with a separate action by him and wife for an injury done to the wife at the same time and place. Morley v. Midland Ry., 3 F. & F. 961.

A declaration in an action by husband and wife alleged that the defendant, in the course of his business, professed to sell a chemical compound made of ingredients known only to him, and by him represented to be fit to be used for hair wash, without causing injury to a person using it, and to have been carefully compounded by him; that the wife thereupon bought of him a bottle of this hair wash to be used by her, as the defendant knew, and on the terms that it could be safely so used and had been carefully compounded. Breach, that the defendant so negligently and unskilfully conducted himself in preparing and selling the hair wash, that by reason thereof it was unfit to be used for washing the hair, whereby she, the wife, who had used it for that purpose, was injured:—Held, that the declaration disclosed a good cause of action. George v. Skivington, 39 L. J., Ex. 8; L. R. 5 Ex. 1; 21 L. T. 495; 18 W. R. 118.

Misjoinder of Claims.]—A misjoinder of action against husband and wife may be taken advantage of on general demurrer. May v. House, 2 Chit. 697.

A married woman administratrix filed a bill by her next friend against an accounting party to the estate of the intestate, making her husband a co-defendant:—Held, that the other defendant might have demurred; but as no objection was made till the hearing, the court allowed the bill to be amended, making the husband and wife co-plaintiffs. Burdick v. Garrick, 39 L. J., Ch. 369 ; L. R. 5 Ch. 233 ; 18 W. R. 387.

Staying Proceedings.]—Where an action by a next friend on behalf of a married woman has been dismissed with costs for want of prosecution, a second action on her behalf by a new next friend, against the same defendants and brought with the same object, will be stayed until the defendants' costs of the first action have been paid. Payne, In re, Randle v. Payne, 52 L. J., Ch. 544 ; 23 Ch. D. 288 ; 48 L. T. 194 ; 31 W. R. 509—C. A.

—— Until Husband made Co-plaintiff.]—The plaintiff, who was a married woman, brought an action in her own name to inforce a judgment obtained in a foreign court. One ground of defence was that the judgment was obtained by the fraud of the plaintiff in collusion with her husband. The defendant took out a summons to stay all proceedings in the action until the husband was added as a plaintiff, and the judge at chambers refused to make an order :—Held, by Manisty, J., that the application ought not to be granted, the court not having power to deprive a married woman of her right to bring an action by her next friend, who need not be her husband ; and even if the court had power the defendant had come too late :—Held, by Stephen, J., that the defendant was entitled to the order under Ord. XVI. r. 8, the former practice in the court of chancery being to make the husband a co-plaintiff in such a case, even though the plaintiff brought the action by her next friend. Abouloff v. Oppenheimer, 52 L. J., Q. B. 309 ; 47 L. T. 702.

Liability to be taken in Execution.]—The cases on this subject are now omitted having regard to the Debtors Act, 1869.

Service.]—See now Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. IX. r. 3.

Relief Claimed against Separate Estate.]—Plaintiff seeking relief not only against husband but against wife's separate estate, must serve the wife. Jones v. Harris, 9 Ves. 486.

Where a suit relates to a wife's separate estate, she, as well as her husband, must be served with a copy of the bill. Salmon v. Green, 8 Beav. 457.

Where husband and wife are defendants, and the suit does not relate to separate estate, service of a copy of the bill on the husband alone, under the 23rd General Order of August, 1841, is good service. Kent v. Jacobs, 5 Beav. 48 ; 11 L. J. Ch. 380. And see Bailey v. Threlfall, 9 Jur. 202.

Service on wife of defendant at his house, sufficient. Barlow v. Baker, Cary, 54.

Service on the defendant's wife ordered to be deemed personal service on the defendant, and upon that service, ordered that he stand committed for breach of injunction. Pulteney v. Shelton, 5 Ves. 147.

On a claim for foreclosure, service of the writ of summons on the wife of a party interested in the equity of redemption, who was travelling in America, was ordered to be deemed good service on the husband under the stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 42, the wife being in the possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property. Carwardine v. Wishlade, 15 Jur. 913.

Service on husband or others of family, decreed good service on wife. Clark v. Greenhill, Dick. 91.

Subpœna.]—Service of subpœna on wife, good. Pilgrime v. Read, Cary, 78.

Service of subpœna on a husband, a prisoner for debt in the queen's prison :—Held, to be good service on the wife. Holcombe v. Trotter, 9 Jur. 637.

Service of a subpœna to appear and answer, upon the wife of the defendant, who was out of the jurisdiction, but who had given her a power of attorney to transfer certain funds (not in dispute), and who was supposed to have a special power to act in the suit, she having by her solicitor made an offer to compromise, ordered to be good service. Bromley v. Bank of England, 7 Jur. 120.

3. COSTS.

Next Friend—Liability for Costs.]—A next friend, as long as he remains upon the record as next friend, must be taken to be carrying on the proceedings on behalf of the plaintiff, and is liable for the costs of an appeal, even though the notice of appeal did not purport to be given by him. Glanvill, In re, Ellis v. Johnson, 55 L. J., Ch. 325 ; 31 Ch. D. 532 ; 54 L. T. 411 ; 34 W. R. 309 ; 50 J. P. 662—C. A. See col. 1279.

—— None—Liability of Solicitor for Costs.]—When motion is made on behalf of married woman, and no person is named in notice as her next friend, her solicitor will be responsible for costs if awarded against her. Cox v. M'Namara, 1 Hog. 78.

—— Security for Costs.]—A married woman by her next friend took out an originating summons for an administration of a testator's estate, upon which an order was made without prejudice to any application by the defendants as to security for costs. The defendants applied, and, on the ground that the next friend was not a person of substance, an order was made staying proceedings till the plaintiff had given security for costs. The plaintiff appealed on the ground that a married woman could not be ordered to find security for costs :—Held, that, although a married woman suing alone cannot be ordered to find security for costs on the ground of poverty, security had rightly been ordered in the present case, since the next friend alone was liable for them, and that the plaintiff after obtaining a judgment by her next friend was too late to claim to sue alone. Thompson, In re, Stevens v. Thompson, 57 L. J., Ch. 748 ; 38 Ch. D. 317 ; 59 L. T. 427—C. A. See cols. 1277, 1284.

—— Scandalous and Irrelevant Allegations.]—In an action by a wife against her husband for a rectification of the marriage settlement, an allegation in the statement of claim that the plaintiff had refused to live with the defendant because of his having committed a criminal assault upon a young girl was ordered to be struck out as being scandalous and irrelevant, and the costs of the application to strike out were ordered to be paid by the wife's next friend in the action. Coyle v. Cumming, 40 L. T. 455 ; 27 W. R. 529.

Action by Executrix and Husband—Liquidation.]—A married woman, before the Married

Women's Property Act, 1882, brought an action as executrix, and her husband was joined as co-plaintiff. While the action stood for trial the husband filed a petition for liquidation, and obtained his discharge. The action was subsequently dismissed with costs on default of appearance by the plaintiffs:—Held, that the husband was not exonerated by his discharge in the liquidation from his liability to have judgment given against him with costs, as the action was not rendered defective by his going into liquidation. Vint v. Hudspeth, 54 L. J., Ch. 844; 30 Ch. D. 24; 52 L. T. 744; 33 W. R. 738—C. A.

Husband and Wife Co-Plaintiffs or Co-Petitioners.]—In a proceeding in which a married woman and her husband are co-plaintiffs or co-petitioners, a sequestration cannot issue for costs against her separate estate. Semble, it is otherwise if she sues by her next friend. Keogh v. Catheart, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 215.

Security for Costs.]—The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, enables a married woman to bring an action in her own name without giving security for costs, and although the cause of action arose before the act came into operation. Severance v. Civil Service Supply Association, 48 L. T. 485.

A married woman, suing alone, and having no separate estate, will not be ordered to give security for costs. Isaac, In re, Jacob v. Isaac, 51 L. J., Ch. 1136; 30 Ch. D. 418; 53 L. T. 478; 33 W. R. 845—C. A.

Married women suing as plaintiffs without their husbands being joined:—Held, since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), not liable to give security for costs. Threlfall v. Wilson, 8 P. D. 18; 48 L. T. 238; 31 W. R. 508; 47 J. P. 279.

—— Appeal.]—Where a married woman, whose only separate property was subject to a restraint on anticipation, appealed without a next friend, she was ordered to give security for the costs of the appeal. Kershaw, In re, Whittaker v. Kershaw, 44 Ch. D. 296; 62 L. T. 776; 38 W. R. 497—C. A.

—— Suing by Next Friend—Next Friend Insolvent.]—A married woman who had brought an administration action by her next friend, in which an order had been made directing certain inquiries, was, on evidence that her next friend was a person of no means, directed to give security for costs. Thompson, In re, Stevens v. Thompson, 57 L. J., Ch. 748; 38 Ch. D. 317; 59 L. T. 427—C. A.

Separate Estate—Liability of—General principle.]—The separate property of a wife in the hands of the court is liable to the costs of a suit instituted by her touching that property. Barlee v. Barlee, 1 Hog. 100.

—— Wife Living apart from Husband.]—Where a married woman having separate estate, and living apart from her husband, employed a solicitor in various transactions, and promised by letters to pay him, but without referring to her separate estate; it was held that her separate estate was liable to the payment of the solicitor's bill of costs. Semble, that the separate estate of a feme covert is liable in equity to her general engagements, as well upon an implied undertaking as by a written obligation. Murray v. Barlee, 3 Myl. & K. 209; 3 L. J., Ch. 184. And see 4 Sim. 82; 9 L. J. (O.S) Ch. 87.

—— "Party Chargeable"—Married Woman—Solicitors Act, 1843.]—Where a married woman employs a solicitor, and makes her separate estate liable, she is, though not personally liable, a "party chargeable," within the meaning of s. 37, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. Waugh v. Waddell, 16 Beav. 521.

Pending a reference for the taxation of a solicitor's bill against a married woman, the solicitor cannot maintain a suit to enforce a lien for his bill of costs on her separate estate. Ib.

—— Separate Property not Involved—Wife Co-Plaintiff.]—The separate property of a feme covert, who was a co-plaintiff, is not liable to pay the costs of bill which was dismissed, unless her separate property was the subject matter of the suit. Hogan v. Morgan, 1 Hog. 250.

The circumstance that the solicitor of a husband and wife has transacted business relating to the separate estate of the wife is not sufficient to make that estate directly liable for the amount of his bill of costs. Callow v. Howle, 1 De G. & Sm. 531; 17 L. J., Ch. 71; 11 Jur. 984.

A married woman, having separate estate, directed a solicitor, in writing, to take proceedings for her and her children in certain suits in chancery. The suits did not, however, in any way relate to her; she was no party thereto, but her children only were made parties by their next friend:—Held, that her separate estate was not liable for the costs. Pugh, In re, 17 Beav. 336; 23 L. J., Ch. 132.

—— Settlement on Female Ward—Husband's Costs.]—The husband's costs of making a settlement on a female ward, who had been married without consent, were allowed; he having no property, and there being no circumstances of aggravated misconduct on his part. Anon., 4 Russ. 473; 28 R. R. 155.

—— Suit by Married Woman by Next Friend.]—On a bill filed by a married woman by her next friend part of it was dismissed with costs. The court ordered a sum of money, recovered in the suit by the married woman, to be applied in payment of such costs. Leach v. Way, 5 L. J. Ch. 100.

—— Probate Action.]—A wife being a defendant in a probate action, having separate estate with restraint on anticipation, may be condemned in costs although her husband has been joined as a co-defendant. Morris v. Freeman, 47 L. J., P. 79; 3 P. D. 65; 39 L. T. 125; 27 W. R. 62.

—— Mortgages of Wife's Property—Order for Costs.]—A deed had appointed a sum to a married woman, for her separate use. She and her husband had appeared in a proceeding in the court of chancery on a petition for the distribution of the fund subject to the power. The court decided against them, and made an order for the payment of costs. The money specially belonging to the wife was by her mortgaged. The mortgagees and the husband and wife appeared together on the petition, and an order for payment of costs was made against them:—Held, that this was not an order against the wife's money as such, but against the money to which the mortgagees were entitled, and that the order as to costs was properly made. Newton v. Ricketts, 9 H. L. Cas. 262 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 247 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 952 ; 5 L. T. 62.

—— Retainer to Act for part of Separate Property.]—A retainer by a married woman to a solicitor to act in respect to one portion of her separate estate operates as a charge upon all property settled to her separate use, and is not confined to the particular property upon which the solicitor is called upon to act. Bolden v. Nicholay, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 884.

Ante-Nuptial Debt—Husband's Costs of Defence.]—In an action in the queen's bench division against a husband and wife jointly for a debt contracted by the wife before marriage, costs of defence were recovered by the husband under the Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment Act 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 50), s. 3, and were paid to him by the plaintiff. In a subsequent action (commenced by the plaintiff in the chancery division for the purpose of enforcing the judgment obtained by him in the first action against the wife) the same costs were ordered to be repaid to the plaintiff out of the wife's separate estate. London and Provincial Bank v. Bogle, 47 L. J., Ch. 301 ; 7 Ch. D. 773 ; 37 L. T. 780 ; 26 W. R. 573.

Bill to Foreclose Mortgage.]—Bill to foreclose a mortgage vested in trustees for the separate use of a feme covert. The husband, who was made a defendant, is entitled to his costs out of the fund. Dillon v. M'Carthy, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 192.

Annuity vested in Trustee of Separation Deed —Charge on.]—An action was brought against a married woman for a debt contracted with a creditor who believed her to be a feme sole. She pleaded coverture, and the husband was then made a party. It was alleged that she had separate estate. At the trial it was declared that her separate estate was chargeable with payment of the debt and costs, and an inquiry was directed to ascertain of what her separate estate consisted and in whom it was vested. In answer to the inquiry the master certified that the separate property consisted of an annuity, secured by the covenant of the husband contained in a separation deed and vested in a trustee. On a summons by the plaintiff to show cause why he should not be at liberty to sign judgment, the trustee not being a party :—Held, that the court could only make an order declaring the debt (with interest) and the taxed costs of the plaintiff, to be a charge upon the annuity, but without prejudice to any claim by the trustee. Collett v. Dickenson, 11 Ch. D. 687 ; 40 L. T. 394.

Enforcing — Sequestration.] — Sequestration may be awarded against the separate estate of a married woman for costs given against her. Keogh v. Cathcart, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 280.

—— Receiver.]—Where a bill filed by a husband and wife to foreclose a mortgage, the separate property of the wife, was dismissed with costs, the court, upon petition under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, refused to appoint a receiver over certain other property, to which the wife was entitled to her sole and separate use. Hackett v. Farrell Fl. & K. 549.

—— Summons for Taxation—Receiver.]—M., a married woman, by her next friend, applied to tax the bill of costs of her solicitor, incurred in a suit relating to her separate estate. After the taxing master's certificate had been filed, an order was made on the application of the solicitor, directing an inquiry of what M.'s separate estate consisted at the date of the filing of the certificate capable of being reached by the judgment and execution of the court, and appointing a person to receive it until the amount found due on taxation :—Held, that this order was proper, and that it was not necessary to take separate proceedings by action to enforce the demand against the separate estate. Peace and Waller, In re, 24 Ch. D. 405 ; 31 W. R. 899.

—— Committal for Non-Payment—No Separate Estate.]—A married woman without separate property cannot be imprisoned for non-payment of the costs of an action. Walter, In re, 55 J. P. 551.

Restraint on Anticipation.] — The separate fund of a married woman protected against costs, on the ground, that, under the instrument through which she derived title, she was restrained from anticipation. Moore v. Moore, 1 Coll. 54 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 124 ; 8 Jur. 139. But see now col. 1307.

—— Costs of Proceedings improperly Instituted — Retainer by Trustees.] — A married woman who, under a will, was entitled to income for her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation, instituted (without a next friend) against the trustees proceedings, in the course of which she took out a summons which was refused :—Held, that the restraint on anticipation did not prevent the court from giving the trustees liberty to retain their costs of the proceedings out of the married woman's income. Andrews, In re, Edwards v. Dewar, 54 L. J., Ch. 1049 ; 30 Ch. D. 159 ; 53 L. T. 422 ; 34 W. R. 62. See next case.

A married woman by her next friend, having brought in 1882 an action for administration of a trust fund, to the income of which she was entitled for her separate use without power of anticipation, the court, on further consideration in 1884, held the action to have been unnecessary and improper, and the next friend was ordered to pay the defendants' costs. The defendants being unable to find the next friend, an order was made giving the trustees liberty to retain the costs out of the income of the trust fund already due and to become due to the married woman :—Held, on appeal, that no such order could be made, for that the court has no jurisdiction to disregard the restraint on anticipation on the ground that it appeared to the court to be just to do so ; and that no income which did not accrue due till after the action on which the claim against the separate estate depended, viz., the improper institution of the suit, could be attached to meet the costs. Glanvill, In re, Ellis v. Johnson, 55 L. J., Ch. 325 ; 31 Ch. D. 532 ; 54 L. T. 411 ; 34 W. R. 309 ; 50 J. P. 662—C. A.

Whether, if the plaintiff had been suing under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, without a next friend, the order could have been supported, quære. Andrews, In re (30 Ch. D. 159) observed upon. Ib.

Married Women's Property Act, 1893.]—The Married Women's Property Act, 1893, s. 2, gives the court jurisdiction in any action or proceeding instituted by a married woman or by a next friend on her behalf to order payment of the costs of the opposite party out of property which is subject to a restraint on anticipation.

—— "Proceeding Instituted" by—Appeal—Liability for Costs.]—An appeal by a married woman from an order made in an action brought against her is not an "action or proceeding instituted" by her within the meaning of s. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, so as to make her separate property, which is subject to a restraint on anticipation, answerable for the costs of such appeal. The only proceeding contemplated by the legislature is one which initiates litigation. Hood Barrs v. Heriot, 66 L. J., Q. B. 356; [1897] A. C. 177; 76 L. T. 299; 45 W. R. 507—H. L. (E.). And see Paget v. Paget, 67 L. J., Ch. 266; [1898] 1 Ch. 470—C. A.

—— Counterclaim.]—A counterclaim is a "proceeding instituted" by a married woman within the meaning of s. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893; she may, therefore, be ordered to pay the costs incurred thereby by the opposite party out of property which is subject to a restraint on anticipation. An order to pay costs out of separate estate subject to a restraint on anticipation may be made at a date subsequent to the judgment or order dismissing the action or proceeding instituted by a married woman. Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, 64 L. J., Q. B. 520; [1895] 1 Q. B. 873; 15 R. 331; 72 L. T. 427; 43 W. R. 560.

—— Restraint on Anticipation — Pending Action.]—The court can, under s. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, remove a restraint on anticipation for the purpose of enabling a married woman to pay the costs in an action instituted by her, and in which she has failed, where such action was pending at the date of the passing of the act. Godfrey, In re, Thorne, George v. Godfrey, 63 L. J., Ch. 854; 13 R. 36; 71 L. T. 86, 568. Affirmed, 72 L. T. 8; 43 W. R. 244—C. A.

—— Order made before Act of 1893—Power to Vary or make New Order.]—Section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, which enables the court in certain circumstances to order and enforce payment of costs out of property subject to a restraint on anticipation, does not give jurisdiction to alter or vary an order for payment of costs made before the act came into operation, or to make a new order for payment of the same costs. Lumley, In re, Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, 63 L. J., Ch. 897; [1894] 3 Ch. 135; 71 L. T. 7; 42 W. R. 633. And see Lowry v. Derham, [1895] 2 Ir. R. 123—C. A.

—— Probate Action—Entrance of "Caveat"—Property Subject to Restraint on Anticipation.]—An action for the probate of a will is commenced by the issue of the writ in the action, and not by the entering of a caveat in respect of the will, or the appearance of the caveator in answer to the warning of the caveat. Consequently, where a married woman enters a caveat in respect of a will, the result of which is that a probate action is brought to which she is made a defendant, the action is not instituted by her within the meaning of s. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, so as to enable the court to order payment of the costs of the plaintiff out of property to which she is entitled subject to a restraint on anticipation. Moran v. Place, 65 L. J., P. 83; [1896] P. 214; 74 L. T. 661; 44 W. R. 593—C. A.

—— Form of Order—Dismissed Action—Restraint on Anticipation.]—When an action brought by a married woman since the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, is dismissed with costs, the form of order is the form in use before the act (see Seton, 5th edit. p. 749, form 1), with the addition of the words "with liberty to apply for payment out of any property which is subject to a restraint on anticipation." Davies v. Treharris Brewery Co., 13 R. 219.

4. Ne Exeat Regno.

Proceedings between Husband and Wife.]—Ne exeat granted against husband in aid of proceeding instituted against him by wife in ecclesiastical court. Smithson's Case, 2 Vent. 345.

Ne exeat granted to prevent husband from avoiding payment of alimony. Whitmore, Ex parte, Dick. 143.

There is no instance of a ne exeat regno being granted, where it is not a mere equitable demand, except where a wife sued in the spiritual court for alimony, and the husband threatened to leave the kingdom, and to aid that court, and out of compassion to her, it was granted. Anon., 2 Atk. 210.

Ne exeat regno will be granted in case of alimony decreed by spiritual court. Pearne v. Lisle, Ambl. 76.

Ne exeat granted in cases of alimony, but only for sums actually due, and costs. Shaftoe v. Shaftoe, 7 Ves. 171. S. P., Dawson v. Dawson, id. 173. S. P., Oldham v. Oldham, id. 410.

Upon a suit in ecclesiastical court by wife for alimony; quære, whether before the decree, court will not grant writ of ne exeat regno against her husband. Coglar v. Coglar, 1 Ves. J. 94.

The writ of ne exeat regno does not issue for alimony after a decree in the ecclesiastical court pending an appeal from that decree. Street v. Street, T. & R. 322.

The writ of ne exeat regno is not granted for interim alimony before a decree. Id. 323.

The writ of ne exeat regno is in the nature of equitable bail; therefore in the case of alimony marked only for the arrears actually due, and not carried further by analogy to the case of a judge holding to bail for uncertain damages upon a personal tort. Haffey v. Haffey, 14 Ves. 261.

Semble, the court will not interfere either to compel or to restrain the payment of alimony, as such, except so far as to grant a writ of ne exeat against the husband. Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 5 Myl. & C. 229; 8 Sim. 315; 7 L. J., Ch. 270; 2 Jur. 738; 3 id. 1116.

When the husband, in order to avoid a sentence of the ecclesiastical court for maintenance, is going out of the kingdom, this court on a bill filed by the wife will grant a ne exeat regno. Head v. Head, 3 Atk. 295.

1. ADMINISTRATION AND GOVERNMENT.

Effect of Annexation of Provinces.] — The plaintiffs, who represented certain creditors of the king of Oude in respect of a debt contracted in 1794, sued the secretary of state for India, claiming to be entitled to a charge upon the revenue of the territory of Oude:—Held, that as the debt was one which there were no means of enforcing against the king of Oude before the annexation in 1856, neither could it have been enforced after the annexation against the East India Company. Doss v. Secretary of State for India, L. R. 19 Eq. 509; 32 L. T. 294; 23 W. R. 773.

Held, also, that the annexation of Oude having been a sovereign act of state by the East India Company as trustees for the British government, that act could not be reviewed by any municipal court, and the bill was therefore not sustainable. Ib.

Held, also, that the plaintiffs being natives of India, the subject-matter being in India, and the defendant being capable of being sued in India, an English court of equity was not the proper tribunal to try the question between the parties. Ib.

Held, also, that the staleness of the demand, and the impracticability of giving effect to any declaration of right, were grounds for allowing the demurrer. Ib.

Cession and Annexation of Territory.—In 1834, when the East India Company conquered and annexed Coorg, and took the rajah prisoner, he was the owner of two government promissory notes. Some time after the annexation the company took possession of the notes, and it detained the ex-rajah in India as a captive until 1852, when he was allowed to come to England for a short visit. During his residence in England he instituted a suit against the company to recover the amount of the notes, upon the ground, that they were his private property, and that they were not capable of seizure, and had not been confiscated as prize of war, being debts to which the public faith of the British government in India was pledged:—Held, that the notes belonged to the ex-rajah as part of the raj, and that the British government in India having taken possession of them in the exercise of its sovereign and political power, that was an act which was not subject to the control of the court. Wadeer v. East India Company, 30 L. J., Ch. 226; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 350; 9 W. R. 247.

The transfer of British territories from ordinary British jurisdiction to the supervision, laws and regulations of a political agency, by excluding such territories from the British regulations and codes theretofore in force therein, and from the jurisdiction of all British courts theretofore established therein, with a view to the substitution of a native jurisdiction under British supervision and control, cannot be made without a legislative act. Damodhar Gordham v. Deoram Kanji, 1 App. Cas. 332—P.C.

Such transfer of jurisdiction, even if valid, would not amount to a cession of British territory to a native state; nor would it deprive the crown of its territorial rights over the transferred districts, or the persons resident therein of their rights as British subjects. Ib.

East India Company.]—The East India Company was a corporation established partly for the purposes of trade, and partly for the purposes of government. Gibson v. East India Co., 1 Arn. 493; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 262; 7 Scott, 74; 8 L. J., C. P. 193; 3 Jur. 56.

The East India Company, as representing the Indian Government, has a freehold in the bed of navigable rivers in India, and in the land between high and low-water mark. Doe d. Seebkristo v. East India Co., 10 Moore P. C. 140.

While the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85, for the regulation of the East India Company's charter, was in force, the capital stock of the company was not a government or parliamentary stock or fund, nor was it a foreign stock or fund. Brown v. Brown, 4 Kay & J. 704; 6 W. R. 613.

Bombay Civil Fund.]—By the original articles of the Bombay Civil Service Fund the widows of subscribers were entitled to pensions of 300*l.* a year, subject to a proviso for reduction in case they were possessed of private property exceeding the amount of 200*l.* a year. By subsequent resolutions it was provided that, on payment of a percentage by each subscriber, his widow should be entitled to an annuity of 300*l.* a year, irrespective of her private property. A subscriber quitted the service while the resolutions were in force, and died in a few years without ever having paid the percentage. His widow died many years afterwards. During her widowhood she had received an annuity under the original articles, but she had offered to pay the percentage, and had claimed an annuity under the resolutions:—Held, that she was not entitled to such annuity, but that she was entitled to an annuity under the original articles. Edwards v. Warden, 45 L. J., Ch. 713; 1 App. Cas. 281; 35 L. T. 174—H. L. (E.)

The widow's pension under the original articles had from a certain date been annually reduced by an improper calculation of the amount of her private fortune:—Held, that her administratrix was entitled to have the difference made up to her from the time when the reduction commenced, and that there was an expressed trust for the widow to which the statute of limitations was no bar. Ib.

Held, also, that this was not a case in which interest could be claimed on the arrears. Ib.

On an application to the court of appeal under the Bombay Civil Fund Act, 1882, to prescribe the manner of trial of a question alleged by the applicant to arise between him and the secretary of state for India as to the liability of the fund, the court will not enter into any inquiry as to the nature of the applicant's claim. Form of directions as to the manner in which the question shall be tried. Bombay Civil Fund Act, In re, 1882, Pringle, Ex parte, 39 Ch. D. 300 60 L. T. 81—C. A.

—— Power of Court over Costs.]—By the Bombay Civil Fund Act, 1882, jurisdiction was given to the court of appeal to determine questions arising between any subscriber to the Bombay Civil Fund and the secretary of state for India as to any liability of the fund, nothing being said as to costs. P. took proceedings to enforce a claim against the fund, which the court held to be not made out:—Held, that however the case might have stood if the question had been whether the court could give P. the costs of a successful claim, the court had inherent jurisdiction to order him to pay the costs of wrongly putting the court in motion, there being nothing in the act to show that the legislature intended the court not to have such jurisdiction. Pringle v. Secretary of State for India, 58 L. J., Ch. 815; 40 Ch. D. 288; 60 L. T. 796—C. A.

Madras Civil Annuity Fund.]—Under the regulations of the Madras Civil Service Annuity Fund the civil servants of the company were bound to contribute towards the fund each year 4 per cent. of their salaries; and no servant was entitled to an annuity who had not served twenty-five years, or who had not subscribed or made up by a payment in gross a sum equal to half the value of his annuity; the rules might be varied by the votes of a majority of the subscribers in special meeting assembled, if the variation received the sanction of the court of directors; if the subscriber had contributed more than the half value of his annuity, the excess was to be refunded to him. At a special meeting this last rule had been abrogated by a large majority of the subscribers, meeting and voting under considerable compulsion from the court of directors. U. at the time of the special meeting had paid sums in excess of the half value of his annuity, but he did not then accept the annuity, although offered, but continued to retain his office and pay his contributions, and ultimately he accepted, under protest, an offer of his annuity made to him seven years after the special meeting:—Held, that he was not entitled to a refund of the contributions made by him in excess since 1853. Secretary of State for India v. Underwood, 39 L. J., Ch. 569; L. R. 4 H. L. 580.

The regulations of the Madras Civil Service

Annuity Fund do not justify a refund to a subscriber of the amount of his subscriptions in excess of the prescribed amount; but the practice which has prevailed of granting such refunds, and the acquiescence of the East India Company in such practice may, in some cases, preclude them from disputing the right of a subscriber to insist on such refund. East India Co. v. Robertson, 12 Moore, P. C. 460; 7 Moore, Ind. App. 361; 7 W. R. 695—P. C.

Legislature—Powers of.]—The act No. XXII. of 1869 of the Indian legislature, which excludes the jurisdiction of the high court within certain specified districts, is not inconsistent with the Indian High Courts Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 104), or with the charter of the high court, and is in its general scope within the legislative power of the governor-general in council. Reg. v. Burah, 3 App. Cas. 889—P. C.

Section 9 of that act, which confers upon the lieutenant-governor of Bengal the power to determine whether the act, or any part of it, shall be applied in a certain district, is conditional legislation, and not a delegation of legislative power. Ib.

2. Jurisdiction—Courts.

Magistrates—Protection from Actions.]—21 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 24, protecting provincial magistrates in India from actions for any wrong or injury done by them in the exercise of their judicial offices, does not confer unlimited protection, but places them on the same footing as those of English courts of a similar jurisdiction, and only gives them an exemption from liability when acting bonâ fide in cases in which they have mistakenly acted without jurisdiction. Calder v. Halket, 3 Moore, P. C. 28.

Admiralty.]—Observations on the admiralty jurisdiction of the high court in India. The Brinhilda, 45 L. T. 389—P. C.

Officers of Supreme Court.]—The supreme court at Calcutta has power, by the Charter of Justice of 1774 (14 Geo. 3), to remove or suspend officers of that court on account of misconduct, and this power of removal is not limited to acts done by such officer in his judicial character, but includes transactions distinct from those of his office. An officer of the court, being a shareholder and director of the Union Bank at Calcutta, was a party to deceptive statements contained in the half-yearly reports of the concern as to the state of the affairs of the bank, and also availed himself, in his character as director, to obtain credit to a considerable amount upon his personal security only, which, by the condition of the deed of co-partnership of the bank, amounted to a breach of trust. No charge or imputation with respect to his judicial functions was brought against him:—Held (affirming an order of the supreme court suspending such officer), that there were sufficient grounds for calling upon the court to protect the administration of justice, by suspending such officer for so misconducting himself. Grant, In re, 7 Moore, P. C. 141.

An order made by the judges of the supreme court of Madras, dismissing the master of that court from his office, for alleged official misconduct in the taxation of a bill of costs, reversed, upon appeal, by the judicial committee of the privy council. Minchin, In re, 6 Moore, P. C. 43.

3. Legal Decisions.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency.]—A vesting order, made upon the petition of a trading firm under the Indian Insolvency Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 21, vests in the official assignee the separate property of each partner as well as the joint estate of the firm. Brown v. Carbery, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 2; 9 L. T. 768.

In 1833 A. was discharged by the court for the relief of insolvent debtors at Calcutta from liability to arrest merely. By a subsequent act passed in 1834, the court was empowered to discharge "any person who now is, or shall hereafter become" an insolvent debtor from liability for his debts:—Held, that A. was, in 1834, an insolvent debtor within the second act, and that a supplementary order of the insolvent court made in 1836, under that act, was a complete discharge to A. from his debts. Gordon, In re, 28 Beav. 5; 29 L. J., Ch. 352. Affirmed on appeal, 1 De G., F. & J. 381; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 409; 2 L. T. 100; 8 W. R. 298.

A., being liable as a member of a company which had become defunct, and was being wound up, became insolvent, and was discharged under the Indian Insolvent Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 21. The order for winding up the company had been made previously to his insolvency, but his name had not been placed on the list of contributories until afterwards, and there was no mention of his liability in respect of the company in his schedule:—Held, that his liability as a contributory was barred by his discharge under the Indian Act, and that he was not liable as a contributory. Parbury, Ex parte, 3 De G., F. & J. 80; 30 L. J., Ch. 513; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 503; 4 L. T. 62; 9 W. R. 470.

Advocates and Solicitors.]—Two orders of the high court of the North-Western Provinces, the one being an order nisi calling on a barrister and advocate practising in that court, to show cause why he should not be suspended from the practice of his profession as an advocate of that court, and the other order declaring him guilty of gross professional misconduct, and suspending him from practice for five years; on appeal as to the rule on which the first order was made, discharged, and the second order reversed; the judicial committee being of opinion that, though he had been guilty of a grave irregularity, and deserving of censure, yet the facts proved did not amount to that mala praxis on which the high court, having regard to the position and functions of an advocate in the North-Western Provinces, could fairly found any proceeding of a penal character. Newton v. Judges of the High Court, North-Western Provinces, L. R. 4 P. C. 18; 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 202.

The supreme court of judicature at Bombay has no power to admit persons as attorneys and solicitors to practice in the courts there, except such as are qualified in the manner pointed out by the Bombay Charter and Letters-patent of 1823, establishing the court, viz. those who have been admitted attorneys or solicitors in one of the courts at Westminister, or were practising in the Recorder's court at Bombay, at the time of the publication of that charter. Morgan v. Leech, 3 Moore, P. C. 368.

Common Carriers—Liability.]—The liability of a common carrier of goods for hire in India is governed by the English common law, and is not affected by the provisions of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. Irrawaddy Flotilla Co. v. Bugwandass, 65 L. T. 595; 7 Asp., M. C. 129—P. C.

Champerty.]—C., as attorney and mooktear of M. and his wife, managed actions of ejectment and mesne profits against R., advanced moneys for that purpose, and for the subsistence of his clients, having stipulated that he should be repaid all advances with interest at 12 per cent., and should have a third part of the clear net profits of the suit, with a right to possession of the land recovered as security therefor. He was neither an original nor an added party to the suits, which, on appeal, were decreed in favour of M. and his wife by the high court in India, but were afterwards dismissed by the privy council with costs, which M. and his wife were utterly unable to pay. Pending that appeal, C. purchased the property in suit, and thereafter conducted the appeal in his own interest. In an action by R. against C. to recover the amount of the costs, it was averred, but not proved, that the actions were brought or instigated by C. maliciously and without probable cause; and, failing such proof, it was contended that the agreement and acts of C. amounted to champerty, or were otherwise illegal as being against public policy, and that R. had suffered special damage from them; that C. was the real actor therein, and had an interest in them, and was, therefore, responsible for the costs:—Held, that the English laws of maintenance and champerty are not of force as specific laws in India. Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee, 2 App. Cas. 186—P. C.

Such agreement created no legal privity between R. and C. from which a promise can be implied on the part of R. to pay C. his costs of the former action, on which an action of contract can be founded; nor does it establish a legal wrong, for the former action was brought without improper motives, and upon reasonable cause. Ib.

Claims against Indian Government.]—When a British subject has a claim against the Indian Government, a petition of right is not the proper remedy. In such case he should proceed against the secretary of state in council of India under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106. Frith v. Reg., 41 L. J., Ex. 171; L. R. 7 Ex. 365; 26 L. T. 774; 21 W. R. 19.

The sovereign of Oude before the annexation of that kingdom to the British dominions, contracted a debt with the grandfather of the suppliant, who was legal representative. Such debt remaining unliquidated, he presented his petition of right:—Held, that he had pursued the wrong remedy, for that a petition of right is only applicable where the amount sought to be obtained can be charged upon funds in the hands of the commissioners of the Treasury, and not to a case where the amount is chargeable upon the Indian Government. Ib.

—— After Annexation of Provinces.]—See Doss v. Secretary of State for India, ante, col. 1310.

Interest.]—Neither by the English nor Hindoo law, unless there is a mercantile usage, can interest be imported into a contract which contains no stipulation to that effect. Juggomohun Ghose v. Kaisreechund, 9 Moore, Ind. App. 256.

Divorces.]—The principles and rules which obtain in the divorce court in England are to be applied, as nearly as may be, in India, under the Indian Divorce Act, 1869. The provisions of the Indian Statute of Limitations, 1859, do not apply to suits for divorce à vinculo. Hay v. Gordon, L. R. 4 P. C. 337; 21 W. R. 11.

Executors and Administrators.]—Agents being also appointed executors of the principal are not entitled to the commission upon remittances from India by the testator not received till after his death. Hovey v. Blakeman, 4 Ves. 596.

An executor in India passing his accounts in this court is entitled to the commission upon payments according to the practice in India. Chetham v. Audley (Lord), 4 Ves. 72.

Semble, an executor in India is entitled to a commission of 5 per cent. on all assets of a testator collected by him there, including the assets which he retains in respect of a legacy to himself not given to him in the character of executor, and including moneys belonging to the testator, which were in the hands of a commercial house in which the executor was, and the testator had been a partner. Cockerell v. Barber, 1 Sim. 23; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 77; 28 R. R. 181.

A planter in India obtained advances from his agents, who, by custom, were entitled to a commission on their advances and on the produce of the sales of the crop. The planter died, and his executors sold the factory, and got in the crops, and remitted them to the agents, who sold the latter, and accounted to the executors for the balance, after deducting the amount due to them:—Held, that the executors were entitled to 5 per cent. (Indian commission) on the gross proceeds of the factory and crop. Matthews v. Bagshaw, 14 Beav. 23; 15 Jur. 977.

By a decree made in a suit for administering the assets of a testator who died in India, the master was directed to allow Indian commission to the executor only in respect of assets received by him while resident in India. The testator (whose estate was solvent for the payment of legacies) died possessed of certain notes of the Bengal government, which the executor took from the treasury at Calcutta, and handed over to certain trustees, in discharge of a legacy of the testator of equal amount with the notes:—Held, that the notes were assets within the meaning of the decree. Campbell v. Campbell, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 607; 8 Jur. 28.

To a bill which seeks an account of the assets of an intestate who died in India possessed by a personal representative there, a personal representative of the intestate constituted in England is a necessary party, although it does not appear that the intestate at the time of her death had any assets in England. And it is not sufficient, in order to avoid a demurrer for want of parties in such a case, that the personal representative constituted in India, who is out of the jurisdiction, is made a party, and that process is prayed against her when within the jurisdiction, although the bill alleges that the Indian court was the proper court for granting administration, and that the administratrix constituted by it is the sole legal personal representative of the intestate. Tyler v. Bell, 2 Myl. & C. 89; 1 Keen, 826; 6 L. J., Ch. 169; 1 Jur. 20.

A creditor of a person who died intestate in India took out letters of administration to the deceased in that country. He then came to England, and obtained letters of administration from the prerogative court. Afterwards, one of the intestate's next of kin procured that administration to be revoked, and administration granted to himself:—Held, that the Indian administrator is compellable to account to him for assets possessed in India as well as in this country, in a suit instituted by him as personal representative only of the intestate, and to which the other next of kin, who were resident in India, were not parties. Sandilands v. Innes, 3 Sim. 263.

Testator appointed persons residing in India his executors. Will not proved in England. Executors in India remit money to their agent in England, and creditor of testator filed bill against agents, praying account and payment of money to accountant-general in the meanwhile; demurrable, because no personal representative of testator was made party. Lowe v. Fairlie, 2 Madd. 101.

Real estates in India being made by statute personal assets for the payment of the debts of a deceased debtor, it is unnecessary to make the debtor's heir-at-law a party to a suit instituted for the administration of the assets. Story v. Fry, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 603; 11 L. J., Ch. 373; 6 Jur. 1029.

A testator left assets in England and India. The court refused to restrain the Indian creditors from obtaining payment out of the English assets until the English creditors had been paid in full. Brett, In re, Reynolds v. Lewis, 29 L. J., Ch. 296; 8 W. R. 272.

False Imprisonment—Acting in Discharge of Public Duty.]—An officer in command of military cantonments, having general control of the police in the absence of the cantonment magistrate, believing the appellant to be, or to be likely to become, a dangerous lunatic, directed two medical officers to examine him, and placed a guard over him, until they could decide on the case. The medical officers reported that the appellant was perfectly sane:—Held, that as the conduct of the officer was not authorised by law, the fact that he acted in perfect good faith in the supposed discharge of a public duty, and on a bonâ fide belief that the appellant was dangerous, did not prevent his being liable for damages at the suit of the appellant. Sinclair v. Broughton, 47 L. T. 170—P. C.

Infants, Religious Education of.]—A child born in India, whose father was a European British subject and a Christian, must be presumed to have the father's religion, and his corresponding civil and social status, and it is the duty of a guardian to bring up his ward in his father's religion. Skinner v. Orde, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 261; L. R. 4 P. C. 60.

An infant, the child of a Christian father and the issue of a Christian marriage, was left, by the death of her father, of very tender age, and brought up by her mother as a Christian during her early youth. Her mother, after cohabiting with a man having a wife and professing the Christian religion, became with him a Mahomedan, for the purpose of giving legal effect to a Mahomedan marriage between them, but which marriage was not proved to have been duly celebrated. The infant, after attaining the age of fourteen, and being with her mother, professed a desire to become a Mahomedan in religion, and adopted the Mahomedan mode of life. The courts in India having been applied to, under the circumstances, by her relatives to remove the infant from the custody of her mother, made an order under the provisions of the acts, Nos. XL. of 1858 and IX. of 1861, and placed the infant under a Christian guardian. Such order, on appeal, confirmed by the judicial committee. Ib.

Limitations, Statute of.]—At the time of his death a testator was indebted to a Hindoo banker for advances made for the purposes of the business in India, such advances carrying interest at 12 per cent. In 1861 the testator died, and in 1865 the usual administration decree was made in an administration suit instituted in England by a legatee. The Indian statute of limitations provides that no suit for the recovery of money lent or interest shall be maintained in any court within the British territories in India unless the same be instituted within three years from the time when the debt became due. In 1870 the banker carried in a claim for the balance and principal due to him in 1861, with interest at 12 per cent. On summons to disallow the claim:—Held, that the question must be governed by the lex fori, and that, as the decree had operated as a judgment in favour of creditors to the extent of preventing the time limited by the English statute from running, the claim must be allowed, but with interest only at 4 per cent. Finch v. Finch, 45 L. J., Ch. 816; 35 L. T. 235.

Tenants in common of house property in Calcutta, under the will of a testator who died in 1803, became, in 1825, reduced to two. The property had all along been considered as leasehold, in which view one of the surviving cotenants would, in the events that had happened, be entitled to five-ninths and the other to four-ninths of the property; and the rents had been received by a common agent, and shared accordingly. In 1827 the supposed owner of the four-ninths settled her share, describing it as a moiety. This description was, nevertheless, treated as an error, and the rents were continued to be received as before, and to be shared in the same proportions, until 1864, when it was discovered, that the property was freehold, upon which footing the supposed owner of the five-ninths would really be entitled to four-fifths, and the supposed owner of the four-ninths to one-fifth only. In 1859 an act of limitations for India passed, which provided, that no suit for the recovery of immovable property shall be maintained in any court within the British territories in India unless the same, if instituted after two years from the passing of the act, be instituted within twelve years from the time when the cause of action arose. The property having been sold, and the proceeds paid into court, the owner of the three-fourths claimed to be entitled to that proportion of the fund:—Held, that under the English law the court would, after so long a possession and user, have presumed a grant. Peat, In re, L. R. 7 Eq. 302.

Held, also, that under the same law the court would have held the settlement in 1827 by one of the co-tenants to have been a legal ouster of the other. Ib.

Held, also, that the case was governed by Indian law, that under the provisions of the act of the Indian legislature the claim had become barred, and that he was entitled to five-ninths only of the fund. Ib.

Lunatic "Charged" with Crime in "Court" in India, but "not tried"—Removal to England.]—By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 81, s. 1, if any person shall be indicted for or charged with any crime or offence in any court in India, and shall be acquitted of or not be tried for such crime or offence on the ground of his being found to be of unsound mind, he may be removed to England in the manner prescribed by the act. A European British subject in India having been arrested for homicide, a district magistrate was informed of it, and went with witnesses to a private house in the presidency, where the accused was detained. On seeing him, and receiving medical testimony on oath as to his state of mind, the magistrate deemed him insane and unfit to be tried, and so reported to the government of the presidency. The government made an order under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 81, s. 1, for the removal of the prisoner to England. By virtue of the order he was brought in custody to England, and on his arrival a royal warrant was issued, under s. 2, for his reception into a lunatic asylum, where he was accordingly kept:—Held, that the prisoner was charged with a crime in a "court," and "not tried" on the ground of being "found" to be of unsound mind within the meaning of s. 1, and that his detention was lawful. Maltby, In re, 50 L. J., Q. B. 413; 7 Q. B. D. 18; 44 L. T. 711; 29 W. R. 678; 14 Cox, C. C. 609; 45 J. P. 681.

Partnership.]—In the absence of any law or established custom existing in India in respect to partnership transactions, the law of England is to be resorted to for principles and rules to guide the courts. At the same time the usages of trade, and the habits of business of the Indian community, so far as they may be peculiar to or different from those in England, are to be taken into consideration. Mollow v. Court of Wards, L. R. 4 P. C. 419.

Registration Act.]—The Indian Registration Act, 1866, makes void all instruments relating to real estate in India which ought to have been registered under the Indian Registration Act, 1864, but were not so registered, and destroys all equities arising out of them. A., being resident at Madras, in 1865 executed a deed by which he conveyed land in India to the plaintiff, and covenanted for further assurance. The deed was not registered under the Indian Registration Act, 1864, which provides, that if such a deed be not registered, it shall not be received in evidence in any court in India. In 1866 A. mortgaged the same land to the defendant, who had notice of the plaintiff's conveyance, and the defendant registered the mortgage deed under the Indian Registration Act, 1866. The plaintiff filed a bill to enforce the covenant for further assurance against the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff had no equity against the defendant, and the bill was dismissed. Hicks v. Powell, L. R. 4 Ch. 741; 17 W. R. 449.

Semble, that independently of the operation of the Indian Registration Act, 1866, as the plaintiff's deed was forbidden by the Indian Registration Act, 1864, to be received in evidence in India, it could not be sued on in England either as a deed of conveyance or as a deed of covenant for further assurance. Ib.

A correspondence between A. and B. amounting to a contract for a purchase of a future interest in immovable property does not require registration under the Indian Registration Act, 1866. Port Canning Land and Dock Co. v. Smith, L. R. 5 P. C. 114; 30 L. T. 531.

Religion.]—The tie that bound an undivided family together is dissolved by the conversion of a member to Christianity, so far as regards such member. A convert may renounce the old law with his former religion, or abide by the old law notwithstanding his change of faith. Lex loci does not apply to parties who have ceased to be Hindus in religion. Customs and usages not enjoined may be as voluntarily changed as they were voluntarily adopted. Abraham v. Abraham, 2 N. R. 431; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 729; 11 W. R. 905—P. C.

Succession to Property.]—By the Indian Succession Act, 1865, succession to the immovable property in India of a deceased person is regulated by the law of India, wherever he may have had his domicil at the time of his death; and succession to the movable property in India is regulated by the law of the country of the domicil. By the same act no man having a nephew, or a niece, or a nearer relation, has power to bequeath any property to charitable uses, except by a will executed twelve months before death, and deposited as therein required. Macdonald v. Macdonald, 41 L. J., Ch. 566; L. R. 14 Eq. 60; 26 L. T. 685; 20 W. R. 739.

A domiciled Scotchman, possessed of both movable and immovable property in India, made a will in Scotland, appointing both Indian and Scotch executors, and duly executed it according to the law of both countries. He thereby devised and bequeathed all his Indian property, movable and immovable, to the Indian executors to sell and realise, and after payment of costs and expenses, out of the free proceeds to pay 10,000*l.* to the Scotch executors, and to pay the residue to legatees. He then directed his Scotch executors to lay out the 10,000*l.* legacy in erecting and maintaining a hospital in Scotland. He died in Scotland a few days after the date of the will, leaving sisters. The movable and the immovable property in India each exceeded 10,000*l.* It being in evidence that there is no rule against marshalling in favour of charities known to the law of Scotland:—Held, that the 10,000*l.* might be well paid out of the movable property only; and that, the distribution of such movable property being by the law of India regulated by the laws of Scotland, the whole legacy was well given to the charity. Ib.

An adopted son, according to the Hindoo law, is entitled to succeed to his collateral as well as his direct relations by adoption. Chowdry v. Dibeh, 3 Knapp, 55.

Lands in the East Indies held by a tenure of the nature of the fee simple, do not pass by an unattested will, but descend to the person who would be heir-at-law in England. Gardiner v. Fell, 1 Jac. & Walk. 22; 2 Wils. 32; 20 R. R. 208.

In a suit for the division of the property of an undivided Hindoo family, the whole of the property of each individual is presumed to belong to the common stock, and it lies upon the party who wishes to except any of it from the division, to prove that it comes within one of the exceptions recognised by the Hindoo law. Sadasew v. Bajee, 2 Knapp, 60.

Will—Absolute Interest—Precatory Trusts.]—A testator gave to his widow the whole of his real and personal property, "feeling confident that she will act justly to our children in dividing the same when no longer required by her:"—Held, that the widow took an absolute interest, and that the doctrine of precatory trusts did not apply. Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor, 51 L. J., P. C. 72; 7 App. Cas. 321; 46 L. T. 633; 31 W. R. 17—P. C.

4. Applicability of English Laws.

What Statutes Apply.]—The English law of felo de se, and forfeiture of goods and chattels, does not extend to a native Hindoo, though a British subject, committing suicide at Calcutta. Bengal (Advocate-General) v. Ranee Surnomoye Dossee, 9 Moore, Ind. App. 387; 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 22; 2 N. R. 530; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 877; 8 L. T. 843; 12 W. R. 21.

Where Englishmen establish themselves in an uninhabited or barbarous country, they carry with them not only the laws, but the sovereignty of their own state; and those who live amongst them and become members of their community become partakers of and subject to the same laws. Ib.

This rule does not apply to the early settlement of the English in India, as the permission given to the settlers to use their own laws within the factories did not extend those laws to natives associated with them within the same limits. Ib.

Where a country, which was previously under a settled government, accrues to the crown by cession or conquest, only such parts of the English law are to be considered as having force there as have either been specifically introduced by statute, or can be shown by a course of decisions to have been acted on in such country. That part of the English law which relates to the disability of aliens to hold or devise land has not force in the presidency of Calcutta, nor do the English statutes of mortmain apply to India, and, therefore, a devise for a charitable purpose by a person born in France, was held to be good. Lyons (Mayor) v. East India Co., 1 Moore, P. C. 175.

Brief view of the introduction of the English law into the East Indies. Ib.

The Statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1 c. 16, extends to India, and applies to Hindoos and Mahomedans as well as Europeans, in civil actions in the supreme court. Ruckmaboye v. Mottichund, 5 Moore, Ind. App. 234; 8 Moore, P. C. 4.

But 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, relating to games and wagers, does not. Thackoorseydass v. Dhondmull, 6 Moore, P. C. 300; 4 Moore, Ind. App. 339; 12 Jur. 315.

The Factors Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, is extended to India, by the act of the Indian legislature of 1844. Gobind Chunder Sein v. Ryan, 9 Moore, Ind. App. 140; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 343; 5 L. T. 559; 10 W. R. 155.

The 9 Geo. 4, c. 74, s. 56, extends to the British territories in India the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 8, with respect to offences committed in two different places, or partially committed in one place and completed in another; but such statute does not render a person liable to punishment for the commission of a complete offence who was not liable before the passing of that statute. Nga Hoong v. Reg., 7 Moore, Ind. App 72; 7 Cox, C. C. 489.

The words, "within the limits of the charter of the United Company," in 9 Geo. 4, c. 74, s. 56, meant within the limits of the trading charter of the East India Company. Ib.

5. Actions in England.

When Possible.]—By an act of the Indian legislature a company established in Calcutta was to be sued in the name of their secretary, and judgment so recovered was to have the like effect against the property of the company as if obtained against all the members as parties to the action; provided that if execution against the company's property was ineffectual, execution was to be issued against the members successively, and failing this, against any person who was a member when the contract on which the action was brought was entered into; no execution to be issued against any person other than the actual party to the action without leave granted in open court, on notice to the person to be charged. The plaintiff, having recovered a judgment in India against the secretary for a breach of contract made by the company there, without taking any further proceedings in that country, sued the defendant (who was a member at the time of the contract made and judgment recovered) in this country on the judgment and on the original contract:—Held, that the action was well brought in both cases. Kelsall v. Marshall, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 241; 26 L. J., C. P. 19; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1142; 5 W. R. 114.

Staying Proceedings.]—An action having been brought for goods sold by a plaintiff in England, and delivered to the defendant in India, the court refused to stay the proceedings under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 21, s. 61, under which the defendant had duly obtained his discharge, but left him to any remedy the statute gave him by plea. Reynolds v. Goodwin, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 370.

Limitations, Statute of—Bond Executed in India.]—Specialty debts in India have no higher legal value nor greater efficacy than simple contract debts; and the same period of limitation, viz., three years, bars the remedy for both, but:—Held by Lopes, J., that where an action on a bond executed in India is brought in England, the bond cannot be treated as a simple contract; and, therefore, as the English statutes of limitation apply, the remedy is not barred until after the lapse of the period of twenty years prescribed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c 42, s. 3, as the limitation for actions on contracts under seal. Alliance Bank of Simla v. Carey, 49 L. J., C. P. 781; 5 C. P. D. 429; 29 W. R. 306; 44 J. P. 735.

6. Civil and Military Service.

Civil.]—The civil servants of the Bengal establishment are not entitled, under the regulations of the Bengal Civil Service Fund, on accepting the retiring annuities, to any refund of their subscription in excess of half the value of their annuities. Boldero v. East India Co., 11 H. L. Cas. 405; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 493; 13 L. T. 308; 13 W. R. 792.

Military.]—By a trust deed made in 1770, between Lord Clive and the East India Company, the East India Company became the trustees of a fund for the benefit of the persons employed by them in their military service, in the manner pointed out by the deed. The deed provided, that in case it should happen that the company should cease to employ a military force in their actual pay and service in the East Indies, then they should pay the fund to Lord Clive or his representatives. In 1858 the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106 transferred the rights and liabilities of the East India Company to the crown:—Held, that, having regard to the whole of the provisions of that act, the representatives of Lord Clive were entitled to this fund. Walsh v. Secretary of State for India, 10 H. L. Cas. 367; 32 L. J., Ch. 585; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 757; 11 W. R. 823; 2 N. R. 339.

To entitle the widow of an officer in the East India Company's service to Lord Clive's bounty, the marriage must have taken place before he retired from the service. M'Kenny v. East India Co., 3 Ves. 203.

A contract for the payment of money, in consideration of the resignation of a major in the service of the East India Company, is illegal by 49 Geo. 3, c. 126. Eyre v. Forbes, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 191. S. P., Graeme v. Wroughton, 11 Ex. 146; 24 L. J., Ex. 265; 3 W. R. 509.

An officer commanding forces of her Majesty and of the East India Company in India has no such legal right, by statute or otherwise, to his pay, as entitles him (in the absence of any specific undertaking or acknowledgment) to a mandamus calling upon the company to discharge arrears, though he has always received his pay from the company, and their practice has been to discharge it monthly. Napier, Ex parte, 18 Q. B. 692; 21 L. J., Q. B. 332; 17 Jur. 380.

Pensions.]—A pension awarded by the East India Company to a military officer, on his retirement from service, is assignable. Heald v. Hay, 3 Giff. 467; 31 L. J., Ch. 311; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 379; 5 L. T. 740; 10 W. R. 264.

The retiring pension of a military officer of the East India Company does not, upon his bankruptcy, pass to his assignees. Gibson v. East India Co., 5 Bing. (N.C.) 262; 7 Scott, 74; 1 Arn. 493; 8 L. J., C. P. 193; 3 Jur. 56.

A superannuation allowance, awarded by a resolution of the court of directors, pursuant to 53 Geo. 3, c. 155, s. 93, to a retired civil servant of the East India Company, is not a debt that is attachable under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 61. Innes v. East India Co., 17 C. B. 351; 25 L. J., C. P. 154; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 189; 4 W. R. 245.

1. In General.

Statutes.]—Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 39). Industrial, &c. (Amendment) Acts, 1894 (57 & 57 Vict. c. 8); 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 30).

Rule—Charging past Invalid Loans on Assets—Money received on Deposit.]—An industrial society passed a rule in 1887, purporting to secure certain invalid loans, made prior to 1887, as a charge upon the assets of the society:—Held, that the rule of 1887 was invalid, and did not ratify the loans, so as to entitle the loan-holders to claim in the liquidation of the society in priority to the trade creditors; that in order to constitute a valid loan, it must have been made in accordance with the provisions of the society's rules as to loans; that these loans were in reality banking transactions, and as such prohibited by the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876. Bottomgate Industrial Society, In re, 65 L. T. 712; 40 W. R. 139; 56 J. P. 216.

—— Application of Profits — Subscription to Strike Fund—"Lawful Purpose."]—By the rules of an industrial society established to carry on the business of general dealers, farmers, manufacturers, &c., it was provided that the profits of the society's business should be applied "either to increase the capital, reserve fund, or business of the society, or to any lawful purpose, and the remainder, less any grant that may be made for educational purposes," divided among the members:—Held, that a subscription to a strike fund was not a lawful purpose within the rules. Warburton v. Huddersfield Industrial Society, 61 L. J., Q. B. 422; [1892] 1 Q. B. 817; 67 L. T. 43; 40 W. R. 346; 56 J. P. 453—C. A.

Mortgage by Member of Property and "Other Moneys"—Defalcations.]—H., a member of the defendant society, mortgaged to the society certain property to secure principal money payable by certain instalments, with interest and subscriptions, and "other moneys becoming due from the mortgagor to the defendant society." H. was also secretary of the society, and in that capacity had received and misapplied moneys belonging to the society. He had conveyed the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to the plaintiff, who claimed to redeem on payment of the mortgage debt, with interest, subscriptions, fines, and other payments due from H. as member. The society claimed in addition to this the amount which H. had embezzled, contending that it came within the words "other moneys":—Held, that the words applied to debts ejusdem generis with what had been mentioned before, and that the sums which H. had embezzled were not ejusdem generis with the mortgage debt, interest, and subscriptions, but were due from H. on a totally different contract, and the society could not insist upon the plaintiff paying such sums before redeeming the property. Bailes v. Sunderland Equitable Industrial Society, 55 L. T. 808; 51 J. P. 310.

Intestacy of Member—Non-Subsisting Nomination of Shares—Distribution without Letters of Administration — Presumption of Death of Nominee — Discretion of Committee.] — The action of a committee of a provident society under s. 27 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, in relation to the distribution of shares of deceased members in cases of intestacy and non-subsisting nomination, is purely discretionary, and such committee may, in the absence of such evidence as they may deem satisfactory, refuse to presume the death of a nominee who has not been heard of for upwards of seven years. Escritt v. Todmorden Co-operative Society, 65 L. J., Q. B. 358; [1896] 1 Q. B. 461; 74 L. T. 350; 44 W. R. 544.

2. Actions By and Against.

Society Registered under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31.] —A bond given to trustees for an industrial society, registered under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, is by virtue of the certificate of registration under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, vested in the society, and the society can sue on it for breaches of the condition subsequent to the registration. Queenshead Industrial Society v. Pickles, 3 H. & C. 857; 35 L. J., Ex. 1; L. R. 1 Ex. 1; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 877; 13 L. T. 295; 14 W. R. 30.

Society in Corporate Capacity.] — An industrial and provident society, registered under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, is not liable to be sued in its corporate capacity in an action not then pending, but commenced after the time of its registration. Linton v. Blakeney Joint Co-operative Industrial Society, 3 H. & C. 853; 34 L. J., Ex. 211; 13 L. T. 39; 13 W. R. 843.

But an industrial and provident society formed under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, and afterwards registered under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, may sue in its corporate name upon a bond given to trustees for the society before the passing of the latter act. Queenshead Industrial Society v. Pickles, supra.

Committee.]—The 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87 repeals 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, and subsequent acts, by which the officers of these societies are required to be sued; but s. 6 provides, that all legal proceedings then pending by or against any such trustee or other officer on account of the society, may be prosecuted by or against the society in its registered name, without abatement. Goods were supplied to a society before the passing of this act, and the society was afterwards registered under the act. In an action, commenced in 1863, against the committee of management for the value of the goods:—Held, that the action was rightly brought, the act having, by the repeal of former acts, restored the plaintiff's common-law right; and the proviso in s. 6 including only proceedings then pending, and not claims or rights of action. Dean v. Mellard, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 19; 32 L. J., C. P. 282; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 346; 11 W. R. 913.

Private Members.]—The members of a society registered under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, are not liable to be sued individually for the debts of the society. Burton v. Tannahill, 5 El. & Bl. 797; 25 L. J., Q. B. 135; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 184; 4 W. R. 205.

—— Scire facias.]—A scire facias may be issued against individual members of an industrial and provident society, after judgment recovered against the registered officers or trustees under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 25. Myers v. Rawson, 5 H. & N. 99; 29 L. J., Ex. 217; 1 L. T. 405; 8 W. R. 417.

—— Society Unregistered.]—Members of an unregistered society enrolled and certified under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, giving a promissory note in the following form for a debt of the society:—"Twelve months after date we, the undersigned, being members of the executive committee, on behalf of the L. and S. W. Railway Co-operative Society, do jointly promise to pay," &c., are personally liable. Gray v. Raper, L. R. 1 C. P. 694; 14 W. R. 780.

Officers.]—The only persons liable to be sued are the officers of the society appointed under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 25, s. 1, or, if there is no such officer, the trustees. Burton v. Tannahill, supra.

Trustees.]—Trustees of a provident society formed under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, but not registered under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, cannot be sued in an action commenced after the passing of the latter act, as the previous act is absolutely repealed by it without any saving clause. Tutill v. Douglas, 33 L. J., Q. B. 66; 8 L. T. 426.

Action on an Award.]—The rules of an industrial society provided, that in case of disputes between a member and the society, or of complaint against an officer, the matter should be settled by arbitration. A member was appointed a salesman of the society, and after he had resigned his appointment disputes arose as to his accounts, which the society proceeded to settle by arbitration; and an award having been made against him, the society proceeded to enforce it, by issuing a plaint in the county court, on which he, before the case had been brought before the judge of the county court, applied for a prohibition, on the ground that this was not a matter which could be settled by arbitration:—Held, that the application was premature, as the county court was the tribunal to decide, in the first instance, whether, on the facts, the matter was such as could be decided by arbitration. Skipton Industrial Co-operative Society v. Prince, 33 L. J., Q. B. 323; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 11.

3. Winding Up.

Jurisdiction—By what Court.]—Prior to the passing of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, the court of chancery had no jurisdiction to wind up an industrial society registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876; and the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, gives no such jurisdiction to the chancery division. London and Suburban Bank, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 316; [1892] 1 Ch. 604; 66 L. T. 716; 40 W. R. 326.

Superior Courts.]—The court of chancery has no jurisdiction, under the Companies Act of 1862, to wind up an industrial society formed under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, and entitled to, but not having obtained, at the date of the winding-up order, a certificate of registration under 25 & 26

Vict. c. 87. Chatham Co-operative Industrial Society, In re, 33 L. J., Ch. 737 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 983 ; 10 L. T. 842 ; 12 W. R. 1053.

Societies established under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, held to be within the provisions of the Winding-up Acts, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 78. National Industrial and Provident Society, In re, 30 L. J., Ch. 940 ; 9 W. R. 774.

The court of chancery has jurisdiction to wind up a building society under the Companies Act, 1862. Midland Counties Benefit Building Society, In re, 4 De G., J. & S. 468 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 739 ; 12 W. R. 661.

Building societies are quite distinct from friendly and also industrial or provident societies, and are not affected by the provisions of the statutes regulating the latter two classes of companies. Ib.

The court stayed the drawing up of an order for winding-up a society which was registered under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, being of opinion that the county court of the county in which the society was situate had the jurisdiction over it ; but directed the society to be registered under the Act of 1862. Rotherhithe Co-operative and Industrial Society, In re, 32 Beav. 57 ; 7 L. T. 305.

A friendly and provident society which has ceased to carry on business for many years is an association within the terms of the Companies Act of 1862, and may be wound up under that, act. Alfreton District Friendly and Provident Society, In re, 7 L. T. 817 ; 11 W. R. 301.

Transfer to High Court.]—Section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, is applicable to the winding-up of registered industrial societies. Section 59 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, has not affected the jurisdiction of the county courts as conferred by the preceding act of 1876 ; except that proceedings pending at the time of the passing of the act may be transferred to the high court under the conditions imposed by the section. Ferndale Industrial Co-operative Society, In re, [1894] 1 Q. B. 828 ; 70 L. T. 448 ; 42 W. R. 430 ; 1 Manson, 303.

Withdrawable Share Capital—Suspension of Right of Withdrawal — Business Carried on at a Loss — Winding-up Order — "Just and Equitable."]—On a petition by three shareholders to wind up an industrial society, the county court judge found as a fact that the society was solvent as regards outside creditors, but that it could only continue to carry on business by a suspension of the right of withdrawal for a limited time. The petitioning shareholders had given notice of withdrawal, but the committee had exercised their right of suspension by successive resolutions for a period of nearly two years prior to the presentation of the petition. The winding-up was opposed by a majority of the shareholders :—Held, that, it not having been proved to be impossible to carry on the business of the society, it was not "just and equitable," within the meaning of s. 79, sub-s. 5, of the Companies Act, 1862, that the society should be wound up. Horsham Industrial and Provident Society, In re, 70 L. T. 801 ; 58 J. P. 639.

Stay of Actions.]—After the making of a note, upon which the holder was suing one of the members, the society was registered under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, and, after action, an order was obtained for winding it up under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, and proceedings under that order were taken in a county court. Section 202 of the Companies Act of 1862 enacts, that where an order has been made winding-up an unregistered company, no suit or other legal proceeding shall be commenced or proceeded with against any contributory to the company, in respect of any debt of the company, except with the leave of the court The plaintiff had not obtained leave to proceed :—Held, that the omission to obtain such leave could not be taken advantage of by plea to the further maintenance of the action ; but only, if at all, by application to the court in which the proceedings under the winding-up order were being pursued. Gray v. Raper, L. R. 1 C. P. 694 ; 14 W. R. 780.

—— County Court—Appeal.]—The judge of a county court, in which a society registered under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, was being wound up, having made an order to stay proceedings in an action brought against a member of such society for a debt of the society incurred before such registration, and for which the member was therefore individually liable :—Held, that no appeal against such order would lie to any of the superior courts of common law. Henderson v. Bamber, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 540 ; 35 L. J., C. P. 65.

Liability of Shareholders — Debts prior to Registration under Act of 1862.]—F. was holder of fully paid-up shares in an industrial society formed, with unlimited liability, under the act of 1852. After the passing of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1862, which repeals the act of 1852, the society being in difficulties was registered under the act of 1862 as a company with limited liability, for the purpose of being wound up, it having been held that a winding-up order could not be made under the repealed act. Upon motion to settle the list of contributories :—Held, that his name must be omitted, notwithstanding there were debts contracted before the registration of the company with limited liability, the Companies Act of 1862, ss. 35 and 37, having taken away from the creditors their original remedy by action. Sheffield Foresters' Co-operative Society, In re, Fountain's case, Swift's case, 4 De G., J. & S. 699 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 593 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 553 ; 12 L. T. 335 ; 13 W. R. 667.

Debentures — Non-Registration as Bills of Sale—Validity of Debentures against Liquidator.]—The debentures of an industrial society formed under the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts, charging the society's personal chattels with the payment of money, are not excluded from the operation of the Bills of Sale Acts by s. 17 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, or by anything in the Bills of Sale Acts generally. Such a society is not a "company" within any of the legal meanings of that word. Standard Manufacturing Co., In re (60 L. J., Ch. 292 ; [1891] 1 Ch. 627), discussed and distinguished. G. N. Ry. v. Coal Co-operative Society, 65 L. J., Ch. 214 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 187 ; 73 L. T. 443 ; 44 W. R. 252 ; 2 Manson, 621.

A. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

1. IN GENERAL.

Specific Performance.]—An infant cannot sustain a suit for specific performance, because the remedy is not mutual. Flight v. Bolland, 4 Russ. 298; 28 R. R. 101.

Next Friend.]—Infant ought to sue by next friend, not to wait till of age. Blade v. Banbury, 1 Ves. J. 195.

Executory Agreement.]—An infant cannot plead infancy under an executory agreement made with his ancestor where the immediate performance of his part of the contract is essential. Griffin v. Griffin, 1 Sch. & Lef. 352; 9 R. R. 51.

Covenant.]—Infant not bound by his covenant. Johnson v. Boyfield, 1 Ves. J. 314.

Bond.]—An infant can on no account bind himself in a bond with a penalty conditioned for payment of interest as well as principal. Fisher v. Mowbray, 8 East, 330. S. P., Baylis v. Dinely, 3 M. & S. 477.

Factor.]—Infant cannot be made to account as factor. Smally v. Smally, 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 6.

Accounts.]—Dealings between tradesmen and their customers may be subject of account in equity, in case of securities obtained from extravagant young men on misrepresentation. Courteney (Lord) v. Godschall, 9 Ves. 473.

—— When Opened.]—Solicitor who advanced money to infant, and acted as his confidential adviser, is a guardian to him, and an account settled between them, within a month after infant became of age, without any assistance, was opened. Revett v. Harvey, 1 Sim. & S. 502; 24 R. R. 219.

Gift by Child to Parent.]—Where a gift is made by a child to a parent before the parental authority and dominion have terminated, it is to be presumed to be made under parental influence, and therefore invalid; and the burthen of proof lies on the parent to rebut this presumption, by showing that the child had independent advice, or was otherwise placed in a position to exercise an independent judgment as to the gift. Wright v. Vanderplank, 2 K. & J. 1; 8 De G., M. & G. 133; 25 L. J., Ch. 753; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 599; 27 L. T. 91; 4 W. R. 410.

Injunction.]—Articles, under which A. had served his clerkship to an attorney, contained a provision that A. should not practise within a certain district. A., who was an infant, served for three years after he attained his full age, and with a knowledge of the articles completed his clerkship, and afterwards began to practise within the forbidden district. A motion to restrain him was refused with costs. Capes v. Hutton, 2 Russ. 357; 26 R. R. 102.

Mistake as to Age.]—I., who was tenant in tail in remainder of certain lands, and was supposed to be of full age, agreed in 1840 for a re-settlement. I. discovered in 1850, for the first time, that he was under age at the date of the resettlement, which he thereupon repudiated:—Held, that by I.'s repudiation the resettlement of his lands in 1840 was rendered void ab initio. Paget v. Paget, 11 L. R., Ir. 26.

Fraud—Notice.]—An infant charged his reversionary interest in a fund, and executed a statutory declaration stating (untruly) that he was then of full age. After attaining twenty-one, he mortgaged his interest in the fund for an amount exceeding what was ultimately available without disclosing the fact of the prior charge:—Held, that the charge was avoided by the subsequent mortgage executed, when of full age, to a mortgagee without notice. Inman v. Inman, L. R. 15 Eq. 260; 21 W. R. 433.

—— Lien.]—Army agents advancing reasonable sums of money to a minor, on the assurance that he required them for regimental purposes:—Held, in the absence of fraud, entitled to a lien for the amount upon the proceeds of the sale of his commission, the agent not being fixed with notice. Lawrie v. Bankes, 4 K. & J. 142; 27 L. J., Ch. 265; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 299; 6 W. R. 244.

Promissory Note.]—Where a promissory note appeared to have been signed by a lady in her twenty-second year as surety for her stepfather, in whose house she had been residing, the court restrained execution against her on a judgment by the payee. Espey v. Lake, 10 Hare, 260; 22 L. J., Ch. 336; 16 Jur. 1106; 1 W. R. 59.

—— Bond.]—A woman, at the time of her marriage, was indebted on two promissory notes; after the marriage the husband, an infant, gave his bond for the amount to the creditor, who thereupon delivered up the notes. On a bill filed for relief, the court ordered the notes to be returned to the plaintiff, with directions that to any action the plaintiff should bring on the notes defendant should not raise any plea which could not have pleaded at the time the bond was given. Clarke v. Cobley, 2 Cox, 173; 2 R. R. 25.

Devise to Pay Debts.]—If an infant borrows money, and gives his bond for it, and devises his personal estate (being of sufficient capacity) for payment of his debts, this bond debt shall be paid. Hampson v. Sydenham, Nels. Ch. Rep. 55.

Payment by Infant.]—Although an infant is not absolutely bound by a contract, not for necessaries, and cannot be compelled to pay, yet, if he does pay money under it, he cannot in general recover it back when he comes of age. Taylor, Ex parte, Burrows, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 254; 25 L. J., Bk. 35; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 220; 4 W. R. 305.

Though an infant who has entered into a contract cannot be compelled to complete it, yet he cannot maintain an action to recover back a deposit. Wilson v. Kearse, Peake's Add. Cas. 196.

If an infant pays money without a valuable consideration he cannot recover it back, and therefore, where A. during infancy paid a sum to B. as premium for a lease, which he avoided after he became of age, and received no benefit from the occupation from that period:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover. Holmes v. Blogg, 2 Moore, 552; 19 R. R. 445.

—— Goods Used or Consumed.]—An infant who has used or consumed goods for which he has paid money under a contract void under the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, s. 1, cannot recover back from the vendor the money so paid. Valentini v. Canali, 59 L. J., Q. B. 74; 24 Q. B. D. 166; 61 L. T. 731; 38 W. R. 331; 54 J. P. 295.

Statute of Limitations.]—When a father has entered upon the estates of his infant children, the presumption is, that he entered as their guardian and bailiff, and therefore the statute of limitations does not begin to run against the children until they attain twenty-one, and from that time at least a child has twenty years within which he may recover possession. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 K. & J. 79; 25 L. J., Ch. 159; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1160; 4 W. R. 135.

—— Acknowledgment.] — An infant may during his infancy effectually sign an acknowledgment in writing, so as to bar the statute of limitations, if the debt acknowledged is for necessaries. Williams v. Smith, 4 El. & Bl. 180; 3 C. L. R. 16; 24 L. J., Q. B. 62; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 163.

Bankruptcy.]—An infant cannot be adjudicated a bankrupt in respect of debts contracted since the Infants' Relief Act. Rainey, In re, 3 L. R., Ir. 459. See also Jones, In re, Jones, Ex parte, 18 Ch. D. 109; 29 W. R. 747; and Reg. v. Wilson, 5 Q. B. D. 28; 41 L. T. 480; 28 W. R. 307.

The bond upon suing out a commission of bankruptcy must be by the petitioning creditor; the commission, therefore, was superseded on account of his infancy. Barrow, Ex parte, 3 Ves. 554.

A petition to annul an adjudication in bankruptcy on the ground of the infancy of the bankrupt, not presented until after the time limited by s. 233 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, dismissed as out of time. West, In re, 3 De G. M. & G. 198; 22 L. J., Bk. 71; 1 W. R. 421.

Immunity from Crime.]—An infant under the age of seven cannot incur the guilt of felony. Marsh v. Loader, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 535; 11 W. R. 784.

Recognisance.]—Infancy is not a ground for discharging a forfeited recognisance to appear at the assizes to prosecute a felony. Williams, Ex parte, 13 Price, 673; McCle. 493; 28 R. R. 735.

See also CRIMINAL LAW.

Common Informer.]—An infant cannot be a common informer, because he can only sue by guardian; and the 18 Eliz. c. 5, s. 1, requires an informer to sue either in person or by attorney. Maggs v. Ellis, Bull. N. P. 196.

Clerk of Court of Requests.]—An infant could not be appointed to the office of clerk of a court of requests, where it was part of the duty for such clerk to receive the money of the suitor, as it is an office of public trust. Claridge v. Evelyn, 5 B. & Ald. 81; 24 R. R. 289.

Clerk of the Peace.]—The office of clerk of the peace being merely ministerial, may be held by an infant. Crosbie v. Hurley, 1 Alcock & Napier, 431.

Bailiff.]—Semble, that an infant cannot be a bailiff or a sheriff's officer. Cuckson v. Winter, 2 Man. & Ry. 313.

Separate Examination of Married Woman.]—A surrender taken out of court of copyhold lands of a married woman, and requiring her separate examination and consent, may be taken by a deputy steward who is an infant. Edleston v. Collins, 3 De G. M. & G. 1; 22 L. J., Ch. 480; 17 Jur. 331; 1 W. R. 169.

Infant under Age is a "Person."]—The Crown Lands Alienation Act, 1861, of New South Wales, by s. 13, provides that crown lands shall be opened for conditional sale in the manner following, viz.:—"Any person may tender a written application for the conditional purchase of any such lands":—Held, that "person" is not limited to persons of the age of twenty-one years. O'Shanassy v. Joachim, 45 L. J., P. C. 43; 1 App. Cas. 82; 34 L. T. 265; 24 W. R. 792—P. C.

Right to Absolute Gift.]—If a father makes to a son under age an absolute gift of an article of dress or ornament, he cannot afterwards reclaim the gift. Smith v. Smith, 7 Car. & P. 401.

Right to Insurance Money.]—During the infancy of a tenant in tail of freehold estates devised in strict settlement, part of which consisted of a corn-mill, the rents were received by his mother on his behalf, and she thereout paid the premiums for keeping up a policy in her name against fire. The will contained no provision for fire insurance. The mill having been burnt down:—Held, that the insurance moneys belonged to the infant tenant in tail as his personal estate. Warwicker v. Bretnall, 23 Ch. D. 188; 31 W. R. 520.

Liability of Solicitor to Infant.]—An attorney for an infant who has received the damages and costs recovered in an action, is liable to the infant in an action for money had and received. Collins v. Brook, 5 H. & N. 700; 29 L. J., Ex. 255; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 999; 2 L. T. 774; 8 W. R. 474—Ex. Ch.

Married Infant cannot Waive Right to Equity to a Settlement.]—A fund in court belonging to an infant married woman will not be paid out to her husband, as she cannot waive her equity to a settlement. D'Angibau, In re (15 Ch. D. 228) noticed. Shipway v. Ball, 50 L. J., Ch. 263; 16 Ch. D. 376; 44 L. T. 49; 29 W. R. 302.

En ventre sa Mère—Loss of Father.]—In an action in the admiralty court on behalf of the owners of a brig which had been run down, an appearance was entered on behalf of a child of one of the drowned men en ventre sa mère. The court reserved leave to the child, en ventre, if born within due time, to prefer a claim for damages sustained by the death of the father. The George and Richard, L. R. 3 Adm. 466 ; 24 L. T. 717. The child was afterwards born, and its claim was assessed. 20 W. R. 245.

Power of Court to Mortgage Real Estate for Repairs.]—When an infant was absolutely entitled, subject to trusts, to the beneficial interest in real estate, the legal estate being in trustees : —Held, that the court had jurisdiction to raise money by a mortgage of the estate, for paying repairs certified to be absolutely necessary. Jackson, In re, Jackson v. Talbot, 21 Ch. D. 786.

Vesting Order—Stock in Name of Infant and Another.]—Where stock to which an infant was beneficially entitled had been invested in the joint names of himself and another person :—Held, that the court had jurisdiction under the Trustee Extension Act, 1852, to make an order vesting in such other person the right to transfer such stock. Harwood, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 578 ; 20 Ch. D. 536 ; 30 W. R. 595.

Compromise.]—A party to a suit, who, knowing that other parties are infants, agrees that a certain course should be taken, cannot object that the other parties were infants and could not consent. Pisani v. Att.-Gen. (Gibraltar), L. R. 5 P. C. 517.

The court has no authority to sanction an arrangement affecting property settled upon infants, even though it be of opinion that such arrangement would be beneficial to them. Day v. Day, 9 Jur. 785.

—— How obtained.]—A compromise on behalf of infants is to be obtained upon petition, supported by an affidavit of a solicitor that counsel's opinion has been given that the compromise is for the benefit of the infants. Gray v. Paul, 46 L. J., Ch. 818 ; 25 W. R. 874.

—— Next Friend.]—The court has no power to compromise a claim in which infants are interested against the wish of the next friend or guardian ad litem of the infants, acting under the advice of counsel. Birchall, In re, Wilson v. Birchall, 16 Ch. D. 41 ; 29 W. R. 27.

Release by Cestuis Que Trustent.]—Degree of weight to be attached to deeds of release executed by cestuis que trustent within a few days of their coming of age, when such releases profess to proceed upon the examination of complicated accounts. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 4 Myl. & Cr. 41 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 177 ; 3 Jur. 596. Affirming 2 Keen, 722.

Release of Executors.]—An agreement to release executors entered into about three months after an infant came of age, and carried into effect about three months subsequently by deed, set aside ; having been entered into in the absence of proper independent advice and assistance, and without a proper opportunity of examining the accounts. Thornber v. Sheard, 12 Beav. 589.

2. CONTRACTS.

a. In General.

Form of Action.]—A plaintiff cannot convert an action founded on a contract into a tort, so as to charge an infant. Jennings v. Rundall, 8 Term Rep. 335 ; 4 R. R. 680.

—— Ex Delicto.]—An infant hired a mare for a ride along the road, being told that she was not fit for leaping. The mare was put to a fence, and so injured that she died :—Held, that he was guilty of an actionable wrong and therefore liable irrespective of the question of necessaries. Burnard v. Haggis, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 45 ; 32 L. J., C. P. 189 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1325 ; 8 L. T. 320 ; 11 W. R. 644.

The nature and extent of the liability of an infant cannot be changed by suing ex delicto in respect of a claim arising on a contract. Ib.

In an action to recover damages for injuries to a mare, whilst let on hire to the defendant, the statement of claim alleged that the defendant drove at an excessive speed and ill-treated the mare. The defendant pleaded infancy :—Held, that it was clear, from the statement of claim, the whole of which must be looked at in order to see whether the case was in contract or in tort, that the plaintiff claimed damages for a tort ; and that the defendant committed a separate and independent wrong apart from the contract, and was liable for such wrong in an action in tort to which the plea of infancy was no defence. Walley v. Holt, 35 L. T. 631.

A., an infant admitted receiving and retaining moneys of his master C. After coming of age he signed a memorandum acknowledging that he owed the money, and promised to pay the sum within a week, he also charged moneys due to him, and authorised the trustees to pay the money owing to C. On summons by C. for payment :—Held, that this was no ratification, and that the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, did not apply. But held, that A. was liable to an action of tort ; and that as he gave the charge to avoid being sued in tort, there was good consideration, and the summons was allowed. Seager, In re, Seeley v. Briggs, 60 L. T. 665.

—— Trespass.]—To trespass quare clausum fregit, a plea, that the close was the close and freehold of P., wherefore the defendant, as his servant and at his command, committed the trespass, is good, though P. was an infant. Ewer v. Jones, 9 Q. B. 623 ; 16 L. J., Q. B. 42 ; 10 Jur. 965.

On an Account stated.]—The statement of an account by an infant is not binding on him. Hedgley v. Holt, 4 Car. & P. 104.

And an action on an account stated does not lie against an infant. Trueman v. Hurst, 1 Term Rep. 40.

Even though the items are for necessaries. Bartlett v. Emery, 1 Term Rep. 42, n.

An account stated by an infant is not evidence against him after he becomes of age, even to show that he has been supplied with necessaries, as stated in the account. Ingledew v. Douglas, 2 Stark. 36.

But an account stated by an infant is voidable only, and may therefore be ratified by him after he comes of age. Williams v. Moore, 11 M. & W.

256 ; 2 D. (N.S.) 993 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 253 ; 7 Jur. 817.

Joint Contracts.]—The several covenant of one grantor of an annuity is not avoided by the infancy of another who grants in the same deed. Haw v. Ogle, 4 Taunt. 10.

If one of two partners is an infant, the holder of a bill of exchange accepted by both partners may declare on it as accepted by the adult only in the names of both. Burgess v. Merrill, 4 Taunt. 468.

A plea in abatement that the defendant made the promise jointly with another is supported by evidence that the promise was made by the defendant jointly with an infant. Gibbs v. Merrill, 3 Taunt. 307.

Where a plaintiff declares on a joint contract, and one defendant pleads infancy, the plaintiff cannot enter a nolle prosequi and proceed against the other, but should commence a new action against the adult. Chandler v. Parkes, 3 Esp. 76. S. P., Jaffray v. Frebain, 5 Esp. 47.

In an action on contract against two, one pleaded never indebted, and the other never indebted and infancy, and the plaintiff took issue upon the other pleas, but to the plea of infancy entered a nolle prosequi :—Held, that the plaintiff having admitted upon the record that there never was any joint binding contract, could not recover against either. Boyle v. Webster, 17 Q. B. 950 ; 21 L. J., Q. B. 202 ; 16 Jur. 683.

Trading Contract.]—An infant, who has been dealt with as a trader, is not consequently liable in respect of a trade debt. Miller v. Blankley, 38 L. T. 527.

The trading contract of an infant is not void, but he may enforce it at his election. Bruce v. Warwick, 6 Taunt. 118 ; 2 M. & S. 205 ; 14 R. R. 634, 638.

—— Money Paid by Infant.]—A plaintiff may recover back a sum which, while an infant, he paid towards the purchase of a share in the defendant's trade, to be retained by the defendant if he failed to enter into partnership with the defendant. Corp v. Overton, 10 Bing. 252 ; 3 M. & Sc. 738 ; 3 L. J., C. P. 24.

—— Work done.]—Where an infant carries on a trade, an action is not maintainable against him for work done for him in the course of that trade. Dilk v. Keighley, 2 Esp. 480 ; 5 R. R. 747.

—— Premium.]—An infant paid a premium on entering into a partnership, and before he became of age disaffirmed the contract :—Held, that he could not have recovered back the premium had his partners remained solvent, and therefore could not prove for it under their bankruptcy. Taylor, Ex parte, 8 De G. M. & G. 254 ; 25 L. J., Bk. 35 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 220 ; 4 W. R. 305.

Semble, that there is no distinction between a trade carried on by a minor and his occupation in a manual employment, and that he is not liable for the rent of a house taken for either purpose. Lowe v. Griffiths, 1 Scott, 458 ; 1 Hodges, 30.

—— Partnership.]—An infant held himself out as being in partnership with S. till within a short period of his coming of age, but there was no proof of his doing any act as a partner after twenty-one :—Held, that it was his duty to give notice of his disaffirmance of the partnership on his arriving at age ; and that he was responsible for goods supplied to S. subsequently to the infant's attaining twenty-one, on the credit of the partnership. Goode v. Harrison, 5 B. & Ald. 147 ; 24 R. R. 307.

Rescission of Agreement for Partnership.]—The plaintiff, during infancy, agreed with the defendant in writing to buy one-half share of a business of the defendant, the defendant to provide board and lodging for the plaintiff, and the plaintiff not to receive any fruits of the partnership until the balance should be paid. The plaintiff paid an instalment of the purchase-money, and went to board and lodge with the defendant, but before his majority, rescinded the agreement :—Held, that the plaintiff might recover back the instalment paid under the agreement, less the amount expended by the defendant in providing board and lodging. Everett v. Wilkins, 29 L. T. 846.

Apprenticeship.]—By an indenture an infant, with the consent of his father, bound himself apprentice to a tradesman, "his executors and administrators, such executors or administrators carrying on the same trade or business, and in the town of W.," and with him and them to serve for the term of seven years:—Held, that upon the death of the master, the apprentice was bound to serve his widow, his executrix, whilst she carried on the same business in the same town, and that she was bound to teach the apprentice. Cooper v. Simmonds, 7 H. & N. 707 ; 31 L. J., M. C. 138 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 81 ; 5 L. T. 712 ; 10 W. R. 270.

—— Covenant to Serve—Negative Covenant.]—An indenture of apprenticeship between the plaintiff, and an infant and her mother, contained covenants that during the term of the apprenticeship the services of the apprentice should be at the plaintiff's disposal, and that the apprentice should not enter into any professional engagement without the written consent of the plaintiff. The infant having, without the plaintiff's consent, entered into a professional engagement :—Held, that an injunction could not be granted, as no action at law could lie as against an apprentice. Gilbert v. Fletcher, (Cro. Car. 179) followed. Fellows v. Wood (59 L. T. 513), explained. De Francesco v. Barnum, 59 L. J., Ch. 151 ; 43 Ch. D. 165 ; 62 L. T. 40 ; 38 W. R. 187 ; 54 J. P. 420.

Wages.]—Infancy is no answer to a claim for wages accruing due after majority has been attained, although on a contract of hiring originally made under age. Thomas v. Waldo, 1 F. & F. 173.

Marriage.]—An infant is not liable to an action for breach of promise of marriage. Hale v. Ruthven, 20 L. T. 404.

Shares—Calls.]—A plea of infancy to an action for calls should allege that the infant repudiated the contract within a reasonable time after he came of age. Dublin and Wicklow Ry., v. Black, 8 Ex. 181 ; 7 Railw. Cas. 434 ; 22 L. J., Ex. 94.

To a declaration for calls charging defendant as the holder of shares under a railway act, incorporated with 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, it is no answer to plead that when he became indebted he was an infant, or that when he became registered he was an infant, and that he has not since he attained his age been registered anew, or ratified the original registration, for by the express wording of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, an infant is liable for calls: at all events, if after attaining his age, he still holds the shares, for such holding is a ratification. Cork and Bandon Ry. v. Cazenove, 10 Q. B. 935; 11 Jur. 802.

Action for calls on railway shares; plea, that the defendant at the time of contracting, and also at the time of making the calls, was an infant; that while he was an infant he repudiated the contract and gave notice to the company:—Held, a good primâ facie bar. Newry and Enniskillen Ry. v. Combe, 3 Ex. 565; 5 Railw. Cas. 633; 18 L. J., Ex. 325.

To an action for calls the defendant pleaded, that at the time of making the calls and his becoming the holder of the shares, he was an infant:—Held, that the pleas were bad, as they did not show that the defendant was a shareholder by contract, and had avoided it. Leeds and Thirsk Ry. v. Fearnley, 5 Railw. Cas. 644; 7 D. & L. 68; 4 Ex. 26; 18 L. J., Ex. 330.

Action for calls; plea, that, at the time when the defendant first became the holder of the shares, and at the time of his making the contracts he was an infant. The defendant became the purchaser of the shares whilst he was an infant, but the call was made after he attained his full age:—Held, that the term "contract" meant the contract by which the defendant became a shareholder, and that the plea was proved. Birkenhead, Lancashire, and Chester Junction Ry. v. Pilcher, 6 Railw. Cas. 564; 5 Ex. 121; 19 L. J., Ex. 207; 14 Jur. 297.

Under the Companies Clauses Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, an infant shareholder is not absolutely bound, he is not deprived of the right of waiving a purchase which he has made; and if he waives it, his liability to pay calls is at an end, though the avoidance may not have taken place till the call was due. L. & N. W. Ry. v. M'Michael, 6 Railw. Cas. 618; 5 Ex. 114; 20 L. J., Ex. 97; 15 Jur. 132.

Sale.]—Semble, that a contract of sale by an infant is absolutely void, and is no answer to an action of trover subsequently brought by him to recover the value of the goods. Latt v. Booth, 3 Car. & K. 292.

A. sold goods to an infant and delivered them to B. for the purpose of being worked up by him for the vendee. The vendee afterwards went with A to B.'s shop, and desired that the remainder might be returned to A.:—Held, that it was competent to A. thus to rescind the contract without writing. Douglas v. Watson, 17 C. B. 685.

Deeds.]—A deed which takes effect by delivery, and is executed by an infant, is voidable only, and not void; and Zouch v. Parsons (3 Burr. 1794) is sound law. A voidable deed is valid until some act is done to avoid it; and it lies upon those who claim in opposition to the deed to show that such act has been done. Allen v. Allen, 2 Dr. & War. 307; 1 C. & L. 427.

Mortgages.]—The conveyance of an infant mortgagee is binding, and cannot be avoided by entry during the infancy. Zouch d. Abbott v. Parsons, 3 Burr. 1794; 1 W. Bl. 575.

An infant charged his reversionary interest with payment of a sum lent upon his promissory note, and executed a statutory declaration stating (untruly) that he was then of full age. After attaining twenty-one he mortgaged his interest without disclosing the prior charge:—Held, that the charge given by the infant during his infancy was avoided by the subsequent mortgage executed when of full age to a mortgagee without notice. Inman v. Inman, L. R. 15 Eq. 260; 21 W. R. 433.

Conveyance—Repudiation after Age.]—In 1840 I., who was tenant in tail in remainder of certain lands, and was supposed to be of full age, agreed for a resettlement. I. discovered in 1850 that he was under age at the date of the resettlement, which he thereupon repudiated:—Held, that the resettlement in 1840 was void ab initio. Paget v. Paget, 11 L. R., Ir. 26—C. A.

b. Liability of Parent.

Contract by Parent.]—A father is not liable to pay for clothes for his son under age, without some proof of a contract on his part either express or implied. Blackburn v. Mackey, 1 Car. & P. 1. S. P., Fluck v. Tollemache, 1 Car. & P. 5; 28 R. R. 765.

The mere moral obligation on a parent to maintain his child affords no legal inference of a promise to pay a debt contracted by him, even for necessaries. Shelton v. Springett, 11 C. B. 452.

No one is bound to pay another for maintaining his children, except he has entered into some contract to do so. Seaborne v. Maddy, 9 Car. & P. 497.

Every man is to maintain his own children; and it requires a contract to enable another person to do so, and charge him for it. Ib. S. P., Mortimore v. Wright, 6 M. & W. 482; 9 L. J., Ex. 158; 4 Jur. 465.

To charge a father with clothes supplied to his son, it is essential that the clothes should have been supplied with the assent or by the authority of his father; and the father is the person to judge what is proper for his son. Rolfe v. Abbott, 6 Car. & P. 286.

What amounts to Contract.]—A. having furnished goods to the defendant's son (an infant), the defendant repudiating all liability on his part, on the ground that the goods were not necessaries, wrote to the plaintiff: "Should you keep entirely from him, and not trust him any further sum, I will pay you one moiety and try to provide the means for him to pay the other. If you agree to this, I wish to have the account sent to him here, per return of post." The plaintiff sent the account, but did not in terms accept the proposal, and some months afterwards he wrote to the defendant, intimating his willingness to accept from him one-half of his claim, but reserving to himself his rights against his son for the remaining half:—Held, that these letters did not entitle the plaintiff to sue the father for the moiety of the account. Andrews v. Garrett, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 262.

Proof of Parent's Authority.]—The defendant's son, a youth about seventeen, in his employ, caused a servant, whom he suspected of obtaining money by false pretences, to be apprehended, and taken before a magistrate, who ultimately discharged him. The son told his father what he had done, the latter said, that as he (the son) had begun it, he would not interfere :—Held, no evidence for a jury of subsequent ratification by the father. Moon v. Towers, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 611.

Where a minor orders articles which are necessary and suitable to his situation in life, it is a question for the jury whether they can infer an authority given to that effect by the father. Baker v. Keen, 2 Stark. 501.

Where a father has seen his son (a boy of fourteen) wearing a suit of clothes, it is a question for the jury whether he authorised the purchase of them. Law v. Wilkins, 1 N. & P. 697 ; 6 A. & E. 718 ; W., W. & D. 235 ; 6 L. J., K. B. 166.

Extravagance.]—If a tradesman colludes with an infant, and furnishes him with clothes to an extravagant degree, he cannot recover his demand from his father. Simpson v. Robertson, 1 Esp. 17.

Allowance by Parent.]—And no such contract will be implied, when the father has allowed the son a sufficiently reasonable sum for his expenses. Crantz v. Gill, 2 Esp. 471 ; 5 R. R. 746.

Where Father Deserts Infant.]—Quære, whether a father deserting his infant child is liable to a party who supplies the child with necessaries, no further proof of contract being given. No such action can be maintained, if the father had reasonable ground to suppose that the child was provided for. Urmston v. Newcomen, 4 A. & E. 899 ; 6 N. & M. 454 ; 5 L. J., K. B. 175.

c. Necessaries.

General Rule.]—It is incumbent on a tradesman, before he trusts an infant with what may appear necessaries, to inquire whether he is provided by his friends. Ford v. Fothergill, Peake, 229 ; 1 Esp. 211 ; 3 R. R. 695. S. P., Cook v. Denton, 3 Car. & P. 114. S. P., Story v. Pery, 4 Car. & P. 526.

Infant with Allowance.]—Where an infant has an allowance made to him for his support, a tradesman is not entitled to be paid for articles supplied on credit, unless he can make out, that having regard to the infant's circumstances and station (which he is bound to inquire into) the articles were necessaries. Mortara v. Hall, 6 Sim. 465 ; 4 L. J., Ch. 53.

Infant already Supplied.]—On a replication to a plea of infancy, that the articles supplied were necessaries, the question is whether the defendant had a sufficient supply of those articles at the time, for, if he had, the goods supplied by the plaintiff were not necessaries, and the plaintiff cannot recover for them. Steedman v. Rose, Car. & M. 422.

If a minor has been supplied with ten coats by one tradesman, and immediately after that the plaintiff supplies him with another, he will not be entitled to be paid for that other coat, as it was unnecessary. Burghart v. Angerstein, 6 Car. & P. 690 ; 1 M. & Rob. 458.

Conduct of Parties.]—The necessity for inquiry by a tradesman before giving credit to an infant for necessaries may be dispensed with by the conduct of the parties. Dalton v. Gibb, 7 Scott, 117 ; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 198 ; 1 Arn. 463 ; 8 L. J., C. P. 151 ; 3 Jur. 43.

Where an infant, living in some pretension, purchased in four months silks to the amount of 35*l*., some of which were delivered in the presence of her mother, and some sent to an hotel where the infant and her mother lived :—Held, that the infant was liable, notwithstanding the tradesman omitted to make any inquiries whether the articles were necessary for the infant.

In a subsequent case held, that there is no inflexible rule making it incumbent on a tradesman to institute inquiries as to the situation of an infant before he gives him credit for necessaries. Brayshaw v. Eaton, 7 Scott, 183 ; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 231 ; 1 Arn. 466 ; 8 L. J., C. P. 153 ; 3 Jur. 222.

Onus probandi on the Plaintiff.]—An infant bought on credit a pair of solitaires, composed of crystals adorned with diamonds and rubies, and a silver goblet for presentation. No evidence was given of anything peculiar in his station rendering it exceptionally necessary for him to have such articles :—Held, that as the onus was on the plaintiff, and he gave no evidence to show that the articles were necessaries, the question ought not to have been left to the jury. Ryder v. Wombwell, 38 L. J., Ex. 8 ; L. R. 4 Ex. 32 ; 19 L. T. 491 ; 17 W. R. 167—Ex. Ch.

The question in such a case is one of mixed law and fact, the preliminary question being whether there is any evidence on which the jury could properly find for the party on whom the onus of proof lies. The judge must determine, first, whether the case is such as to cast on the plaintiff the onus of proving that the articles in question are necessaries, and then whether there is any sufficient evidence for the jury to satisfy that onus ; and if there is not he ought to direct a nonsuit. Ib.

—— Evidence.]—Where an infant is sued for goods supplied on credit, he may give evidence that, when the order was given, he was already sufficiently supplied with goods of a similar description, and it is immaterial whether the plaintiff did or did not know of the existing supply. Ryder v. Wombwell (L. R. 3 Ex. 90) dissented from. Baines or Barnes v. Toye, 53 L. J., Q. B. 567 ; 13 Q. B. D. 410 ; 51 L. T. 292 ; 33 W. R. 15 ; 48 J. P. 664. S. P., Johnstone v. Marks, 57 L. J., Q. B. 6 ; 19 Q. B. D. 509 ; 35 W. R. 806.

What are—Question for Jury.]—Whether articles furnished by a tradesman to an infant are necessaries or not is a question of fact for the jury, regard being had to his condition in life. Brayshaw v. Eaton, supra.

In an action for goods sold to an infant, the issue being necessaries, if any part of the articles proved to have been furnished may fall within the description of necessaries, the evidence ought to be left to the jury. Maddox v. Miller, 1 M. & S. 738 ; 14 R. R. 565.

Though it is a question for the jury to say what are necessaries for an infant, yet it is subject to the control of the judge ; and the jury having found that certain things were necessaries, contrary to the opinion expressed by the judge, the court granted a new trial. Harris v. Fane, 1 Scott (N.R.) 287; 1 Man. & G. 550; 4 Jur. 508.

It is a question for the jury, whether the articles supplied are such as a reasonable person of the age and situation of the infant would require for real use. Peters v. Fleming, 6 M. & W. 42; 9 L. J., Ex. 81.

A minor is only liable for necessaries suitable to his state and degree, and the jury must consider not only whether the clothes were suitable in point of quality, but also in point of quantity. Burghart v. Angerstein, 6 Car. & P. 690; 1 M. & Rob. 458.

The term necessaries includes such things as are useful and suitable to the state and condition in life of the party, and not merely such as are requisite for bare subsistence. Peters v. Fleming, supra.

—— Undergraduate.]—In considering whether the goods were necessaries, suitable to the degree and condition of the defendant, an undergraduate, his rank or allowance is not so much to be considered as his situation in statu pupillari at college. Wharton v. Mackenzie, 5 Q. B. 606; Dav. & M. 545; 13 L. J., Q. B. 130; 8 Jur. 466.

Dinners and Confectionery.]—Dinners, game, poultry, suppers, ices, soda-water, fruits and confectionery are not primâ facie necessaries; and the judge should so direct the jury, if no explanation showing their necessity is given. If any special circumstances are shown, then the jury must decide whether the articles were necessaries or not. Wharton v. Mackenzie, supra.

Dinners, confectionery or fruit, supplied to an undergraduate in the university, are not primâ facie necessaries. Brooker v. Scott, 11 M. & W. 67.

Regimentals.]—Regimentals furnished to an infant who was a member of a volunteer corps are necessaries. Coates v. Wilson, 5 Esp. 152; 8 R. R. 841.

Livery.]—A captain in the army, who is an infant, is liable to pay for a livery ordered for his servant as necessaries, but not for cockades ordered for the soldiers of his company. Hands v. Slaney, 8 Term Rep. 578.

Clothes.]—On the trial of an action for the amount of a tailor's bill, it appeared that the defendant was an infant, but it was proved that he had an allowance of 500*l.* a year, besides his pay as a captain in the army. The judge was of opinion, that if the minor had a sufficient income allowed him to supply him with necessaries suitable to his condition for ready money, he could not contract even for necessaries upon credit:—Held, that this was a misdirection. Burghart v. Hall, 4 M. & W. 727; 8 L. J., Ex. 235.

Cigars and Tobacco.]—Cigars and tobacco cannot, under ordinary circumstances, and in the absence of evidence of any special circumstances rendering them necessary medicinally or otherwise, be considered necessaries for an infant. Bryant v. Richardson, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 300; 14 L. T. 24; 14 W. R. 401.

Carriages and Horses.]—An infant, who was sole manager of a farm belonging to his father, bought one pair of spurs, a suit of best-made kersey horse clothing, a breastplate, set of best plated harness, &c.:—Held, that there was reasonable evidence, considering the position of the defendant, that the goods supplied were necessaries. Hill v. Arbon, 34 L. T. 125.

A tradesman sued an infant for the price of a hunter worth 150*l.* He was an English youth on a visit to a country gentleman, and stated that he was a member of the Surrey Stag Hunt, and that he was accustomed to hunt his step-father's horses, and talked of being allowed 600*l.* a year by his step-father:—Held, that there was no evidence which could properly be left to the jury that the hunter was a necessary. Skrine v. Gordon, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 479.

An apprentice of a chemist, who was entitled to some property when of age, bought a horse when nearly of age. He had been advised by a medical man to take exercise on horseback. The jury found that the horse was a necessary. The court refused a new trial. Hart v. Prater, 1 Jur. 623.

A minor held a commission in the army, but sold it by reason of not having sufficient fortune to hold it. His father, a clergyman, paid various sums for him during his minority:—Held, that a stanhope was not necessary for him while a minor. Charters v. Bayntun, 7 Car. & P. 52.

Presentation Goblet.]—A silver goblet for presentation to a friend at whose house an infant was staying is not a necessary. Ryder v. Wombwell, supra.

Betting Books.]—Betting books are not necessaries. Jenner v. Walker, 19 L. T. 398.

Watch.]—A lieutenant in the royal navy who is under twenty-one is not answerable for the price of a chronometer. Berrolles v. Ramsay, Holt, 77; 17 R. R. 610.

Marriage Settlement.]—A settlement which affords a provision to an infant, who on her marriage has no other certain provision, is a necessary. Helps v. Clayton, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 553; 34 L. J., C. P. 1; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1184; 11 L. T. 476; 13 W. R. 161.

Money Lent.]—Infant borrows money and applies it towards payment of his debts for necessaries, infant liable to pay this in equity though not law. Marlow v. Pitfield, 1 P. Wms. 558.

A deed executed by an infant to secure advances made to him for expenditure upon necessaries is not binding upon him when he becomes of age. Martin v. Gale, 46 L. J., Ch. 84; 4 Ch. D. 428; 36 L. T. 357; 25 W. R. 406.

An infant is not liable for money lent to supply himself with necessaries. Probart v. Knouth, 2 Esp. 472, n. See also 1 Salk. 279.

—— Apprenticeship.]—Money advanced to place out an infant apprentice is not recoverable on a promise by the infant to repay, as not being for necessaries. Smith v. Gibson, Peake's Ad. C. 52; 4 R. R. 888.

—— Arrest for Debt.]—Money advanced to an infant to procure him liberation from arrest, which was for necessaries, or where he was in execution, may be recovered; but the plaintiff must show that the money was advanced under such circumstances. Clarke v. Leslie, 5 Esp. 38.

—— Wages.]—Payments made to an infant on account of wages due to her to purchase necessaries are valid payments. Hedgeley v. Holt, 4 Car. & P. 104.

Bill of Exchange.]—An infant is not liable upon a bill of exchange at the suit of an indorsee of the bill, although it was accepted for the price of necessaries. Where, therefore, such an acceptance was not paid at maturity :—Held, that it did not constitute a debt due from the acceptor to the indorsee which would support a bankruptcy petition. Margrett, Ex parte, Soltykoff, In re, 60 L. J., Q. B. 339 ; [1891] 1 Q. B. 413 ; 39 W. R. 337 ; 55 J. P. 100 ; 8 Morrell, 27—C. A.

Husband's Funeral Expenses.]—An infant widow is liable to pay for her deceased husband's funeral expenses. Chapple v. Cooper, 13 M. & W. 252 ; 13 L. J., Ex. 286.

Presents to Future Wife.]—Semble, that presents to a bride who eventually becomes the infant's wife, are necessaries. Jenner v. Walker, 19 L. T. 398.

Infant Trading.]—An action may be maintained against an infant to recover the amount of such goods supplied to him to trade with as were consumed as necessaries in his own family. Turberville v. Whitehouse, 1 Car. & P. 94 ; 12 Price, 692.

—— Rent.]—When an infant rented a house, and exercised his calling therein as a barber :—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to decide whether it came within the term of necessaries. Lowe v. Griffiths, 1 Scott, 458 ; 1 Hodges, 30 ; 4 L. J., C. P. 94.

.d. Misrepresentation as to Age.

General Rule.]—An infant is not liable for a fraudulent representation that he was of full age, whereby a party was induced to contract with him. Liverpool Adelphi Loan Association v. Fairhurst, 9 Ex. 422 ; 2 C. L. R. 512 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 163 ; 18 Jur. 191 ; 2 W. R. 233.

In Equity.]—A false representation made by an infant that he is of age, to another person who knows such representation to be false, is not such a fraud as a court of equity will relieve against. Nelson v. Stocker, 4 De G. & J. 458 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 760 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 751 ; 7 W. R. 603.

A partner entered into a joint and several bond to secure money lent to the firm. As part of the security he agreed to insure his life, and for that purpose signed a declaration that he was of the age of twenty-two. He was an infant, and after he attained twenty-one he became bankrupt :—Held, that the bankrupt was liable in equity to the debt. Unity Joint Stock Mutual Banking Association, Ex parte, King, In re, 3 De G. & J. 63 ; 27 L. J., Bk. 33 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1257 ; 6 W. R. 640.

Promissory Notes.]—In an action on promissory notes bearing interest, one of the makers of the notes pleaded infancy. A reply that at the time of the loan the defendant fraudulently represented himself to be of full age, and thereby induced the plaintiff to advance the money :—Held, on demurrer, bad. Bateman v. Kingston, 6 L. R., Ir. 328.

Release.]—Where a person represents to another that he is of age, and executes to him a release, upon which the latter acts :—Held, that he could not afterwards impeach the validity of the release on the ground of his minority. Wright v. Snowe, 2 De G. & Sm. 321.

Payment by Trustee.]—Payment by a trustee to a cestui que trust, nineteen years of age, on the false representation by herself and her parents that she was twenty-one :—Held, to be a discharge to the trustee for the sum so paid ; but a release by the infant to the trustee of all demands in respect of the trust, held not to be a bar to a suit by the cestui que trust against the trustee, not brought until seven years after the cestui que trust had attained twenty-one. Overton v. Banister, 3 Hare, 503 ; 8 Jur. 906.

Infant fraudulently concealing his age, and obtaining from trustees stock which he was entitled to when of age, and, when of age, applying for and receiving the residue of such stock :—Held, that neither infant nor his assignees could call upon trustees to repay stock paid to infant ; and that infant recognised such payment by applying when of age for the residue. Cory v. Gertcken, 2 Madd. 40 ; 17 R. R. 180.

Lease.]—In an action against an infant who had obtained a lease of a house on an implied representation that he was of age :—Held, that the lease must be declared void, and possession given up ; but that he was not liable for use and occupation. Lempriere v. Lange, 12 Ch. D. 675 ; 41 L. T. 378 ; 27 W. R. 879.

Agreement not to Trade.]—A. agreed with B. to serve him for a certain time, and not to carry on the same business on his own account within two miles of his house for two years after quitting his service. At the time of the agreement, A. was a minor, but he represented himself to be of age. He left some time after coming of age, and immediately set up in business within the prescribed limits :—Held, that B. was entitled to an injunction. Cornwall v. Hawkins, 41 L. J., Ch. 435 ; 26 L. T. 607 ; 20 W. R. 653.

Charge—Subsequent Mortgage.]—An infant charged his reversionary interest with payment of a sum lent to him, and executed a statutory declaration stating (untruly) that he was of age. After attaining twenty-one, he mortgaged his interest without disclosing the fact of the prior charge :—Held, that the charge given during his infancy was avoided by the subsequent mortgage executed by him to a mortgagee without notice. Inman v. Inman, L. R. 15 Eq. 260 ; 21 W. R. 433.

No Express Representation.]—A man cannot be charged in equity, after his majority, on a purchase or sale or contract, made during his minority, on the mere ground that without any false assertion by the infant the other party believed he was not a minor, and dealt with him on the supposition that only adults could enter into such transactions. The court therefore refused an injunction to restrain an action brought to recover shares which had been assigned by deed to the plaintiff in equity by the plaintiff at law, during the infancy of the plaintiff at law, there being no evidence against the plaintiff at law of misrepresentation as to his infancy Stikeman v. Dawson, 1 De G. & Sm. 90 ; 4 Railw. Cas. 585 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 205 ; 11 Jur. 214.

e. Agreements for Benefit of Infant.

General Rule.]—If an agreement made by an infant is for his benefit at the time, it will bind him. Maddon d. Baker v. White, 2 Term Rep. 159 ; 2 Esp. 530 ; 1 R. R. 453.

Apprenticeship—Premium.]—By a covenant in an apprenticeship deed the apprentice covenanted to pay the plaintiff the balance of the premium on a day named. At the date of the deed the defendant was under twenty-one. In an action upon the covenant, the jury found that the deed was a provident and proper arrangement for the defendant if he wished to learn the plaintiff's business, and that the premium was fair and reasonable :—Held, that instruction in a business might be a necessary for an infant, and that, upon the finding of the jury, the defendant was liable for payment of the premium. Walter v. Everard, 60 L. J., Q. B. 738 ; [1891] 2 Q. B. 369 ; 65 L. T. 443 ; 39 W. R. 676 ; 55 J. P. 693—C. A.

An agreement with a proviso that should the employers cease to carry on their business, or find it necessary to reduce the operations of their works, either temporarily or permanently, from their being unable to obtain materials, or in consequence of any accident, or in consequence of strikes or combinations of workmen, or from any cause over which they should not have any control, they shall have power to terminate the agreement, and discharge the infant upon giving him fourteen days' notice, is not void on the face of it ; the question, whether the provision is or is not inequitable depending upon whether it was at the time of the agreement common to labour contracts, or was in the then condition of trade such as the master was reasonably justified in imposing as protection for himself, and also upon whether the wages were a fair compensation for the services of the infant. Leslie v. Fitzpatrick, 47 L. J., M. C. 22 ; 3 Q. B. D. 229 ; 37 L. T. 461.

A contract by an infant binding him to serve during a certain time for wages, but enabling the master to stop the work whenever he chooses, and to retain the wages during stoppage, is wholly void, as not being beneficial to the infant. Reg. v. Lord, 12 Q. B. 757 ; 3 New Sess. Cas. 246 ; 17 L. J., M. C. 181 ; 12 Jur. 1001.

Under Employers and Workmen Act.]—An infant was apprenticed by a deed containing a provision that the master should not be liable to pay wages to the apprentice so long as his business should be interrupted or impeded by or in consequence of any turn-out, and that the apprentice might during any such turn-out employ himself in any other manner or with any other person for his own benefit :—Held, that, this provision not being for the benefit of the infant, the apprenticeship deed could not be enforced against the infant under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, ss. 5, 6. Meakin v. Morris, 53 L. J., M. C. 72 ; 12 Q. B. D. 352 ; 32 W. R. 661 ; 48 J. P. 344.

An apprenticeship deed contained a stipulation that the master should not be liable to pay any wages to the apprentice, an infant, so long as his business should be interrupted or impeded by or in consequence of any "turn out" ; and that the apprentice might employ himself in any other manner, or with any other person for his own benefit during any such "turn out," and for such reasonable time thereafter as might be necessary to enable him to determine such employment :—Held, that the contract was as a whole unfair, and the apprenticeship deed was invalid and could not be enforced under s. 6 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875. Meakin v. Morris (12 Q. B. D. 352) followed. Corn v. Matthews, 62 L. J., M. C. 61 ; [1893] 1 Q. B. 310 ; 4 R. 240 ; 68 L. T. 480 ; 41 W. R. 262 ; 57 J. P. 407—C. A.

A deed of apprenticeship, whereby an infant apprentice is bound for a term not to accept employment except from the master or with his consent, and which contains no co-relative covenant by the master to provide employment for the apprentice, and which may be terminated by the master only, is invalid as being unreasonable and not for the benefit of the infant. De Francesco v. Barnum, 60 L. J., Ch. 63 ; 45 Ch. D. 430 ; 63 L. T. 438 ; 39 W. R. 5.

Release of Right of Action.]—An infant railway servant, as a condition of his service, entered an insurance society, established and contributed to by the railway company, and agreed to accept the benefits of the society in lieu of any claims under the Employers' Liability Act. The rules of the society provided for compensation on a stated scale in all cases of accidents not caused wilfully or by gross negligence on the part of the insured :—Held, that the contract was for the infant's benefit and binding on him. Per Kay, L.J. : The rule that an infant's contract is binding on him if for his benefit is not confined to contracts of apprenticeship or service. Clements v. L. & N. W. Ry., 63 L. J., Q. B. 837 ; [1894] 2 Q. B. 482 ; 9 R. 641 ; 70 L. T. 896 ; 42 W. R. 663 ; 58 J. P. 818—C. A.

Agreement by an infant with a railway company, in consideration of being allowed to travel on special terms, to waive all claims by himself, his executors, administrators, or relatives, for accident, injury, or loss to himself or his property on the railway even if occasioned by negligence of the company's servants, and to indemnify the company against any such claim :—Held, detrimental to the infant and not binding on him. Flower v. L. & N. W. Ry., 63 L. J., Q. B. 547 ; [1894] 2 Q. B. 65 ; 9 R. 494 ; 70 L. T. 829 ; 42 W. R. 519—C. A.

Injunction to restrain Breach.]—An infant contracted to serve at a salary, and agreed that for two years after leaving service he would not serve any of his master's customers :—Held, that this contract was beneficial to the infant, and could be enforced by injunction against him, and that s. 1 of the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, did not apply. Fellows v. Wood, 59 L. T. 513 ; 52 J. P. 822.

An infant, in consideration of his being employed by the plaintiff, agreed not to carry on a similar business within certain limits as to place and time :—Held, to be a contract for the benefit of the infant, and enforceable by injunction. Fellows v. Wood (supra) followed. Evans v. v. Ware, 62 L. J., Ch. 256 ; [1892] 3 Ch. 502 ; 3 R. 32 ; 67 L. T. 285. And see Capes v. Hutton, supra, col. 1332.

To take Shares in Company—Payment—Repudiation of Contract—Right to Repayment.]—Shares in a company were on the application of an infant, and payment in respect thereof, allotted to her and her name was placed on the register of members. She afterwards repudiated the contract, and her name was removed from the register :—Held, that there was a total failure of consideration, and that the infant was therefore entitled to the repayment of the money. Corpe v. Overton (supra, col. 1337) applied. Hamilton v. Vaughan-Sherrin Electrical Engineering Co., 63 L. J., Ch. 795 ; [1894] 3 Ch. 589 ; 8 R. 750 ; 71 L. T. 325 ; 43 W. R. 126.

f. Ratification.

i. Before 37 & 38 Vict. c. 62.

Soon after Majority.]—Protection in respect of infancy continued after majority until proper information has been obtained. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 69 ; 19 R. R. 155.

Note of hand obtained from an infant just come of age, for extravagant supplies previously made, set aside under circumstances. Brooke v. Gally, 2 Atk. 34 ; Barnard. 1.

Although the court has no jurisdiction generally over the acts of persons of full age, who, however, recently had been wards of the court ; yet, if the act was the completion of a treaty entered into during minority without the sanction of the court, the court has power to control that. Donne, In re, 2 Moll. 490.

Debt.]—If an infant who contracted a debt during his minority confirms it after he comes of age, it will bind him though voidable at his election. Smith v. French, 2 Atk. 245.

Voidable Deed.]—The deed of an infant which takes effect by delivery is voidable only, and not void. Allen v. Allen, 2 Dr. & War. 307 ; 1 Con. & L. 427 ; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 472.

A voidable deed is valid until some act is done to avoid it, and it lies upon those who claim in opposition to the deed to show that such act has been done. Ib.

Case in which a deed executed by a tenant for life and his eldest son, an infant tenant in quasi tail in remainder, was held to have been rendered a valid bar by subsequent dealings of the son with the property. Ib.

Bond with Penalty.]—Action on a bond with a penalty :—Held, an infant cannot give a bond with a penalty for the payment of interest ; and unless he is estopped by some act at full age of as high authority as the bond, he can avoid it. Baylis v. Dineley, 3 M. & S. 477. And see Fisher v. Mowbray, 8 East, 330.

Account Stated.]—An account stated by an infant is not absolutely void, but voidable only, and may be ratified by him after attaining his majority ; and if he does so ratify it, an action may be maintained thereon. Williams v. Moore, 11 M. & W. 256 ; 2 D. (N.S.) 993 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 253 ; 7 Jur. 817.

Knowledge of Person Ratifying.]—An infant on coming of age may ratify securities given by him during his minority without receiving any further consideration, but he must, on the occasion, have full knowledge and complete information respecting the transaction. Kay v. Smith, 21 Beav. 522.

The promise sufficient to bind an infant after his attaining full age must be given voluntarily, and with knowledge that he was discharged by his nonage. Harmer v. Killing, 5 Esp. 102.

Sufficiency.]—A written promise to pay a debt contracted during infancy is sufficient, although it neither contains the name of the creditor, the amount due, nor the date ; and parol evidence is admissible to supply these particulars. Hartley v. Wharton, 3 P. & D. 529 ; 11 A. & E. 934 ; 9 L. J., Q. B. 209 ; 4 Jur. 576.

Any written instrument signed by the party which in the case of adults would have amounted to the adoption of the act of a party acting as agent, will, in the case of an infant who has attained his majority, amount to a ratification. Harris v. Wall, 1 Ex. 122 ; 16 L. J., Ex. 270.

A recognition when of full age of a debt contracted in infancy, and a promise to pay it "as a debt of honour" when of ability, is not such "a ratification of the contract made during infancy" as is required by 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 5, to charge the party. Macord v. Osborne, 45 L. J., C. P. 727 ; 1 C. P. D. 568 ; 35 L. T. 164 ; 25 W. R. 9.

—— Bill of Exchange.]—A defendant, whilst an infant, accepted a bill of exchange. After the defendant came of age he wrote to the plaintiff as follows : "Has L. ever paid you interest on the bill? Answer by return of post." Subsequently the defendant wrote the following letter :—"Your brother tells me that you are very uneasy about the bill. Pray make yourself easy about it, as I will take care it is paid" :—Held, per Parke and Alderson, BB., that there was no ratification by the defendant of the contract made during infancy. Platt and Martin, BB., dissentiente. Mowson v. Blane, 10 Ex. 206 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 342 ; 2 W. R. 588.

—— Goods Sold.]—To support a ratification of a debt for goods sold and delivered a copy of the items of the account was put in, at the foot of which the defendant, after he came of age, had written :—"Particulars of account to end of 1867, amounting to 162*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, I certify to be correct and satisfactory," with his signature :—Held, not a sufficient recognition to satisfy 9 Geo. 4, c. 12, s. 5. Rowe v. Hopwood, 38 L. J., Q. B. 1 ; L. R. 4 Q. B. 1 ; 19 L. T. 261 ; 17 W. R. 28.

—— Shares.]—An infant applied for shares which were allotted to him, but he never paid any money in respect of them. After he came of age the company was ordered to be wound up, and he then executed a transfer :—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of his having ratified the contract after coming of age. Constantinople and Alexandria Hotels Co., In re, Ebbetts, Ex parte, 39 L. J., Ch. 679 ; L. R. 5 Ch. 302 ; 22 L. T. 424 ; 18 W. R. 394.

—— Continued Employment.] — An infant entered into service and covenanted not to carry on the same trade, and after he came of age he continued in the same service for eighteen months :—Held, that this amounted to a ratification of the contract in equity, and an injunction was granted. Cornwall v. Hawkins, 41 L. J., Ch. 435 ; 26 L. T. 607 ; 20 W. R. 653.

An infant entered into a contract with the plaintiff to serve him for five years : he served for some time, but shortly after attaining his majority he gave him notice by letter to quit :—Held, that continuing in service after he became of age, and then giving notice of his intention to quit, was not a sufficient ratification in writing, with 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 5. Birkin v. Forth, 33 L. T. 532.

Receiver's Accounts.]—Receiver's accounts which had been passed, ordered to be received on application of the person, late a minor, who had attained his age. Wildridge v. M'Kane, 2 Moll. 545.

Settlement — Partial Confirmation.]—Partial accession at the age of twenty-one, to a settlement by a female, an election to abide by the whole. Milner v. Harewood (Lord), 18 Ves. 277.

Bankrupt's Commission.]—Bankrupt praying to supersede his commission on the ground of infancy left to his action, having traded two years as an adult, and the creditors resisting. Watson, Ex parte, 16 Ves. 265.

Payment to Agent.]—The guardian of an infant sold part of his estates for the redemption of the land tax ; the vendee paid the purchase money to the agent of the vendor, who was also agent for the vendee, and the conveyance was executed ; but the agent did not pay the money into the bank as required by 38 Geo. 3, c. 60. The purchaser entered and continued in possession for many years, paying the land tax. Nearly twenty years after attaining his age, the heir-at-law brought an ejectment against the purchaser, to restrain which, and obtain a confirmation of the contract, the purchaser filed his bill. The court dismissed the bill without costs. Hicks v. Morant, 3 Y. & J. 286. Affirmed, 2 Dow. & Cl. 414 ; 5 Bli. (N.S.) 643.

Lease.]—R. devised lands and houses to infant children. The guardian demised the premises on a building lease for forty-one years. The eldest son joined in the lease, and covenanted that the rest, when of age, should confirm it. They all attained twenty-one, and accepted the rent for ten years after the youngest came of age, and then brought ejectments against the lessees, who prayed to have the lease established, which was decreed. Smith v. Low, 1 Atk. 489.

—— Mortgage.]—Where a party takes a lease of an infant's lands, and the infant on coming of age mortgages the property to the lessee, by deed, referring to the lease, this is a confirmation of the lease. Story v. Johnson, 2 Y. & C. 586.

Receipt—Release to Trustees.]—A legatee, on coming of age, signed a receipt for principal, and an acknowledgment and discharge for the dividends, as having been paid to her father for her maintenance. Six months afterwards she was paid her share of her estate, and executed a formal release to the trustee :—Held, that she could not maintain a suit against the trustee for the dividends paid to the father. Aveline v. Melhuish, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 788 ; 12 W. R. 1020—L.JJ.

Employment of Attorney.]—A continued employment of an attorney by an infant client, after the latter comes of age, may amount to an undertaking to pay a prior bill of costs. Guy v. Burgess, 1 Smith, 117.

Devise to pay Debts.]—One borrows money during his infancy, and applies it to the buying of necessaries, and afterwards coming of age devises lands for payment of his debts, this debt is within the trust. Marlow v. Pitfield, 1 P. Wms. 558.

Incomplete Contract.]—If goods are delivered to a carrier by the vendor addressed to the purchaser, while the latter is under twenty-one, but they do not reach him till he has attained that age, infancy is a good defence for the price of the goods. Griffin v. Langfield, 3 Camp. 254.

Fine on Admittance of Infant Copyholder.]—A lord of a manor may maintain an action against an infant copyholder when he comes of age, for a fine on his admittance during his nonage. Evelyn v. Chichester, 3 Burr. 1717.

Pleading and Proof]—Where a defendant pleads infancy, and the replication avers a ratification by a promise in writing when he was of age, the plaintiff has merely to prove the promise, and not that the defendant was of age when he made it ; it lies on the defendant to prove that he was not then of age. Hartley v. Wharton, 3 P. & D. 529 ; 11 A. & E. 934 ; 9 L. J., Q. B. 209 ; 4 Jur. 576.

A promise made by a defendant after the commencement of the action is not sufficient to sustain a replication that he had ratified the contract after he came of age. Thornton v. Illingworth, 4 D. & R. 545 ; 2 B. & C. 824 ; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 175.

A replication that the defendant since the making of the promises attained twenty-one, and that before the commencement of the suit he ratified and confirmed the promises, is good after verdict, though it omits to allege that he ratified and confirmed after he came of age. Cohen v. Armstrong, 1 M. & S. 724.

If a plaintiff replies a new promise after full age, and the evidence is of a promise to pay when the party is able, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant was of ability ; but it is sufficient to give evidence of ability from ostensible circumstances and appearance in the world. Cole v. Saxby, 3 Esp. 159.

Set-off.]—Upon the true construction of 2 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 13, and 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 5, a set-off cannot be maintained of a debt contracted by a person during infancy and not ratified by him in writing after attaining majority. Rawley v. Rawley, 45 L. J., Q. B. 675 ; 1 Q. B. D. 460 ; 35 L. T. 191 ; 24 W. R. 995—C. A.

ii. Since 37 & 38 Vict. c. 62.

Contracts before, Ratification after, Act.]—Sect. 2 of the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, applies to ratifications made after passing of the act of contracts made before that time. Kibble, Ex parte, Onslow, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 63 ; L. R. 10 Ch. 373 ; 32 L. T. 138 ; 23 W. R. 433.

Bill of Exchange.]—An action is maintainable by an indorsee for value against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, accepted by the latter after attaining twenty-one years of age, for a debt contracted during infancy, and after the passing of the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, though not in respect of necessaries. Belfast Banking Co. v. Doherty, 4 L. R. Ir. 124.

—— Compromise of Action.]—The defendant during infancy became, jointly with two others, indebted to a firm of brokers, who brought an action against them after the defendant had attained his majority to recover the amount of the debt. The action was compromised on the terms that the defendant should give two acceptances for 50*l.* each. One of the bills given by the defendant to the brokers was indorsed by the latter to the plaintiff, who had acted as their solicitor, and who took the bill with notice of the circumstances under which it was given :—Held, that the transaction merely amounted to a promise made by the defendant after full age to pay a debt contracted during infancy, or to a ratification made by him after full age of a promise or contract made during infancy ; and was, therefore, avoided by s. 2 of the Infants' Relief Act, 1874. Smith v. King, [1892] 2 Q. B. 543 ; 67 L. T. 420 ; 40 W. R. 542 ; 56 J. P. 775.

Restraint of Trade—Breach.]—In 1886 an infant entered the plaintiffs' service and agreed in writing, under a penalty, not to solicit their customers after the expiration of his service ; in 1887 he attained twenty-one, and remained in their service until 1892, he then left and committed a breach of the agreement not to solicit their customers :—Held, that it must be inferred from the conduct of the parties that a new contract was entered into after the defendant attained twenty-one containing the terms of the written agreement, and that an injunction ought to be granted. Brown v. Harper, 3 R. 585 ; 68 L. T. 488.

New Promise.]—An infant executed mortgages to secure 500*l.* and interest. After attaining majority a reconveyance was executed to him of the property and a fresh mortgage to secure the original 500*l.*, and a further advance of 50*l.* was made to the same mortgagee, and he thereby covenanted for payment of the 550*l.* and interest :—Held, that this mortgage was a fresh promise for good consideration, and therefore valid and binding. Foulkes, In re, Foulkes v. Hughes, 3 R. 682 ; 69 L. T. 183.

Payment of Purchase-Money.]—In May, 1882, an infant purchased a plot of land from the trustees of a building society of which he was a member. In July of that year he came of full age. For four and a half years he paid monthly instalments of the purchase money :—Held, that he had ratified the contract, and was liable. Whittingham v. Murdy, 60 L. T. 956.

Promise to Marry.]—The Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62) s. 2, applies to a promise of marriage. Coxhead v. Mullis, 47 L. J., C. P. 761 ; 3 C. P. D. 439 ; 39 L. T. 349 ; 27 W. R. 136.

In July, 1875, the plaintiff and defendant (both being then under the age of twenty-one) mutually agreed to marry one another. The engagement continued until March, 1879, when (both having attained the age of twenty-one) the plaintiff fixed the wedding-day for the 5th of June, to which the defendant assented, but ultimately he broke his promise :—Held, by Denman and Lindley, JJ., that when the wedding-day was fixed there was a fresh promise made after the defendant came of age, and upon a good consideration. By Lord Coleridge, C.J., that it was a mere ratification of the original promise. Ditcham v. Worrall, 49 L. J., C. P. 688 ; 5 C. P. D. 410 ; 43 L. T. 286 ; 29 W. R. 59 ; 44 J. P. 799.

The defendant during his infancy made an offer of marriage to the plaintiff, which she accepted. The day after he came of age he saw the plaintiff, and told her his father agreed to the engagement,—adding, "Now I may and will marry you as soon as I can" :—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to say whether this was a fresh absolute promise to marry, or merely a ratification of the original promise made during infancy. Northcote v. Doughty, 4 C. P. D. 385.

The plaintiff and defendant (both under age) became engaged to be married in 1886. In September, 1886, the defendant came of age. In October, 1886, the plaintiff's father made an assignment of his property to his creditors, and immediately afterwards informed the defendant of the fact, and told him if he wished to be released from his engagement he could. The defendant then refused to be released, and said he was quite willing to marry the plaintiff, and asked her whether she thought they were old enough ; to which the plaintiff replied they had better wait awhile :—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury that there had been a new promise to marry made by the defendant after he came of age. Holmes v. Brierley, 36 W. R. 795—C. A.

B. WARD OF COURT.

1. JURISDICTION.

a. Extent of.

In General.]—As to the jurisdiction of court of king's bench over infants. De Manneville v. De Manneville, 10 Ves. 59 ; 7 R. R. 340.

Right of Crown.]—The court acts for the protection of infants by virtue of a general right delegated by the crown, as pater patriæ, to interfere for the benefit of persons incapable to protect themselves. Butler v. Freeman, Amb. 302.

The right which the king has as pater patriæ to take care of his subjects in cases of charities, idiots, lunatics, and infants, falls under the direction of the court of chancery. Eyre v. Shaftesbury (Countess), 2 P. Wms. 118.

Crimes.]—The court of chancery has no jurisdiction to prevent crimes, except in the protection of infants. Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 413 ; 19 R. R. 87.

Distinction between the general jurisdiction of the court of chancery, in case of an infant, and that of the lord chancellor under a special commission in lunacy. Phillips, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 122 ; 12 R. R. 151.

Infant of Unsound Mind.]—The jurisdiction of the court over its infant ward is not taken away by any physical or mental disability to which the infant may be subject, and such directions may be given as to his treatment, whether in a lunatic asylum or not, as the court considers to be most for his benefit. Edwards, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 233; 10 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 113; 27 W. R. 611—C. A.

Scotland.]—In cases relating to infants, the benefit of the infant is the foundation of the jurisdiction. On this subject there ought to be a perfect reciprocity of action between the courts of England and Scotland, although, as to judicial jurisdiction, the two countries are independent foreign countries. Stuart v. Bute (Marquis), 9 H. L. Cas. 440.

Minor's Solicitor.]—On petition in the matter of a minor, held that the court had not jurisdiction to enforce an agreement by which the minor's solicitor bound himself to give a lien on the costs which should become due to him as the minor's solicitor, the jurisdiction in the matter of a minor existing for the sole end of protecting the person and property of the minor. Leech, Ex parte, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 371.

Extra-judicial Directions.]—This court may give extra-judicial directions for an infant; as on a stranger's application and undertaking to pay costs. Pomfret v. Windsor, 2 Ves. Sen. 484.

Minors resident Abroad.] — The court of chancery has jurisdiction over the custody of the children of an English subject, though such children were born and are resident abroad. Hope v. Hope, 4 De G. M. & G. 328; 23 L. J., Ch. 682; 2 W. R. 698.

Foreign Minor.]—When an infant, a citizen of a foreign country, is sent to England, the court of chancery will carry out in all respects the orders of the courts of the foreign country in regard to the infant, so far as consistent with the laws of England. Di Savini v. Lousada, 22 L. T. 61; 18 W. R. 425.

Testamentary Guardians.]—Where testamentary guardians have been appointed, though the court cannot, upon petition, order their removal against their consent, yet the court has full jurisdiction, upon petition, to order the minors to be made wards of court. M'Culloch's, In re, Dr. 276; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 393.

Form of the order in such cases. Ib.

Habeas Corpus.]—A habeas corpus issued to bring up the body of a ward of court who had been taken in execution in an action by a tradesman for necessaries, and the tradesman was ordered to attend at the bar of the court at the same time. Bond v. Roberts, 13 Sim. 400.

b. How Created.

Filing Bill.]—Mere filing a bill is sufficient to make an infant a ward of the court. Butler v. Freeman, Amb. 303.

—— Infant in Scotland.]—The court has jurisdiction to appoint guardians to an infant, although his domicil and all his property are situated in Scotland, and the infant being made a ward of court by the mere filing of the bill, the court is bound to appoint guardians. Johnstone v. Beattie, 10 Cl. & F. 42; 7 Jur. 1023. Affirming 1 Ph. 17; 10 L. J., Ch. 300.

Order for Maintenance.]—An order for the maintenance of an infant made without suit constitutes the infant a ward of court. Graham, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 724; L. R. 10 Eq. 530; 22 L. T. 904; 18 W. R. 988.

Guardian.]—An order in chancery, on petition, constituting a guardian of an infant makes that infant a ward of court. Stuart v. Bute (Marquis), 9 H. L. Cas. 440.

Payment into Court.]—In an administration action to which an infant was not a party, moneys were paid in to her separate account:—Held, sufficient to constitute the infant a ward of court. De Pereda v. De Mancha, 51 L. J., Ch. 204; 19 Ch. D. 451; 30 W. R. 226.

A summons for the appointment of a guardian was taken out before the action, and no order was made, but an arrangement was made as to access to the infant. Semble, this was of itself sufficient to constitute the infant a ward of court. Ib.

—— Under Trustee Relief Act.]—The payment into court, under the Trustee Relief Act, of money belonging to an infant, renders the infant a ward of court. Benand, In re, 16 W. R. 538.

Money belonging absolutely to a minor having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and an order made upon petition under that act for her maintenance:—Held, that the infant was thereby made a ward of court. Hodges, In re, 3 K. & J. 213; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 860.

—— Legacy.]—The payment into court, under 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 32, of a legacy bequeathed to an infant does not constitute such infant a ward of court. Hillary, In re, 2 Dr. & Sm. 461; 12 L. T. 840; 13 W. R. 959.

—— Foreign Infants.]—A legacy had been paid into court to which, on the death of the tenant for life, two female infants, who were French subjects by birth, and resident in France, became absolutely entitled. They were both married, and by the French law their husbands were absolutely entitled to receive their shares:—Held, that the infants, not being subjects of, or domiciled, or resident in England, the court had a discretion as to whether or not they should be treated as wards of court, and that the money might therefore be paid out to the husbands. Brown v. Collins, 53 L. J., Ch. 368; 25 Ch. D. 56; 49 L. T. 329.

Whether, in any case, the mere fact that there is a fund in court to a share in which an infant is entitled makes the infant a ward of court, quære. De Pereda v. De Mancha (supra) doubted on this point. Ib.

Contingent Interest.]—A lady who was entitled to property upon attaining twenty-one or marriage married under age:—Held, that this contingent interest in property was sufficient to entitle her to be made a ward of court. Russell v. Nicholls, 16 L. J., Ch. 47.

Settlement.]—An infant being about to contract an improper marriage, his parent settled a small sum of money for his benefit, and on a bill filed for execution of the trusts of the settlement, an injunction was granted to restrain the marriage. Dawson v. Thompson, 12 L. T. 178.

Infant Plaintiff.]—An infant plaintiff is a ward of court without any order to that effect; and if she marries without the sanction of the court, her fund in court will not be paid out to her husband without a settlement. Gynn v. Gilbard, 1 Dr. & Sm. 356; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 91.

Infant Petitioner.]—Where land belonging to an infant is taken by a company, which pays the purchase money into court, and the infant petitions for investment and payment of dividends, this does not constitute her a ward of court. Brewer, Ex parte, Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth Ry., In re, 13 L. T. 207; 13 W. R. 959.

2. REMOVAL OUT OF JURISDICTION.

General Rule.]—Court will not make an order for taking infant out of jurisdiction. Mountstuart v. Mountstuart, 6 Ves. 363.

Wards of the court not to be removed out of the jurisdiction. Lyons v. Blenkin, Jacob, 265; 23 R. R. 38.

Order for the father of the wards of the court to be at liberty to take them abroad. Ib.

Clandestine Removal.]—The clandestine removal of a ward of court from the custody of the person with whom such ward has been residing, under the authority of the court, is in its nature a criminal contempt. Wellesley v. Beaufort (Duke), 2 Russ. & M. 639.

Ward Enlisting.]—It is a contempt of court to remove an infant ward of court out of the jurisdiction, even where he has enlisted in the army without leave of the court, by sending him with the regiment on foreign service. Harrison v. Goodall, Kay, 310.

Where an infant ward enlisted, and was about to be sent to the East Indies, the court ordered a habeas corpus to be issued to the sergeant in whose charge he was, and on the return of the writ made an order that he should not be removed out of the jurisdiction without leave of the court; and the former order having been duly served, ordered that the infant should be discharged and delivered over to his guardian. Rochford v. Hackman, Kay, 308; 23 L. J., Ch. 261; 2 Eq. R. 223; 2 W. R. 205.

Ne exeat regno.]—If a child were grown up, and about to leave the kingdom, the prerogative might, by ne exeat regno, prevent him; and if gone, might by great or privy seal call on him to return, and if not obeyed, take his property. De Manneville v. De Manneville, 10 Ves. 63; 7 R. R. 343.

As to the jurisdiction of K. B. over infants, 10 Ves. 59; 7 R. R. 343.

No affidavit is necessary to obtain an order that child, a ward of court, shall not be taken out of the jurisdiction, even to Scotland. S. C., 10 Ves. 56; 7 R. R. 342.

Leave to take Ward.]—Where a resident in Jamaica left two infant children who lived with their mother there till they came over to be educated in England, accompanied by the mother, who now wished to return permanently, and to take with her the daughter aged twenty years and three months, the son, who was apprenticed, remaining in England. The children were wards of court, and the mother had been appointed by the court sole guardian:—Held, that leave may be given to take a ward out of the jurisdiction without a case of necessity being shown, the court having only to be satisfied that the step is for the benefit of the ward, and that there is sufficient security that future orders will be obeyed. Leave was accordingly given upon a relative resident in England being appointed guardian along with the mother. Callaghan, In re, Elliott v. Lambert, 54 L. J., Ch. 292; 28 Ch. D. 186; 52 L. T. 7; 33 W. R. 157—C. A.

—— On Medical Grounds.]—The court will not make an order, permitting its infant wards to be removed out of the jurisdiction, with a view to their residing permanently abroad, except in a case of imperative necessity; as, where it is clearly proved that a constant residence in a warmer climate is absolutely essential to their health. Such an order should contain an undertaking to bring them within the jurisdiction when required. Campbell v. Mackay, 2 Mont. & C. 31.

It appearing that an infant ward of the court had been sent abroad, in consequence of the advice of medical men that the infant's removal to a milder climate was necessary for his health, the court granted a reference to approve of a plan for the infant's maintenance and education out of the jurisdiction, but limited the allowance to be made to one year. Wyndham v. Enismore (Lord), 1 Keen, 467.

An infant allowed to be taken out of the jurisdiction, upon the guardian entering into a recognisance, it being for the benefit of the infant that this should be done. Medley, In re, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 339.

Form of recognisance in such case. Ib.

—— On Short Visit.]—Order made that an infant ward of court might be at liberty to go abroad for a short period to visit his father, on satisfactory security being given that he would be restored to the jurisdiction within a limited time. Biggs v. Terry, 1 Myl. & Cr. 675.

Foreign University.]—An infant allowed to be placed at the University of Dublin under special circumstances. Lethem v. Hall, 7 Sim. 141.

Father Bankrupt.]—An undischarged bankrupt about to emigrate to Manitoba, where he would obtain an allotment of land, proposed to take his sons with him. The eldest was in government employment. The infants were wards of court:—Held, that, an uncle having undertaken to provide for the maintenance of the eldest son so long as he remained in the government employment, it would not be for his benefit to accompany his father, and leave to take him out of the jurisdiction of the court was refused. Leave was given to take the other five sons, and to apply for leave to remove the eldest after the lapse of a year if he was successful in Manitoba. Plomley, In re, Vidler v. Collyer, 47 L. T. 283—C. A.

The action having been commenced for the purpose of making the infants wards of court in order to prevent their removal by their father, the onus of satisfying the court of the impropriety of so removing them was on the persons who sought to restrain their removal. Ib.

Compelling Removal.]—Although the court will, under special circumstances, allow an infant ward to go out of the jurisdiction, yet it will not compel the removal of an infant ward out of the jurisdiction. Dawson v. Jay, 3 De G. M. & G. 764.

3. CONCEALMENT.

Criminal Offence.]—The clandestine removal of a ward from the custody of the person with whom such ward has been residing, under the authority of the court, is a criminal contempt. Wellesley v. Beaufort (Duke), 2 Russ. & M. 639.

By Father.]—Father secreting infant to prevent his being served with subpœna, ordered to discover where infant was. Hockley v. Lukin, Dick. 353.

Guardian Appointed.]—A messenger who had been ordered to bring an infant defendant into court, to have a guardian assigned for putting in her answer, stated that the infant was secreted by her mother. The vice-chancellor ordered the senior clerk to be appointed guardian, without the infant being produced. Steed v. Caley, 7 Sim. 148; 4 L. J., Ch. 1.

Wife Absconding with Children.]—Where the wife's brother assisted her to abscond with infant children, an application by the husband that the brother might either produce the children or disclose the place of the concealment, was refused on an affidavit of the brother, that the children were not in his custody or under his control. Spence, In re, 2 Ph. 247; 16 L. J., Ch. 309; 11 Jur. 399.

Address known to Solicitor.]—When a party to a suit is in contempt, and his place of residence is unknown, an officer of the court, whether or not acting as a solicitor to the person must reveal his place of residence. Burton v. Darnley (Lord), 21 L. T. 292; 17 W. R. 1057.

—— Envelopes.]—The mother of wards concealed their residence and her own from the court, but wrote to her solicitor giving no address. The production of the envelopes was ordered. Ramsbotham v. Senior, L. R. 8 Eq. 575; 21 L. T. 293; 17 W. R. 1057.

Service of Subpœna.]—Where a mother secretes her children who are infants, service of a subpœna on her is sufficient. Smith v. Marshall, 2 Atk. 70.

Personal Attendance Ordered.]—The court has jurisdiction to summarily order the personal attendance of any persons supposed to be in a position to give information as to the place of concealment of wards. Such jurisdiction is based on the law which relates to the custody of infants. The court, in such cases, proceeds by order and not by subpœna. Rosenberg v. Lindo, 48 L. T. 478.

4. MARRIAGE.

a. Without Leave of Court.

Father alive.]—It is a contempt to marry a ward of the court without leave, though the father of the infant be living. Butler v. Freeman, Amb. 301.

Motion to Commit.] — A motion to commit for contempt in marrying an infant ward ought not to be made until the matter has been brought before the judge in chambers to consider whether it is for the infant's benefit. Brown v. Barrow, 48 L. T. 357.

How Punished.]—Punishment of contempt in marrying ward of court is discretionary, and not dispensed with from length of time. Rule as to settlement. Ball v. Coutts, 1 V. & B. 292.

Criminal Offence.]—Contempt in marrying ward, &c., is of criminal nature; therefore defendant in Marshalsea for debt cannot be charged in custody, but must be brought before court by habeas corpus. Brandon v. Knight, Dick. 160.

Indictment of Offender.]—Upon marriage of ward under flagrant circumstances, the clergyman was ordered to attend and reprimanded; the husband was committed and indicted. Being convicted, and having suffered the punishment, upon his petition he was discharged on executing a settlement. Millet v. Rowse, 7 Ves. 419.

Proceedings laid before Att.-Gen.]—Upon marriage of ward of court under flagrant circumstances, the clergyman and clerk were ordered to attend; though husband was committed, the court directed proceedings to be laid before attorney-general. Priestly v. Lamb, 6 Ves. 421.

—— Bribe.]—Affidavit of a bribe offered to assist in obtaining possession of a ward, ordered to be laid before the attorney-general. Wade v. Broughton, 3 V. & B. 172.

Marriage of a ward under gross circumstances, punishable by indictment, as a conspiracy. Ib.

Injunction.]—Injunction upon affidavit of an intended marriage with a male infant aged eighteen, restraining communication with him until further order; service of the order at the last place of abode, though apparently shut up, good service. Pearce v. Crutchfield, 14 Ves. 246.

Excommunication.]—The court will restrain a woman who has married a ward of the court from proceeding on an excommunication either against the infant or his guardian. Hill v. Turner, 1 Atk. 517.

Attempt to Marry.]—Abortive endeavour to marry a ward of court is a contempt. Parties concerned ordered to attend on an inquiry whether the marriage was valid, and upon the report a suit for nullity of marriage was ordered, and all the parties were restrained by injunction from all intercourse with the infant. Warter v. Yorke, 19 Ves. 451.

Settlement by Party in Contempt.]—Upon the marriage of a female ward, all parties concerned ordered to attend; and the husband committed, and restrained from receiving her visits. The husband after some time was permitted to propose a settlement, but Lord Chancellor refused to discharge him on his undertaking to execute the settlement. Bathurst v. Murray, 8 Ves. 74; 6 R. R. 230.

Generally, upon the marriage of a ward without leave, the marriage being found valid, the party in contempt having executed the settlement and paid the costs is discharged. Field v. Brown, 17 Beav. 146.

There must be a reference to the master for a proper settlement before contempt, for marrying a ward of court, can be cleared. Stevens v. Savage, 1 Ves. Jun. 154.

Appearance.]—Infant plaintiff, a ward of court, having married, proceedings stayed till husband shall appear. Brummell v. McPherson, 7 Ves. 237.

Upon marriage of ward both parties being foreigners, property abroad, and marriage in Scotland on same day bill was filed constituting her a ward, the court took jurisdiction, but did not commit the husband, but ordered him to attend from time to time, and to be at liberty to make proposals. Salles v. Savignon, 6 Ves. 572.

In case of ward of court, marriage, in fact, is sufficient to ground contempt. Ib.

Personal attendance of a person running off with and marrying a ward dispensed with on offering to go before the master and settle. Green v. Pritzler, Amb. 602.

Discharge from Prison.]—The court will not discharge a person committed for marrying an infant ward until a certificate produced of the due solemnisation of the marriage, and a proper settlement of the wife's property prepared and approved. Coæ v. Bennett, 31 L. T. 83; 22 W. R. 819.

Order not to Marry.]—Court took care of infant from her testamentary guardian, and ordered her not to marry without leave of court. Tombes v. Elers, Dick. 88.

—— Recognisance.]—Committee of an infant heiress gave a recognisance in this form, "That the infant shall not marry with the committee's privity without the consent of the court." Davis's case, 1 P. Wms. 698.

On this court committing the custody of an infant to the care of anyone, such committee enters into a recognisance that the infant shall not marry without leave of the court. Eyre v. Shaftsbury (Countess), 2 P. Wms. 112.

Notice that Infant is Ward.]—Marrying an infant ward is a contempt, though the parties concerned had no notice the infant was a ward of court. Herbert's case, 3 P. Wms. 116.

Acts of the court, as the commitment of a wardship, and in a cause depending, are to be taken notice of by everyone at his peril. Ib.

—— Petition.]—Commitment for eloping with a ward of the court, and against another person for assisting; ignorance that she was a ward of court not admitted as an excuse. The parties under commitment cannot be heard except on petition. Nicholson v. Squire, 16 Ves. 259, a.

—— Giving away the Bride.]—The giving away a ward at her marriage as the father is a ceremony always required, and therefore the person who did it is liable to be committed. More v. More, 2 Atk. 157.

To make persons liable to a contempt, they must be concerned in original contrivance, and apprised of her being a ward of court. Ib.

Evidence.]—In cases relating to clandestine marriages, hearsay evidence and declarations are no defective proof, but have weight with the court, especially when uncontradicted by anything on the other side. Beard v. Travers, 1 Ves. Sen. 313.

Any person may make application on behalf of an infant, though a mere stranger. Ib.

Consent of Guardian.]—Under what circumstances the court will control the consent of a guardian to the marriage of an infant ward; and will refuse to confirm a master's report, approving of proposals for a settlement. Gordon (Lord) v. Irwin (Viscountess), 4 Bro. P. C. 355.

b. Settlements on.

i. In general.

Right of Husband.]—Husband is entitled to the income of his wife's equitable interest, unless he has received some fortune with her, or has run away with a ward. Macaulay v. Philips, 4 Ves. 16.

Reference to Master.]—When infants under the care of the court are upon a treaty of marriage, the court refers it to a master to see whether the settlement proposed is proper, and if improper the court will not give the infant leave to marry. Smith v. Smith, 3 Atk. 304.

A mother petitioned that an infant ward should be restrained from marrying her daughter:—Ordered, that his guardian should not permit it without leave of the court. Ib.

Lately a Ward of Court.]—On the petition of a wife, lately a ward, who had married on the day after she attained twenty-one, the court directed the transfer of stock to her, to which she was entitled to her separate use, notwithstanding that, in contemplation of marriage, an order had been made for the settlement of the fund. Sams v. Cronin, Reed, Ex parte, 29 L. T. 885; 22 W. R. 204.

Ward married the day after she came of age: after marriage a settlement was made, but wife never confirmed the same in court. Settlement after husband's death was set aside as not approved of by the court, and as a surprise on the wife. Long v. Long, 2 Sim. & S. 119.

Where a female infant had been made a ward, and, in contemplation of her marriage, terms for the settlement of her property and that of her intended husband had been approved by the master, and his approval confirmed by the court, it was not competent, by delaying the marriage till after her majority, and entering into fresh settlements, to defeat the settlement of the court. Hobson v. Ferraby, 2 Coll. C. C. 412.

—— Undertaking of Proposed Husband].—Permission was obtained by a suitor, undertaking to abide by the orders of the court, to pay his addresses to a ward with a view to proposals to the court for marriage. The ward waited until she came of age before marrying, and then settled her property in favour of the proposed husband:—Held, that the undertaking was only intended to last so long as the ward was under the control of the court, and that the court had no jurisdiction to prohibit the marriage or to determine the form of the settlement. Bolton v. Bolton, 60

Real Estate.]—The court has no jurisdiction to compel a settlement of the real estate of a ward of court, so as to bind the inheritance, even where the marriage is a contempt of court, and the estate of the ward is only equitable. Field v. Moore, 7 De G. M. & G. 691; 25 L. J., Ch. 66; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 4 W. R. 187.

Where, therefore, an infant ward having married without consent, a settlement of her real estate was directed by the court, and such settlement, in pursuance of an order of the court made after she came of age, was executed by her and all other necessary parties, but was not acknowledged by her under the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74):—Held, that the estate was not bound by the settlement. Ib.

A female infant cannot contract, nor can her parents or guardians for her, for a power of appointment to her over her real estate; nor has the court any greater power to contract for its infant wards as to their real estate. Ib.

Jurisdiction to Order Settlement to be Executed.]—The court has no jurisdiction to make an order in invitum against a male infant ward of court to execute a settlement which will have the effect of depriving him of his own property. The power which the court possesses of committing an infant to prison for contempt does not give it power to force him to execute a settlement whether he wishes it or not. Leigh, In re, Leigh v. Leigh, 58 L. J., Ch. 306; 40 Ch. D. 290; 60 L. T. 404; 37 W. R. 241—C. A.

No means of enforcing a settlement on marriage of an adult, unless the husband seeks to obtain her property in court; but, if the marriage is a contempt, the court compels a settlement. Ball v. Coutts, 1 V. & B. 300.

The mere fact of marriage with a female ward without the court's consent, confers upon the court a jurisdiction to decline, during the joint lives of husband and wife, to part with a fund in its custody belonging to the ward, even upon the application of the husband and wife, until a proper settlement should have been made thereof. Martin v. Forster, 7 De G. M. & G. 98; 24 L. J., Ch. 519; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 337; 3 Eq. R. 555; 3 W. R. 339.

Quære, whether in such a case it would be in the power of the court to enforce a settlement against the wishes both of the wife and husband. Ib.

In 1839 A. B. married a ward without sanction:—Held, in 1852, that the court possessed the same power over the parties which it would have had on an application shortly after the marriage, subject, nevertheless, to the due protection of the rights and interests of persons who have come into esse since that period. Cave v. Cave, 15 Beav. 227.

Reversionary Interest in Personalty.]—The Infants' Settlement Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 43) removed the disability of infancy only. In 1862 an infant ward married without sanction. An inquiry as to her fortune having been directed, a post-nuptial settlement was executed by her in 1863, with the approval of the vice-chancellor, whereby she settled a reversionary interest in personalty. The testator having died before Malins' Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 57) came into force, that act had no application. During coverture the wife recognised the settlement by various acts, and after a dissolution of the marriage the reversionary interest fell into possession:—Held, that neither the sanction of the court nor the effect of that act could make the settlement of the wife's reversionary interest in personalty binding upon her; that no acts of acquiescence and confirmation could have that effect, and that she was entitled to a transfer of the property. Seaton v. Seaton, 57 L. J., Ch. 661; 13 App. Cas. 61; 58 L. T. 565; 36 W. R. 865—H. L. (E.)

Trustees—Form of Settlement.]—S. having married a ward, in contempt, was committed, and a settlement was prepared by the court of the wife's property, giving S. no interest, and containing a power of appointment by will to the wife in default of children in favour of anyone except her husband. The wife objected to the trustees named on personal grounds, and objected also to the power of appointment excluding her husband:—Held, that, as the proposed trustees were personally distasteful to the wife, it was desirable to substitute others for them. That it would be conducive to the happiness of the husband and wife that the wife should not be debarred in default of children from appointing anything to her husband, and the settlement was therefore altered in those respects. Ib.

Disentailing Assurance—Omitted Property—Mistake.]—A public body took, under compulsory powers, certain freeholds at A. to a moiety of which a female ward was entitled in tail, and they paid the purchase moneys into court. Before the marriage of the ward a settlement was prepared purporting to bar the infant's entail in certain properties and to vest them in trustees of the settlement. Amongst the properties so specified were included by inadvertence the freeholds at A. This settlement was sanctioned by the court, and was carried out in 1884 by a disentailing deed, and a deed of declaration of trust, both of which were approved by the court. The freehold property at A. was included in the parcels to the disentailing deed, but no mention of the purchase money was made, either in the proposals or in the deeds; and the disentailing deed contained no covenant for further assurances, or for the settlement of other or after-acquired property. After marriage the lady on attaining twenty-one, disentailed the fund in court, and claimed it as her absolute property under the Married Women's Property Act:—Held, that the disentailing deed of 1884 was not effectual to bar the estate tail of the lady in the fund in court; yet inasmuch as both the marriage and the settlement were sanctioned by the court upon a representation of the lady that she was entitled in tail to a moiety of the property, she was bound in equity to make good such representation, notwithstanding her infancy at the time, and that having disentailed the fund in court, and thus become the only person who could claim any interest in it, she was precluded from setting up any title adverse to that of the plaintiffs as trustees of the settlement, and that one moiety of such fund ought to be transferred to and held by them upon the trusts of the settlement. Mills v. Fox, 57 L. J., Ch. 56; 37 Ch. D. 153; 57 L. T. 792; 36 W. R. 219.

Misunderstanding.]—A settlement of personal property belonging to a ward was made on her marriage and approved by the court. On an affidavit by the wife that she had misunderstood the settlement, the court declared that she was entitled absolutely to the fund. Smith v. Iliffe, 44 L. J., Ch. 755; L. R. 20 Eq. 666; 33 L. T. 200; 23 W. R. 851.

Dissolution of Marriage.]—On the marriage of a female ward her fortune, consisting of choses in action, was settled, with the sanction of the court. The marriage was dissolved by act of parliament, after which the husband released all his right and interest under the settlement to the wife:—Held, that the settlement was not binding on the wife, and that she was at liberty to resettle her property on her second marriage. Hastings v. Orde, 11 Sim. 205.

Settlement not Executed.]—A ward of court was married under age, and without consent, which marriage was subsequently annulled. Upon her coming of age, the husband petitioned to make proposals for a settlement, and to have a legal marriage celebrated, undertaking to execute such settlement as the court should direct. The master approved of a draft settlement, but the chancellor declined making any order as to the execution of this settlement, the amount of the property not being ascertained. A second marriage having been celebrated, there was issue thereof two children. The wife subsequently eloped:—Held, that the children had no right, during the life of their mother, to be maintained out of her separate estate. Hodgens v. Hodgens, 4 Cl. & F. 323; 11 Bli. (N.S.) 62; Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 533.

Held, also, that the proposed settlement, though not executed, having been acted upon by the court by different orders, could not be varied. Ib.

Order of Court.]—Upon the petition for the settlement on marriage of a fund belonging to an infant paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the court declined to embody a settlement in the order itself, on the ground that part of the property consisted of leaseholds. Benand, In re, 16 W. R. 538.

Where a ward of court married without consent, and subsequently became entitled to property in the hands of the court, the court will order it to be carried to a separate account, and, with a view to save expense, may direct it to be inserted in the order that the fund shall be settled on the wife for her separate use. Thorp v. Owen, 2 Sm. & Gif. 90; 2 Eq. Rep. 392; 23 L. J., Ch. 286; 18 Jur. 641; 2 W. R. 208.

—— Small Fund.]—The terms of a settlement of a small fund belonging to a ward embodied in the order directing it to be settled. Wright v. King, 18 Beav. 461.

Costs—Payment out of Corpus.]—The costs of a settlement of the property of a female ward of court, made upon her marriage with the sanction of the court, were ordered to be paid out of the corpus of the settled property. Anon. (4 Russ. 473) followed. De Staepoole v. De Staepoole, 57 L. J., Ch. 463; 37 Ch. D. 139; 58 L. T. 382; 36 W. R. 320.

The husband's costs of making a settlement on a female ward who had been married without consent were allowed, he having no property, and there being no great misconduct on his part. Anon., 4 Russ. 473; 28 R. R. 155.

ii. Form and Limitations of.

In General.]—Form of proposals for a settlement upon marriage of infant ward of court. Healy, In re, 1 Con. & L. 393.

The form of an order given to a male infant to marry, after reference to the master to consider if the proposed match were proper, and to approve of articles. Plymouth (Earl) v. Lewis, Dick. 801.

Form of settlement on ward under direction of court. Millet v. Rowse, 7 Ves. 419.

Husband Excluded.]—The almost invariable modern practice in the case of a marriage with a ward without consent is to exclude the husband altogether from taking any interest in her property. Wade v. Hopkinson, 19 Beav. 613.

Where a husband has married a ward without consent, the ward's interest alone is to be consulted in framing the settlement, unless protection against the husband can be accomplished without prejudice to the ward. A settlement approved where, in default of issue, a power of appointment by will was given to the wife, and, in default of issue or such appointment, to go to her next-of-kin; and in the event of her surviving her husband, and having no children, that it should be at her own disposal; and in the event of her marrying again, a power of appointing to each child of the second marriage a sum not exceeding that given to each child of the first. Birkett v. Hibbert, 3 Myl. & K. 227; Coop. t. Brough. 459; 3 L. J., Ch. 158. See Bathurst v. Murray, 8 Ves. 74.

A. married a ward without consent, and had been guilty of great contumacy. The court directed the ward's fortune to be settled so as to exclude A. from taking any interest in it. Burgess v. Kent, or Burgees v. Kent, 11 Sim. 361; 10 L. J., Ch. 100; 5 Jur. 166.

Upon a marriage with a ward under gross circumstances a settlement giving the husband, on surviving her, a life interest was rejected, and the court refused to pay out of the accumulation his debts contracted in the maintenance of his wife and children. Chassaing v. Parsonage, 5 Ves. 15.

—— Children.]—Even where there is no contempt or misconduct, the children can only be entitled under and after their mother; they have no independent right; and where there is a contempt, the husband is excluded as against the wife altogether, and generally as against the children also. Walker, In re, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 327. S. C., Hodgens v. Hodgens, 4 Cl. & F. 323; 11 Bli. (N.S.) 627; Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 533.

In cases of contempt, the rule is to exclude the husband entirely from the wife's property. But where the contempt is not very flagitious a portion is sometimes, though rarely, given to the husband during coverture. Id.

—— Account.]—Under a settlement of a female ward, the husband having been committed and prosecuted, and having released all right and interest in the residue, was thereby deprived of all further interest; and not permitted to attend the account directed against the executors. Pearce v. Crutchfield, 16 Ves. 48.

Future Marriage.]—Upon a settlement under a commitment for marrying a ward, a power was inserted, enabling the wife to settle the interest of a moiety of her fortune upon any future husband for life; the husband on undertaking to execute the settlement was discharged. Winch v. James, 4 Ves. 386.

In a settlement on the marriage of a female ward, provision must be made for the children of a future marriage. Rudge v. Winnall, 11 Beav. 98; 17 L. J., Ch. 215.

Proposal for settlement on marriage of female ward disapproved, as not providing sufficiently for the event of a future husband and children. Halsey v. Halsey, 9 Ves. 471.

Upon the clandestine marriage of a female ward a settlement was made giving wife power to appoint to children of second marriage a share not exceeding shares of each child by first marriage. Bathurst v. Murray, 8 Ves. 74; 6 R. R. 230. And see Stevens v. Savage, 1 Ves. Jun. 154; Birkett v. Hibbert, supra, col. 1366.

Upon the settlement of a ward who had married a man of no property, the court secured a provision for a future marriage. Wells v. Price, 5 Ves. 398.

Where Husband has Fortune.]—Distinction upon contempt by marriage of a ward. A person of no property, whose only object is the fortune, is not permitted to touch it; otherwise, when the husband, of equal rank and fortune, makes an equivalent settlement. Ball v. Coutts, 1 V. & B. 303.

A widower, with children, having a life income of 3,000*l.*, about to marry a ward having an income of 700*l.*, proposed to settle her own fortune on her. Proposal approved of. Blair v. Cuthberston, 13 Jur. 442.

Though the husband married an infant ward in contempt of the court, a settlement was made of her estate which made some provision for him. Baseley v. Baseley, 4 Cl. & F. 378, n.

Ward not Known to be Such.]—Where a ward of court married without leave, but the husband was ignorant that the infant was a ward, the court approved of a settlement under which the husband took a life interest after the wife's death in a moiety of her property, determinable on his marrying again, bankruptcy, or insolvency, and directed 500*l.* to be advanced to the husband on his bond. Richardson v. Merrifield, 4 De G. & Sm. 161.

The court, on a petition where the husband married in ignorance that she was a ward of court, settled her property on her for life, with remainder to her children; and with a power for the wife to appoint the property by will to her husband for his life. Wilkinson v. Joughin, 41 L. J., Ch. 234.

Husband Releasing his Rights.]—On the marriage of a female ward, her fortune (choses in action) was settled, with the sanction of the court, in trust for her husband and herself for their lives, with remainder for their children, with remainder for her absolutely if she survived her husband, but if not then as she should appoint by will, with remainder for her next of kin. The marriage, of which there was no issue, was dissolved. After this the husband released all his right and interest under the settlement to the wife:—Held, that the settlement was not binding on the wife, and that she was at liberty to re-settle her property on her second marriage. Hastings v. Orde, 11 Sim. 205.

Ward Coming of Age.]—Court retains jurisdiction over property of ward, after ward becomes of age, so long as property remains in court; and, if ward marries, will order proper settlement to be made, or reform an improper one, unless ward consents to settlement. Austen v. Halsey, 2 Sim. & S. 123, n.

Ward married day after she came of age. After the marriage, a settlement was made, but wife never confirmed the same in court. Settlement was, after husband's death, set aside as not approved of by the court, and as a surprise on wife. Long v. Long, 2 Sim. & S. 119.

—— Excluding Wife.]—The court has not jurisdiction to compel a male ward, married without its consent, on attaining his full age, to execute a settlement so as to exclude his wife. Murray, In re, 3 Dr. & War. 83; 2 Con. & L. 136; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 266.

Real Estate.]—Disinclination of the court to sanction the marriage of an infant ward, where it is impossible for him, by reason of his infancy, to settle his real estate so as to go along with his title, and to make provision for younger children. Honywood v. Honywood, 20 Beav. 451.

Leaseholds — Power of Sale.]—On the marriage of a female ward, entitled to a leasehold estate to her separate use, a settlement was made under the court, giving to the trustees a power of sale over the leasehold estate: a sale made by the trustees under the power, during the minority of the infant, is not valid. Simson v. Jones, 2 Russ. & M. 365; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 106.

Reference to Master.]—Husband and wife agreed to refer it to the master to approve of a proper settlement to be executed of a sum of 1,500*l.*, money in court, the property of the wife. The court would not adopt a settlement whereby 30*l.* per annum was given to the separate use of the wife for life; but a clause giving the principal of the money, in the event of there being no children, to the husband and wife moietively was allowed. Harpur v. Ball, 2 Jo. & Lat. 599. And see S. C., 8 Ir. Eq. R. 404, 580.

Tenant in Tail and for Life.]—T. B., entitled, under one will, to an estate tail, expectant on the death of two elder brothers without issue or recovery suffered, and entitled, under another will, to an estate for life, with a remote remainder in tail, proposes on his marriage with a ward, in case either limitation in his favour shall take effect, to charge the estate to which he shall become entitled with an addition of 8,000*l.* to the fortune of the younger children. The master settles the covenant in the marriage articles, "that in case he shall become seised of, or entitled to, all or any of the manors, hereditaments, or estates devised by such wills, or by either of them, or of any other lands, &c., for any estate of inheritance in possession or otherwise, capable of being settled or bound in law or equity," he will charge the estate as aforesaid; and this is approved by the court. T. B. becomes entitled in possession to the life estate only; and, on reference to a master, he reports that the limitations under which T. B. covenanted to charge the estates never took place. The report confirmed, and the judgment affirmed by the lords. Willis v. Robertson, 1 Dow (N.S.) 469 ; 4 Bligh (N.S.) 101.

Roman Catholic—Name and Arms.]—The court refused to sanction a clause in a settlement by a female infant, providing that no person professing the Roman Catholic religion should take any interest under the settlement. Williams, In re, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1064 ; 8 W. R. 678.

The court sanctioned a clause making it compulsory on successive owners or their husbands to assume the name and arms of the ancestor from whom the settlor derived the estates. Ib.

Consent to vary Investments.]—By a settlement made with the sanction of the court, upon the marriage of "an infant of seventeen years," funds belonging to her were vested upon trust to re-invest with the consent of the lady and her husband during their joint lives ; the lady taking the first life interest :—Held, that the lady had power to consent to a reinvestment notwithstanding her minority. Cardross, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 327 ; 7 Ch. D. 728 ; 38 L. T. 778; 26 W. R. 389.

Power of Appointment.]—By a settlement made on the marriage of "an infant of the age of nineteen years and upwards," it was agreed that, after the marriage, personal estate in which the lady would take a vested interest on marriage should be assigned to trustees, in trust for investment and to pay the income to the wife for her separate use, and after her death to her husband till bankruptcy or alienation ; and then to hold the capital in trust for such person or persons as the wife should appoint. The wife appointed the fund to her husband, and died an infant :—Held, by James and Brett, L.JJ. (Cotton, L.J., dissentiente), that the appointment by the minor was valid. D'Angibau, In re, Andrews v. Andrews, 49 L. J., Ch. 756 ; 15 Ch. D. 228 ; 43 L. T. 135 ; 28 W. R. 930—C. A.

iii. Rectification.

Ward Attaining Majority.]—Court retains its jurisdiction over property of ward, after ward becomes of age, so long as property remains in court ; and if ward marries, will reform an improper settlement. Austen v. Halsey, 2 Sim. & S. 123, n.

A few days after a ward attained her majority, a settlement was executed such as the court would not have approved :—Held, that the jurisdiction of the court over the ward had not ceased, and the settlement was rectified, so as to be what the court would have made. Money v. Money, 3 Drew. 256; 24 L. J., Ch. 684; 3 W. R. 425.

In 1839 A. B. married a ward of court without its sanction :—Held, in 1852, that the court possessed the same power over the parties which it would have had on an application shortly after the marriage, subject to the due protection of the rights and interests of persons who have come into esse since that period. The court referred it to the master whether a settlement made in 1850 was a proper one. Cave v. Cave, 15 Beav. 227. And see cases, supra, col. 1362.

After-acquired Property.]—The draft settlement of a ward containing a covenant to settle after-acquired property was approved by the intended husband, but never executed, though a post-nuptial settlement in different terms was executed: the court varied the latter settlement by adding the covenant as to after-acquired property. Hoare's Trust, In re, 4 Giff. 254; 1 N. R. 161; 9 Jur (N.S.) 167 ; 7 L. T. 523 ; 11 W. R. 181.

Restraint on Anticipation.]—On the settlement of a ward, no clause against anticipation was attached to her separate life estate. She incumbered her interest :—Held, that the settlement could not be rectified to the prejudice of her incumbrancers. Blaikie v. Clark, 15 Beav. 595 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 377.

As to the binding effect upon a ward of court and her husband of an order made after she came of age to settle her real estate. Ib.

Draft Settlement Accepted by Court.]—Where the master approved of a draft settlement but the chancellor declined making any order as to the execution of this settlement, the amount of the property then in litigation not being ascertained :—Held, that the proposed settlement, though not executed, having been acted upon by the court by different orders, could not be varied. Hodgens v. Hodgens, 4 Cl. & F. 323 ; 11 Bligh (N.S.) 62 ; Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 533.

Misunderstanding by Ward.]—A settlement of personal property belonging to a ward of court was made on her marriage and approved by the court. It provided that in the event which happened the property should go to the wife's next of kin. On an affidavit by the wife that she had misunderstood the settlement, the court declared that she was entitled absolutely to the fund. Smith v. Iliffe, 44 L. J., Ch. 755 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 666 ; 33 L. T. 200 ; 23 W. R. 851.

iv. Payment out of Court.

Settlement by Husband.]—An infant plaintiff is a ward of court without any order to that effect ; and if she marries without the sanction of the court her fund in court will not be paid out to her husband without a settlement. Gynn v. Gilbard, 1 Dr. & Sm. 356 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 91.

The court will give no direction as to dividends of separate property to which a ward of court is entitled, who is under age and has married without consent, until the husband has executed the settlement. Cator v. Mason, 2 W. R. 667.

Payment Obtained by Fraud.]—The fortune of an infant ward, a married woman, taken out of court under an order obtained on an affidavit that she was adult : ordered, on summary application by petition, to be replaced by the person who made the affidavit, and also by the solicitor who had in his possession proceedings which showed the infancy, and might have guarded the court against the surprise. Barrington v. Grogan, Beat. 199.

Marriage in Contempt.]—The mere fact of marriage with a female ward of court, without the court's consent, confers upon the court a jurisdiction to decline, during the joint lives of the husband and wife, to part with a fund in its custody belonging to the ward until a proper settlement should have been made thereof. Martin v. Forster, 7 De G. M. & G. 98 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 519; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 337; 3 Eq. R. 555 ; 3 W. R. 339.

Payment to Husband.]—A female ward of court married a fortnight after attaining twenty-one; upon a joint petition of herself and her husband, asking for payment of a fund in court to her husband, the court refused to accede to the prayer, but ordered the dividends to be paid to the husband during the joint lives of himself and his wife, without prejudice to any question. Biddles v. Jackson, 26 Beav. 282. Affirmed, 3 De G. & J. 544; 28 L. J., Ch. 290; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 901; 7 W. R. 248.

A female minor having married without assent of the court, and the parties being poor, upon the production of a draft settlement, which the court approved of, and the husband undertaking to execute it, the court transferred the minor's fund to the husband. Baker v. Herbert, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 108.

An infant ward married, and a petition was presented by her and her husband for the payment of the money out of court to the husband. The court disapproved of the principle, but allowed the petition on affidavits that it would be beneficial for the husband to receive the money. Cooke, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 145; 15 Jur. 765.

To Trustees—Separate Examination.]—A ward of the court married under twenty-one without the consent of the court, and prior to her marriage a settlement was made of her property. On her attaining twenty-one, she and her husband applied to have her property transferred to the trustees; which was ordered upon her being examined separately. Leeds v. Barnardiston, 4 Sim. 538.

Marriage after Majority.]—A ward of court was entitled to money for her separate use, but she was not restrained from anticipation. An allowance was made for her maintenance, and the surplus was accumulated in court. She attained twenty-one, and the next day married:—Held, that the fund must be paid out to the wife on her separate receipt, but, though the fund was under 200*l.*, she was required to be examined separately as to her consent. White v. Herrick, 38 L. J., Ch. 679; L. R. 4 Ch. 345; 20 L. T. 386; 17 W. R. 522.

On a petition of a wife, lately a ward of court, who had married on the day after she attained twenty-one, the court directed the transfer of stock to her, to which she was entitled to her separate use, notwithstanding that, in contemplation of marriage, an order had been made for the settlement of the fund. Sams v. Cronin, Reed, Ex parte, 29 L. T. 885; 22 W. R. 204.

C. PROPERTY.

1. In General.

Practice—Report of Master.]—Money in funds belonging to wards of the court cannot be transferred into the name of the accountant-general to the credit of the cause, until the account is taken by a master and his report made. Such a transfer could not operate as an acquittance and discharge of the trustees until they had passed their accounts. Beneraft v. Rich, 1 Bro. C. C. 56, and note there.

Vesting Order—Stock standing in Names of Infants and Others.]—Infants were entitled to certain legacies, which had been invested in consols in the names of the executor and executrix, and of the infant entitled thereto:—Held, that the court would, under s. 3 of the Trustee Extension Act, 1852, make an order vesting in the executor and executrix the right to transfer the stock and receive the dividends accrued prior to the transfer. Barnett, In re, Foster v. Barnett, 61 L. T. 676.

Stock to which an infant was absolutely entitled was standing in her own name alone. The will contained no direction for maintenance, but the stock constituted the only property of the infant, who was domiciled in Scotland, and a Scotch court had ordered that advances should be made out of the capital of her property for the purpose of maintenance:—Held, following the principle of Gardner v. Cowles (3 Ch. D. 304), that the court could make an order under s. 3 of the Trustee Extension Act, 1852, vesting in the guardian of the infant the right to transfer the stock and receive the dividends. Findlay, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 395.

Where stock to which an infant was beneficially entitled had been invested in the joint names of himself and another person:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction under s. 3 of the Trustee Extension Act, 1852, to make an order vesting in such other person the right to transfer such stock. Harwood, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 578; 20 Ch. D. 536; 30 W. R. 595.

Transfer into Court.]—A testatrix directed funds to be transferred in the bank books into the names of A. B. and wife, and their children, who were infants, for the benefit of A. B. and wife for life, with remainder to their children:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction, under 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to order the infants to transfer the funds into court. Watts v. Scrivens, 1 Beav. 223.

Change of Investment.]—By a marriage settlement, reciting that the lady was an infant, property was assigned to trustees upon the usual trusts, with power to vary investments with the consent in writing of the husband and wife, or the survivor:—Held, that the wife, whilst still an infant, could consent to a proposed change of investment. Cardross, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 327; 7 Ch. D. 728; 38 L. T. 778; 26 W. R. 389.

Payment out of Court—Majority according to Domicil.]—Funds in court to the separate credit of an infant domiciled abroad were paid out to her on attaining age, according to the law of her domicil, although she had not come of age according to English law. Donohoe v. Donohoe, 19 L. R., Ir. 349.

—— Small Sum.]—Small sums representing shares of infants of a fund in court directed to be paid out into the post-office savings bank to accounts in the names of the infants. Elliott v. Elliott, 54 L. J., Ch. 1142.

Conveyance.]—No objection to sale in court in execution of will, that infants interested under will cannot join in the conveyance. Powell v. Powell, 6 Madd. 53.

—— Custom of Kent.]—There is an absolute disability in an infant to dispose of his inheritance, and it has never been held that an infant could exercise such a power over a real estate. Hearle v. Greenbank, 3 Atk. 712.

By the custom of Kent an infant may alien his estate, for custom is lex loci, and being so, it stands as strong as if a private act had passed for the purpose. Id. 711.

—— By Administratrix.]—Conveyance by administratrix of infant's devisor, in bar of infant's rights, set aside on his attaining full age. Bailie v. Bailie, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 364.

—— Attestation.]—Where an infant defendant cannot write, the court will order her execution of the purchase deed, pursuant to the 1 Will. 4, c. 47, to be attested by a commissioner for taking affidavits. Archbold v. Rice, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 33.

—— Infant Out of Jurisdiction.]—The court has not power, under the 28 Geo. 3, c. 35, to direct the master to execute a conveyance in the name of an infant resident out of the jurisdiction. M'Geehan v. Rankin, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 182.

An application to the court for that purpose, under the 1 Will. 4, c. 47, or 1 Will. 4, c. 60, must be made by petition. Ib.

Disagreement of Trustees—Refusal of Court to order Sale.]—Two trustees having power to sell property of an infant, and one trustee having declined to exercise the power of sale, the court refused to order them to sell, notwithstanding that the effect of the sale would be to increase very considerably the income. Camden (Marquis) v. Murray, 50 L. J., Ch. 282; 16 Ch. D. 161; 43 L. T. 661; 29 W. R. 190.

Equitable Mortgage by a Testator—Power to Mortgage.]—By will, K. devised to G. freehold property. The title deeds of portion of the property had been deposited by K., by way of equitable mortgage, K. died, and the mortgagee brought an action for sale and a receiver, the court allowed G. (a minor) under the 1 Wm. 4, c. 47, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 60, to raise and pay the equitable mortgage by a mortgage of the devised lands. National Bank v. Gourley, 17 L. R., Ir. 357.

Right of Father to charge on Contingent Interest.]—The court refused to declare that sums advanced by a father for the benefit of his infant son were a charge on property to which the son would become entitled only in the event of his attaining twenty-one. Tanner, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 1108; 51 L. T. 507.

Semble, the court has no jurisdiction to make such a charge, and the only proper form of order in such a case is that in Arbuckle, In re (14 W. R. 435). Ib.

Benefice—Presentation by Infant.]—As to presentation and nomination by infant to a benefice, see Arthington v. Coverly, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 518. See the observations on this case, 1 Fonbl. Tr. Eq. 84, n.

Deputation.]—An infant may execute a deputation to a seneschal of his manor. Hallibarton v. Leslie, 2 Hog, 252.

Surrender.]—An infant may be the deputy steward of a manor, and take a surrender by a married woman. Edlestone v. Collins, 16 Jur. 790.

Copyhold—Admittance.]—If the lord seize the lands of infant copyholders, the 9 Geo. 1, c. 29, s. 1 shows how to proceed. Clayton v. Cookes, 2 Atk. 449.

—— Forfeiture.]—Forfeiture of copyhold for waste during minority. Litton's Case, Cary, 6.

Notice.]—A feme covert, or infant, is just as much bound by notice as an adult. Jones v. Kearney, 1 Dr. & War. 134; 1 Con. & L. 34; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 86.

Tenant in Tail.]—Infants may be bound if conusant of their right, as where tenant in tail, aged nineteen, ingrosses a mortgage of the estate. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. Sen. 212.

—— Insolvent Act.]—Infant tenant in tail, taking benefit of Insolvent Act (49 Geo. 3, c. 115), his estate tail does not pass to his assignees. Burton v. Haworth, 5 Madd. 50.

Receiver.]—The court will not appoint a receiver of an infant's estate where there is no bill filed. Anon, 1 Atk. 489.

Rent.]—The receiver in a minor's matter paid rent due up to a certain period in respect of lands bequeathed to the minor. The bequest had not been assented to by the executor:—Held, that the minor was liable only to the extent of the profits received of the lands. Fair, In re, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 278.

Consignee of Estate.]—A consignee over an estate of infants cannot be appointed without giving security. Cobham v. Cobham, 5 Jur. 931.

Bankrupt Costs.]—Infant bankrupt being brought before court as party to suit refused his costs. Maguuran v. Jamieson, 2 Moll. 520.

Witness.]—Though a witness be an infant, his tender years will not invalidate his evidence. Smith v. French, 2 Atk. 245.

Possession as Bailiff—Tenants in Common.]—A father was entitled in fee to an undivided moiety of gavelkind land, the other moiety of which belonged to his wife in fee. She died, and her two sons became entitled to her moiety in equal shares subject to the father's right (by custom) to a moiety of the rents of her moiety while he remained a widower. The father took possession and received all rents without accounting. John, a son, died before the father:—Held, that, as to that one-eighth to which John became entitled on the death of his mother, the father must be taken to have entered as bailiff for his infant son, and that, consequently, the title of John was not barred by s. 12 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and that his brother Samuel was entitled to that one-eighth. But held, that, as to Samuel's own one-eighth the same presumption did not arise, and there being no evidence that the father had received the rents as agent for Samuel, or had acknowledged his title in writing, or accounted to him for the rents, the title to that one-eighth was barred by the statute. Consequently, Samuel was entitled to three-eighths of the whole property and the remaining five-eighths passed under the father's will. Hobbs, In re, Hobbs v. Wade, 57 L. J., Ch. 184; 36 Ch. D. 553; 58 L. T. 9; 36 W. R. 445.

—— Guardian by Nurture — Liability to Account.]—The owner of a public-house and cottages devised them to his widow during widowhood, with remainder to his four infant children. His widow married again, but continued to reside in the public-house and received the rents and maintained the children. One of the children, an infant, married, but she and her husband resided in the public-house. They then left and brought an action against her mother for one-fourth of the rents and profits :—Held, that after her second marriage the mother was in possession as bailiff for her infant children, and not as guardian by nurture, and was therefore a trustee and liable to account to the daughter and her husband for the rents and profits. Wall v. Stanwick, 56 L. J., Ch. 501 ; 34 Ch. D. 763 ; 56 L. T. 309 ; 35 W. R. 701.

Statute of Limitations.]—An executor, administrator, or trustee for an infant neglecting to sue within six years, the statute of limitations shall bind the infant. Wych v. East India Co., 3 P. Wms. 309.

Ne Exeat Regno.]—Where the writ of ne exeat was not applied for until after six months from the time when a defaulting trustee had declared his intention to leave the kingdom, yet as the persons most interested were infants the court granted the writ. Waller v. Fowler, Sau. & Sc. 274.

And see CONVERSION AND RECONVERSION.

2. LEASES.

Rights of Infant.]—If a person, jointly interested with an infant in a lease, obtains a renewal to himself only, and the lease proves beneficial, he will be held to have acted as trustee, and the infant may claim his share ; but if it does not prove beneficial, he must take it upon himself. Grace, Ex parte, 1 Bos. & P. 376.

—— Disclaimer.]—Semble, that an infant, in the case of a lease which is disadvantageous to him, cannot protect himself if he has taken possession and has not disclaimed, at all events unless he still continues a minor. North-Western Ry. v. M'Michael, 5 Ex. 114 ; 20 L. J., Ex. 97 ; 15 Jur. 132.

Where an estate vests in an infant by operation of law, and he has not disclaimed, he becomes liable for rent, notwithstanding his infancy. Kelly v. Coote, 5 Ir. C. L. R. 469.

Occupation Rent.]—Where an infant obtained a lease of a furnished house on an implied representation that he was of full age :—Held, that the lease must be declared void, and possession given up, and the defendant restrained from parting with the furniture ; but that he was not liable for use and occupation. Lempriere v. Lange, 12 Ch. D. 675 ; 41 L. T. 378 ; 27 W. R. 879.

Where there were tenants in common, one of whom was an infant and the other had been in occupation at the death of the infant's mother, the former tenant, and continued in occupation during the infancy :—Held, that the occupation of the defendant was an entry on the estate of the infant, and therefore he was liable to account for rents and profits under 4 Anne. c. 16, although he had not received any rent, and that he must pay an occupation rent. Pascoe v. Swan, 27 Beav. 508 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 159 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1235 ; 1 L. T. 17 ; 8 W. R. 130.

Lands were let to an infant. He took possession and left before attaining his majority, and then repudiated the contract :—Held, that he was liable to the payment of the rent due during possession. Blake v. Concannon, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 323.

Copyholder—Trespass.]—An infant copyholder who has been admitted, and has entered into possession by his guardian, may maintain trespass for the wrongful occupation by the lord for a prior period. Barnett v. Guildford (Earl), 11 Ex. 19 ; 24 L. J., Ex. 281 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1142 ; 3 W. R. 406.

Surrender.]—The provisions of the act 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65, apply to a lease to which an infant is only beneficially entitled, the legal estate being vested in a trustee. Griffiths, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 742 ; 29 Ch. D. 248 ; 53 L. T. 262 ; 33 W. R. 728.

It was referred to the master to inquire whether the infant lessee was within the act of the 29 Geo. 2, and if he were, whether it was for his benefit to surrender the old lease and take a new one. Swann, Ex parte, Dick. 749.

—— Concurrence of Guardian.]—An order that tenants of a minor should be at liberty to execute a surrender was granted upon a motion of the receiver, it being for the minor's benefit, but the concurrence of the minor's guardian was required. Davis v. Cotter, Sau. & Sc. 685.

Renewal.]—The tenant of a lease for lives renewable upon payment of fines and a penal rent, being an infant, and there having been no renewal for a period of fifty years :—Held, that the court would require a suit to be instituted. Colthurst, In re, 2 Con. & L. 35 ; 3 Dr. & War. 35 ; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 322.

Lease by Infant.]—Where an infant makes a lease, reserving a rent, he cannot avoid it until of full age. Slator v. Trimble, 14 Ir. C. L. R. 342.

—— How avoided.]—A lease by an infant is voidable only. Slator v. Brady, 14 Ir. C. L. R. 61.

A lease by an infant is not avoided by a lease made to a third party by the infant upon his full age. Ib.

To avoid a lease made by an infant, under which the lessee is in possession, some act of notoriety, viz. ejectment, entry, or demand of possession is requisite. Ib.

By Guardians.]—Where tutors dative executed an agreement for a lease, at a rent to be paid to the infant :—Held, that he might maintain an action in his own name upon the agreement to recover arrears of rent. Carnegie v. Waugh, 2 D. & R. 277.

So, where rent was covenanted to be paid to the tutors dative, the infant, or to any other person duly authorised to receive the same for the infant. Fitzmaurice v. Waugh, 3 D. & R. 273.

Lease made by guardian, and executed by infant, ordered to be fully recognised by infant after his coming of age, or infant to refund consideration. Erroy v. Nicholas, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 488. S. C., nom. Esron v. Nicholas, 1 De G. & Sm. 118, n.

Confirmation.]—Acceptance by an adult beneficiary of rent accruing under an invalid lease is not a confirmation of the lease. Robson v. Flight, 4 De G. J. & S. 608 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 226 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 147 ; 11 L. T. 725 ; 13 W. R. 393.

—— By Mortgage.]—Where a party takes a lease of infant's lands, and the infant on coming of age mortgages the property to the lessee by deed referring to the lease this is a confirmation. Story v. Johnson, 3 Y. & C. 586.

—— Agreement for Lease.]—A minor and his guardian agreed to let defendant a farm ; defendant entered, and paid rent. The minor when of age sold the estate ; defendant then quitted, and refused to take a lease :—Decreed, defendant should take a lease and pay costs. Clayton v. Ashdown, 9 Vin. 393, pl. 4.

—— Acceptance of Rent.]—R. devised lands and houses to infant children. The mother as guardian demised the premises on a building lease. The eldest son joined in the lease, and covenanted that the rest, when of age, should confirm it. They all attained twenty-one, and accepted the rent for ten years after the youngest came of age, and then brought ejectments :—Decreed, that the lease should be established. Smith v. Low, 1 Atk. 489.

Stamping Agreement.]—Where a tenant held lands under an unstamped accepted proposal, which rendered him liable to the payment of tithe composition, the court directed the receiver to stamp the same, and that the expenses thereof should be allowed to him. Langley v. Langley, 1 Dr. & Wal. 232.

Reduction of Rent.]—As to reduction of tenant's rent where landlord is a minor or lunatic. Anon., 2 Moll. 342.

Arrears of Rent.]—Order made relieving the tenant of an infant's estate from payment of arrears of rent. Henneker v. Chafy, 3 W. R. 300.

Trade Fixtures—Covenants.]—Where a lease under the sanction of the court had been executed for the benefit of an infant, a bill for rectification, on the ground that it contained an improper demise of trade fixtures, and an improper covenant by the lessee, was dismissed with costs. Seaton v. Staniland, 4 Giff. 61 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 69 ; 7 L. T. 347.

Small Property.]—Order for liberty to trustee to let infant's estate, without reference to master, property being small ; but not to extend to building leases, or beyond minority. P—— v. Bell, 6 Ves. 419.

Administration.]—Upon the administration of the real property of an infant, this court will not delegate to the master the power of approving leases of the estates. Symons v. Symons, 2 Y. & C. 1 ; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 95.

Indefeasible Interest.]—An estate, of which A. died seised in fee, descended upon A.'s infant sisters. The father and mother of the infants being alive, it was held that the infants were not seised of or entitled to land in fee, within the meaning of the 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 17. Evans, In re, 2 Myl. & K. 318.

The court has no jurisdiction under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 17, to lease an infant's estate unless the infant is indefeasibly seised either in fee or in tail in possession. Legh, Ex parte, 15 Sim. 445.

—— Tenant by the Curtesy.]—The court has power, under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65, to sanction a building lease of an infant's estate when he is seised in fee-simple in reversion after a life estate by the curtesy vested in his father. Letchford, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 530 ; 2 Ch. D. 719 ; 35 L. T. 466.

—— House.]—Under the 17th section of stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65, the court, on petition to confirm a master's report, permitted a lease for twenty-one years to be made of a house in which an infant had an interest. Harris v. Davis, 9 Jur. 1084.

—— Mining Lease.]—Where an infant was seised in fee, defeasible in the event of his dying under twenty-one without issue, and all the persons who would be entitled in defeasance of his estate joined with him in a petition for a mining lease under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 17, the court made the order. Clark, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 314 ; 13 L. T. 732 ; 14 W. R. 378.

The court cannot (independent of the 1 Will. 4, c. 65) authorise trustees for infants to grant a mining lease, although the legal estate is vested in such trustees, and such lease would be beneficial to the infants. Wood v. Patteson, 10 Beav. 541.

When infants were tenants in fee, but their father was in possession as tenant by the curtesy, the court of chancery granted a lease of their coal mines under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 17. Spenser, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 18 ; 17 L. T. 200.

Ejectment by Infant.]—Where ejectment has been brought by an infant, which has been compromised, and the tenant in possession has attorned to the infant, though he on his coming of age does not do any act to confirm the tenancy, he will not be allowed to bring a new ejectment without giving notice to quit. Doe d. Miller v. Noden, 2 Esp. 530.

Agreement for Lease.]—Tenant for life, agreeing to grant lease, dies. Next tenant in tail being his son, an infant, and father having a right to appoint testamentary guardian, which he does, agreement was carried into execution against the son during his minority, it being first modified by court to advantage of son. Brummell v. Clavering, 3 Swanst. 690.

3. Mortgage by Court.

Payment of Ancestor's Debts.]—The 1 Will. 4, c. 47, does not empower the court to direct a mortgage of infant's real estate for payment of the ancestor's debts to which it is liable. Smethurst v. Longworth, 2 Keen, 603 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 18.

In a creditors' suit the court has no jurisdiction, under 1 Will. 4, c. 47, or 2 & 3 Vict. c. 60, to extend the sum to be raised by an infant for payment of debts of his ancestor, so as to include repairs which are necessary to obtain a mortgage, which would be more beneficial for the infant than a sale would be. Hill v. Maurice. 1 De G. & Sm. 214; 16 L. J., Ch. 280; 11 Jur. 795.

Repairs.]—When an infant was absolutely entitled to the beneficial interest in real estate, the legal estate being in trustees:—Held, that the court could raise money by means of a mortgage, for paying the cost of repairs certified to be absolutely necessary. Jackson, In re, Jackson v. Talbot, 21 Ch. D. 786. And see preceding case.

Where property was devised to sons in succession, and the use of the house to the widow until the eldest son attained twenty-one, and the house was out of repair and in an unsanitary condition, and all the children were under age:—Held, the court had no jurisdiction to authorise the construction of new buildings in place of the old house, but had power to sanction the raising of money by mortgage for the payment of repairs in the nature of salvage, as necessary for the preservation of the infant's property. Hurst, In re, Hurst v. Hurst, 29 L. R., Ir. 219.

Form of.]—Authority was given to insert a power of sale in a mortgage of an infant's real estate, to pay debts and costs. Selby v. Cooling, 23 Beav. 418.

Costs.]—Where the court sanctioned a mortgage, but the matter went off without the default of the mortgagee, he was allowed his costs out of the estate. Craggs v. Gray, 35 Beav. 166.

Where an action had been brought by an infant tenant in tail, which was approved by the court, the court sanctioned a charge upon the infant's interest to raise a sufficient sum to pay the costs of the action, the person advancing the money accepting the risk of losing it if the action failed and the infant died under age. Jones, In re, 48 L. T. 188; 31 W. R. 399. And see cases, infra, col. 1382.

4. Sale by Court.

General Rule.]—A. being an infant, no sale of lands to which she is entitled can be made during her minority, except by the intervention of the court. Batho v. Fulton, 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 196.

Practice — Master's Report.]—Where estate devised to infants charged with payment of debts, if personal estate is insufficient, sale of real not decreed till master report personal insufficient. Birch v. Glover, 4 Madd. 376.

In an administration action the court will not direct the sale of real estate in which an infant is interested till the accounts of the personal estate have been taken, and the cause heard for further directions. Baillie v. Jackson, 10 Sim. 167.

Benefit of Infant — Conversion.]—The court has no authority to sell the real estate of an infant or to convert it, upon the notion that it would be beneficial. Calvert v. Godfrey, 6 Beav. 97; 12 L. J., Ch. 305.

Where a conveyance is directed, the decree must provide for its being settled by the master, at all events if it be executed by an infant. S. C., 2 Beav. 267.

—— Reference.]—The court has no authority to dispose of minor's real estate, however much it may be for the benefit of the minor. The course is to give a reference to inquire whether it will be for the benefit of the minor to apply for an act of parliament. Russell v. Russell, 1 Moll. 525.

—— Power of Sale.]—Generally the court has no authority to direct a sale of the real estate of an infant, or to convert it, merely upon the notion that it would be for the benefit of the infant. But where a testator had given all his real and personal estate to trustees upon certain trusts, with power of sale at their discretion, and the trustees disclaimed:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to direct a sale to carry the trusts of the will into execution. Browne v. Paull, 16 Jur. 707.

—— Creditor's Action.]—An estate descended to an infant heir cannot be sold at the suit of creditors on the ground that a sale will be beneficial to the infant. Brookfield v. Bradley, Jacob, 634.

—— Mortgagees Consent.]—Inquiry directed in case the mortgagees consent to a sale, whether it will be for the benefit of the infant heir of the mortgagor. Mondey v. Mondey, 1 V. & B. 223.

—— Costs.]—An infant being entitled to one-ninth of a real estate, and it being for her benefit, the court declared the costs a charge on the infant's share, and ordered a sale of the whole estate. Davis v. Turvey, 32 Beav. 554.

Special Circumstances.]—Sale of infant's property carried into execution under special circumstances. Garmstone v. Gaunt, 1 Coll. C. C. 577; 14 L. J., Ch. 162; 9 Jur. 78.

Publication—References.]—Publication passed in a supplemental suit, by consent, although an infant party, and the object the more speedy sale of the minor's inheritance, and the cause set down out of the regular course, without a reference whether for his benefit. Sheppard v. Green, 1 Moll. 275.

Form of Conveyance.]—Where the estate of infants is concerned, the master directed to settle the conveyances absolutely, and not in case the parties differ. Cheese v. Cheese, 15 L. J., Ch. 28.

Copyhold—Fine.]—When copyholds are sold for payment of debts during infancy of heir under decree, part of purchase money will not be retained in court to pay expense of fine which would be payable on the death of the heir before a conveyance. Morris v. Clarkson, 3 Swanst. 558; 19 R. R. 277.

By Trustees.]—Trustees, who had power of sale but no power of leasing, first granted leases and afterwards sold subject to them. Infants being interested, the court sanctioned the sale on their behalf:—Held, that the purchaser was bound to complete. Micholls v. Corbett, 34 Beav. 376. And see Browne v. Paull, supra.

—— Discretion.]—Where trustees have a discretionary power of sale, and disagree as to its exercise, the court will not order sale, notwithstanding that the effect of the sale would be to increase considerably the income. Camden (Marquis) v. Murray, 50 L. J., Ch. 282 ; 16 Ch. D. 161 ; 43 L. T. 661 ; 29 W. R. 190.

Postponing Sale.]—An infant aged ten was entitled, on marrying or attaining twenty-one, to the proceeds of real estate, which was directed to be sold as soon as conveniently might be after the death of the tenant for life. An order was made postponing the sale, upon the ground that the property was likely to increase greatly in value. Morris v. Morris, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 802.

Conditions—Sale of Reversion.]—When in an administration suit an order has been made by the court for the sale of an infant's reversion in personal property, and the sale has been effected subject to a condition that the jurisdiction of the court to make such an order should not be questioned, the purchaser is entitled to a declaration on the face of the order confirming the sale that all parties to the suit are bound by it. Nunn v. Hancock, 40 L. J., Ch. 700 ; L. R. 6 Ch. 850 ; 25 L. T. 469 ; 19 W. R. 1041.

Specific Performance—Costs.]—Where a testator, after devising his real estate, entered into a contract for the sale, and died leaving his devisee an infant, the court refused, in a suit by the purchaser for the specific performance, to allow any costs as between the plaintiff and the defendant. Hall v. Bushill, 35 L. J., Ch. 381.

Policy of Insurance.]—The court will order a policy of insurance belonging to infants to be sold, notwithstanding an advantageous offer by tenant for life to keep it on foot, unless security to the amount of the principal be given. Vickers v. Scott, 1 Jur. 402.

5. Investment and Expenditure.

In Charity.]—A portion of the income of an infant's real estate ordered to be applied in charity. Langton v. Brackenbury, 2 Coll. C. C. 446 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 256 ; 10 Jur. 302.

In a time of general scarcity the receiver of a minor's estate authorised to lay out money in employing the poor tenantry. Jackson v. Jackson, 2 Hog, 238.

Application without Reference.]—Where the sum is small, the court will decide, without the expense of a reference, whether the application sought for is for the benefit of the infant. Barnwall, Ex parte, 1 Moll. 4.

Repairs.]—A reference is usual to ascertain if repairs to be done are for the benefit of an infant. Hood v. Bridport, 16 Jur. 560.

Trading Adventure.]—Trustee not answerable for having engaged the infant's name in an adventure, if he does not engage the property. But see Morton Eden's case, in the H. of L. Wilkinson v. Stafford, 1 Ves. Jun. 42.

Private Security.]—Trustees lending an infant's money on a private security responsible in case of failure of the security. Holmes v. Dring, 2 Cox, 1.

Trading.]—Where a trustee lays out an infant's money in his trade, the court will give an option for the infant, either to have interest or the profits of the trade. Anon., 2 Ves. Sen. 630.

Judgment Security.]—The money belonging to a minor not allowed to remain out at interest on the security of a judgment. Knox v. Knox, 1 Hog, 117.

Insurance Money.]—A sum paid to guardian of an infant, tenant in tail, for building a copyhold tenement burnt down, but which had never been applied during the infant's life, held to belong to the succeeding remainderman in tail, subject to a deduction of interest upon a larger sum at which the loss was computed, such interest to belong to the personal representatives. Rook v. Worth, 1 Ves. Sen. 460.

Lease for Lives.]—An executor in trust for an infant of a lease for 99 years, determinable on three lives, on the lord's refusing to renew but for lives absolutely, changes the years into lives ; on the infant's dying under twenty-one and intestate, this is a trust for his administrator. Witter v. Witter, 3 P. Wms. 99.

Mortgage.]—This court will not lend out the money of an infant on mortgage. Ridgways, In re, 1 Hog, 309.

Court will not order reference whether it is advantageous to invest fund in mortgage ; practice being to lay out same in three per cent. consols. Norbury v. Norbury, 4 Madd. 191.

Petition of tenant for life whether it would be for benefit of infant tenants in remainder to transpose trust funds from consols to a mortgage security under a power, dismissed. Barry v. Marriott, 2 De G. & Sm. 491 ; 12 Jur. 1043.

—— Reduced Interest.]—Where the mortgagor offered to pay off unless a reduced rate of interest was taken, a reference was directed as to the value of the estate mortgaged, and if on ample security, it was ordered the money should remain at the reduced rate. Hoey v. Hoey, 2 Moll. 278.

Security Abroad.]—The court did not call in the property of an infant upon security in India, the master reporting it to be for his benefit that it should remain. Sadler v. Turner, 8 Ves. 617.

Executors.]—Executors, after a decree to account, lending personal estate upon mortgage, ordered to pay the same into court ; but the motion that they might be ordered to replace the amount by so much stock as the same would have purchased at the time of investment was to that extent refused. Widdowson v. Duck, 2 Mer. 494 ; 16 R. R. 206.

Conversion.]—Personal property of infant ordered to be laid out in land, though there were no directions in will for changing nature of it ; the estate to be conveyed in trust for him, his executors, &c., till twenty-one, and after to him and his heirs. Ashburton v. Ashburton, 6 Ves. 6 ; 5 R. R. 201.

An executor or overseer may lay out part of the personal estate in the purchase of lands in the infant's name ; but if he lends the money on a bad security, he must answer it out of his own pocket. Terry v. Terry, Pre. Ch. 273 : Gilb. 10.

The conveyancing counsel having certified that the title to a proposed purchase, "though not a good title of sixty years, was a safe holding one," and the purchase appearing in other respects desirable, it was sanctioned by the court. Sheffield and Rotherham Ry., In re, 1 Sm. & G. (App.) iv.

The court has often changed the nature of infant's estate for his convenience. Guardians and trustees may change the nature of an infant's estate, where it is manifestly for the infant's interest. Inwood v. Twyne, Amb. 419; 2 Eden, 153.

Infant entitled in remainder purchases her mother's jointure, and having attained twenty-one, receives one year's rent and dies:—Held, the purchase was to be considered real estate. S. C., Amb. 417; 2 Eden, 148.

This court has no authority to alter the character of the property of an infant, and convert realty into personalty. Field v. Moore, 19 Beav. 176; 24 L. J., Ch. 161; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 33; 3 Eq. R. 215; 3 W. R. 98.

Upon an application to lay out part of an infant's money in land, if he dies before twenty-one, or disapproves of the purchase, the property will not alter. Sergeson v. Sealey, 2 Atk. 413; 9 Mod. 370. And see Tullit v. Tullit, Amb. 370.

—— By Guardian.]—Lands purchased by guardian for infant, during minority, considered as personalty. Gibson v. Scudamore, Dick. 45.

Timber Sold—Executory Devise.]—Timber was cut by order of the court, and for the benefit of the estate of an infant, equitable tenant in fee, subject to an executory devise over in the event of his dying under twenty-one. He died under twenty-one:—Held, that the proceeds of the sale of the timber were personal estate of the infant. Dyer v. Dyer, 12 L. T. 442; 13 W. R. 732.

Purchase out of Surplus Income.]—Trustees of an infant having saved 3,000*l.* out of the profits of his estate lay it out in a purchase of lands near, declaring the trust for the benefit of the infant, if he, when of age, shall agree to it. Infant dies within age; the trustees shall account to the infant's executors for the 3,000*l.*, but the profits of the land set off against the interest. Winchelsea v. Norcliffe, 1 Vern. 435.

Discharge of Incumbrances.]—In case of infant, court will order money to be laid out in the discharge of incumbrances, &c. Grimstone, Ex parte, Amb. 708.

—— Assigning Mortgage.]—Where infant is entitled to a personal estate, and to a real one encumbered, equity will direct the personal to go in discharge of incumbrances, yet will not order mortgage to be assigned to attend the inheritance, but to be considered as personal estate for the benefit of the infant. Seys v. Price, 9 Mod. 221.

—— Next of Kin.]—When the personal estate of an infant seised in fee of real estate was applied in payment of charges affecting his real estate, the infant having died under twenty-one:—Held, that the next of kin were entitled to those charges as part of his personal estate. Dowling v. Belton, Fl. & K. 462.

—— Land Tax.]—In the application of the personal estate of an infant tenant in tail, to redeem the land-tax, and in all cases the court will so guard the property of an infant that the conversion shall not change the nature of it, between the representatives. Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 257, 278; 8 R. R. 144.

6. Account.

After Majority.]—Court retains its jurisdiction over property of ward after ward becomes of age, so long as property remains in court. Austen v. Halsey, 2 Sim. & S. 123, n.

Wrongful Possession.]—Infant may bring bill for an account of rents and profits against a person who keeps possession after death of the infant's ancestor. Roberdeau v. Rous, 1 Atk. 544.

Fund in Danger.]—An infant's bill, he being remainderman to personal property, merely stating the fund in danger, without any proof, entitles him to an account. Singleton v. Singleton, 2 Moll. 520.

From what Date.]—Where one in possession of lands belonging to an infant, if the infant, when he comes of age, makes out his title, he shall recover the profits in equity from the first accruing of his title. Bennet v. Whitehead, 2 P. Wms. 645.

Where any person enters upon an infant's estate, and continues in possession, equity will decree an account to be carried on after the infancy, unless the infant, being of age, has waived such account. Morgan v. Morgan, 1 Atk. 489.

If a father who has entered upon the estates of his infant children retain possession after the children attain twenty-one, as guardian and bailiff, an account will be directed from the time of entry. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 K. & J. 79; 25 L. J., Ch. 159; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1106; 4 W. R. 135.

A party in possession, under a voidable deed, treated as bailiff, and made to account for the rents for more than six years before the filing of the bill. Nanney v. Williams, 22 Beav. 452.

And see Wall v. Stanwick, supra, col. 1375.

—— Rent.]—Where one tenant in common was an infant, and the other (the defendant) had been in occupation at the death of the infant's mother, the former tenant in common, and had continued in occupation:—Held, that the occupation of the defendant was an entry on the estate of the infant, and therefore that he was liable to account for rents and profits under 4 Anne, c. 16, although he had not received any rent, and that he must pay an occupation rent. Pascoe v. Swan, 27 Beav. 508; 29 L. J., Ch. 159; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1235; 1 L. T. 17; 8 W. R. 130.

Action at Law.]—Where an infant brings a bill for the land, and to have an account of the mesne profits, the court may elect him to proceed at law, and retain the bill for the mesne profits. Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 129, 130. And see Drury v. Drury, 1 Ch. Rep. 49; Bennet v. Whitehead, 2 P. Wms. 645; Tilly v. Bridges, Pre. Ch. 252, 517.

An infant shall have an account of profits against an intruder; but where a verdict has passed against his title, he shall have no account of profits until he has recovered at law. Newburgh v. Bickerstaffe, 1 Vern. 295.

Adverse Possession.]—A person who makes an adverse entry into, and takes an adverse possession of, an infant's estate, cannot be treated as the bailiff; nor can a bill for an account against him be sustained. Hagley v. West, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 63.

Though a person entering on the estate of an infant is treated in equity as his bailiff, the rule does not apply where the infant has never been in possession by himself, his guardian, or agent, and where the estate has been held by a title adverse to the infant. Crowther v. Crowther, 23 Beav. 305; 26 L. J., Ch. 702.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to treat the defendant as bailiff, his entry, though made during infancy, being under an alleged agreement to purchase the plaintiff's interest in the estate. Ib.

Injunction.]—The jurisdiction which this court has to decree accounts against persons entering during minority is not taken away when the bill is not filed till the infant had attained twenty-one. Excepted case, in which an injunction was granted though not prayed for by the bill. Blomfield v. Eyre, 8 Beav. 250; 14 L. J., Ch. 260; 9 Jur. 717.

Possession by Several.]—Where it appears that several persons entered on and held the estate of an infant, one cannot be sued by the infant in equity as bailiff for an account of the rents and profits without making the others parties. Wyllie v. Ellice, 6 Hare, 505.

Ward of Court.]—The jurisdiction in infancy does not extend to order a person who had intermeddled with the minor's estate before the minor was made a ward of court to account, and therefore where a third person indebted to the estate of a minor, being ordered to account, refused, and was attached:—Held, that there is no authority to act by attachment against a person not in privity in the matter. Brady, In re, 1 Moll. 254.

Laches by Trustees.]—A. devises lands to trustees until debts are paid, and then to an infant and his heirs, defendant enters and levies a fine, and five years pass. Infant when of age brought an ejectment, but was barred because the trustees should have entered. Equity will relieve, and the infant in this case shall recover the mesne profits. Allen v. Sayer, 2 Vern. 368.

Where cestuis que trustent were infants, and the trustees, after the suit was established, allowed a balance to remain many years in the hands of bankers:—Held, that the trustees were liable. Drever v. Mawdesley, 18 L. J., Ch. 273; 13 Jur. 330.

Statute of Limitations.]—An infant who neglects to enter six years after he becomes of age, is barred by the Statute of Limitations from bringing a bill for an account of profits. Lockey v. Lockey, Pre. Ch. 518.

When opened.]—Solicitor who advanced money to infant, and acted as his confidential adviser, is a guardian to him, and an account settled, within a month after infant became of age, and without latter having any assistance, was opened, notwithstanding vouchers were delivered up. Revett v. Harvey, 1 Sim. & S. 502; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 39.

Unfair Bargain.]—If A. buy from B., a minor, under circumstances of distress, a reversion worth 40*l.* a year for 100*l.*, and sell it again in a few days for 200*l.*, equity will compel him to account to B. for the difference. Spencer v. Chase, 9 Mod. 29.

Practice—Motion.]—Executors not allowed on motion to account before the master; as account so taken would not be binding on the minors, no suit being depending to which they were parties. Burke, In re, 1 Ball & B. 74.

—— Inquiry.]—Upon a bill filed by an infant devisee for life, without impeachment of waste, except as to ornamental timber, for administration of the trusts, an inquiry was directed as to timber in the form adopted in Tooker v. Annesley (5 Sim. 235), excluding ornamental timber. Consett v. Bell, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 569; 11 L. J., Ch. 401; 6 Jur. 869.

Freeman—Election.]—Where the child of a freeman of London is to elect between the will and the custom, he is not obliged to elect until after the account taken. Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. Wms. 124, n.

D. MARRIAGE.

1. In General.

Canon Law.]—Though males at fourteen, and females at twelve, are capable of contracting marriage, yet, by the canons of 1603, it cannot be done without the consent of parents. Smith v. Smith, 3 Atk. 308.

Parties interested.]—In the case of the marriage of an infant, quære, how far parties having an interest that she should not be married are entitled to interfere. Lee v. Hutton, 14 Jur. 638.

The intended husband was allowed his costs of the proceedings. Ib.

Sanity.]—Jurisdiction to direct inquiry as to the marriage of an infant, whether of sound mind at the time, and whether for the infant's benefit that a commission should issue. Sherwood v. Sanderson, 19 Ves. 289; G. Cooper, 108; 13 R. R. 193.

Order not to Marry.]—Court took care of infant from her testamentary guardian, and ordered her not to marry without leave of court. Tombes v. Elers, Dick. 88. And see cases, supra, col. 1362.

Guardian Abroad.]—Application to approve of infant's marriage under 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, s. 12, testamentary guardian being abroad. Blake v. Blake, Dick. 459.

Approval by the Lord Chancellor of the marriage of a minor, whose guardians resided abroad, was made without a reference to the master. Reibey, Ex parte, 12 L. J., Ch. 436.

Act of Parliament.]—No instance of applying for an act of parliament for the marriage of an infant who has a money portion only. Harvey v. Ashley, 3 Atk. 613.

The reason for such applications in respect to real estate is, that the rights of infants shall not be bound by any agreement in relation to it, unless the husband shall have issue by that marriage. Ib.

Consent—Refusal by Father.]—The court has no power, under the act 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, to consent to the marriage of an infant, on the ground of the father refusing his consent from undue motives. Colegrave, Ex parte, 7 L. J., Ch. 236.

—— Discovery.]—A husband charged with procuring his marriage with a minor by falsely swearing that the consent of her parent had been given cannot be compelled to discover the facts relating to such charge upon an information under 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 23, seeking the forfeiture of his interest in his wife's property. Att.-Gen. v. Lucas, 2 Hare, 566; 12 L. J., Ch. 506; 7 Jur. 1080.

—— Evidence—Presumption of Validity.]—On a question of legitimacy, there was in evidence a sentence of nullity of a marriage of a minor for want of her father's consent, and a statement in the parish register that the marriage took place by licence, with the consent of the mother. There was evidence that the sentence had been obtained by collusion between the husband and wife, and that the father did not disapprove of the match:—Held, fifty years after the date of the sentence of nullity, that the marriage ought to be presumed valid. Harrison v. Southampton Corporation, 4 De G. M. & G. 137; 22 L. J., Ch. 722; 18 Jur. 1; 1 W. R. 422.

Where a marriage of a minor was by licence, to which the consent of the father was requisite, his consent must be presumed, and this presumption is not upset by the register giving the mother as the consenting party. Ib.

Writ De Homine Replegiando.]—Writ de homine replegiando, against man running away with woman of weak mind and infant; on second day being married, husband and clergyman committed. Ashton, Ex parte, Dick. 23.

See Marriage of Ward of Court, supra, col. 1359.

2. SETTLEMENTS UNDER 4 GEO. 4, C. 76.

Purpose of Act.]—In settling the property of a minor under the Marriage Act (4 Geo. 4. c. 76), the court is bound to prevent the offending party from deriving any pecuniary benefit from the marriage, as far as may be without prejudicing the pecuniary interests of the innocent party, and of the issue of the marriage. Therefore the court refused its sanction to a general power of appointment being given to her, in case she should die before her husband; but the court approved of a power being given to her in case she survived her husband. Att.-Gen. v. Lucas, 2 Ph. 753; 18 L. J., Ch. 100; 12 Jur. 1011.

Held, also, that it was no objection to the settlement that a child dying in the lifetime of the father, after having attained a vested interest under its limitations, might bequeath such interest to the father. Ib.

In cases under the Marriage Act, when the property is settled by the court, the proper form of limitation comprises a general power to the wife of appointment by will, in default of children, without words to exclude the husband. Att.-Gen. v. Read, L. R. 12 Eq. 38; 24 L. T. 494.

Orders under that act as to settlements ought not to be made without the attorney-general appearing separately from the relator. Ib.

Where the husband incurs a forfeiture under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 23, the court has no discretion to mitigate the penalty, but is bound to settle and secure all property, present and future, of the wife for the benefit of herself or the issue of the marriage. Att.-Gen. v. Mullay, 4 Russ. 329.

Where the husband alone incurs a forfeiture under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 23, the court has no authority to order any settlement of the wife's property on the issue of the wife by any subsequent marriage. Att.-Gen. v. Mullay, 7 Beav. 351.

Under 4 & 5 Ph. & M.]—Forfeiture, by stat. 4 & 5 Ph. & M., on a woman marrying under sixteen, is during her husband's life and not during her own. Ridley v. Wilson, Amb. 73.

Marriage without Consent.]—An infant, beneficially entitled in fee, marries without the consent of her father. The father brings a bill against the husband and wife, and her trustees, that a provision might be made for her and her children out of these lands. Demurrer by the husband and wife allowed. Micoe v. Powell, 1 Vern. 39.

Reference—Limitations.]—On a fraudulent marriage of an infant tenant in tail in possession, subject to a term of years for securing a jointure, the court, being of opinion that while the jointure term lasted the title of the wife was equitable, ordered a reference for a proper settlement, but directed the settlement to be confined to the joint lives of the husband and wife, if the jointure term should so long continue, with liberty to apply as to a further settlement. Wortham v. Pemberton, 1 De G. & Sm. 644. S. C., sub nom. Newenham v. Pemberton, 17 L. J., Ch. 99; 11 Jur. 1071.

False Affidavit as to Age.]—In order to sustain an information, under s. 23 of the Marriage Act, a false affidavit that a party is of full age is equivalent to a false affidavit that the necessary consent to a minor's marriage has been obtained. To sustain such an information it is not necessary that the minor was entitled at the time of the marriage to any property. Att.-Gen. v. Severne, 1 Coll. C. C. 313; 13 L. J., Ch. 399; 8 Jur. 595.

—— Small Fund.]—A man, by falsely swearing, obtained a licence for marriage with a woman under age, and married her. The wife was entitled to stock absolutely, and to a reversionary interest, expectant on her mother's death. The court declared the wife's fortune forfeited under the Marriage Act (4 Geo. 4, c. 76), and, having regard to the small amount of the fund, directed the fund to be transferred into court, and made a declaration as to the trusts of it. Att.-Gen. v. Clements, 40 L. J., Ch. 678; L. R. 12 Eq. 32; 24 L. T. 384.

Refusal to Execute Attachment.]—A writ of attachment for refusing to execute a settlement under the Infants' Marriage Act, ss. 19, 23, will not be issued until the settlement has been tendered personally for execution after service of the decree, and he has refused to execute it. Att.-Gen. v. Wareing, 28 W. R. 623.

Form of Pre-Nuptial Settlement.]—In an information under the Marriage Act, 1823, a pre-nuptial settlement having been made of the infant wife's property, judgment was directed varying the form given by Seton, so as to follow the wording of ss. 23 and 24 of the Marriage Act, 1823. Head note in Att.-Gen. v. Read (L. R. 12 Eq. 38) explained. Att.-Gen. v. Teather, 43 L. T. 749; 29 W. R. 347.

Consent of Lord Chancellor.]—On the proposed marriage of the infant daughter of one who was non compos mentis, a petition was presented, under the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 17, in order to obtain a licence. The petition was referred to the master; and the intended husband, by affidavit, stated that he had agreed to make a certain settlement. The master reported in favour of the marriage, and the report was confirmed. The parties did not avail themselves of the consent of the Lord Chancellor, but shortly afterwards married, under the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, without licence:—Held, that the proposal laid before the master amounted to a consent, which the court would enforce. Cooke v. Fryer, 1 Hare, 498; 11 L. J., Ch. 284; 6 Jur. 479.

3. SETTLEMENTS UNDER 18 & 19 VICT. C. 43.

Jurisdiction—Ward.]—Upon the marriage of two infants, one a ward of court, the court has no power to compel a settlement to be made by either of them before the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43. Field v. Moore, 7 De G. M. & G. 691; 25 L. J., Ch. 66; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 4 W. R. 187.

Post-Nuptial Settlement.] — 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, extended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 83, renders valid a post-nuptial settlement of an infant's estate made with the approbation of the court of chancery. Powell v. Oakley, 34 Beav. 575.

A post-nuptial settlement of an infant's property may be made with the sanction of the court under the Infants' Settlement Act, 1855. Sampson and Wall, In re, or Wall, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 457; 25 Ch. D. 482; 50 L. T. 435; 32 W. R. 617—C. A.

The court has jurisdiction where a female infant has married under the age of seventeen, after she has attained that age, to direct a proper settlement of her property to be executed. Phillips, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 337; 34 Ch. D. 467; 56 L. T. 144; 35 W. R. 284.

Extent of Act.]—The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, simply relieves infants from their incapacity, and gives no power to trustees or other persons to apply under it without the infant's consent. Potter, In re, L. R. 7 Eq. 484; 20 L. T. 355; 17 W. R. 347.

The court has no jurisdiction under the act over an infant who is of age to marry, unless he or she is previously a ward of court. Ib.

An infant cannot exercise a power over personal property (though authorised to do so by the instrument creating the power) which goes to defeat his own interest therein. Armit, In re, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 352.

The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, does not alter the legal status of the infant in respect of the alienation of the property or the exercise of a power under the trusts of the settlement. Ib.

Therefore where property was settled upon trusts to be declared by an infant, the court refused to transfer the funds to her appointee, under a deed-poll executed by her while under twenty-one. Ib.

Settlement not a Release to Trustees.]—A settlement made with the sanction of the court, on the marriage of an infant, of funds alleged to represent the infant's share under a will, does not operate as a confirmation of prior dealings by the trustees of the will, so as to preclude the cestui que trust from charging the trustees under the will with breaches of trust. Zambaco v. Cassavetti, L. R. 11 Eq. 439; 24 L. T. 770.

Form.]—In a settlement under the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, there ought not to be any limitation to collaterals, or any benefit conferred upon the guardian of the minor whose property is put in settlement. M'Clintock, In re, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 469.

—— Construction.]—The settlement of an infant's personal property gave an interest to the issue in the event of the husband surviving his wife, but none in the contrary event:—Held, first, that the issue could not in the latter event take by implication or construction. Pringle v. Pringle, 22 Beav. 631.

Held, secondly, that the husband had not by the settlement reduced the fund into possession. Ib.

Inquiry as to Propriety of Marriage.]—On a petition by a female infant under the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, praying a reference to approve of a proper settlement, the Lord Chancellor made the order without directing any inquiry as to the propriety of the marriage. Dalton, In re, 6 De G. M. & G. 201; 25 L. J., Ch. 751; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1077; 4 W. R. 793.

The provisions of the act do not impose on the court any other duty than that of looking to the propriety of the settlement. Ib.

It is undecided whether the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, has relieved the court from inquiring into the propriety of the proposed marriage. But the court will make the reference where there is evidence of the propriety of the proposed marriage. Strong, In re, 26 L. J., Ch. 64; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1241; 5 W. R. 107.

Reference to Chambers.]—A petition was presented under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, for a settlement in contemplation of the marriage of an infant of large fortune. The court directed the matter to be referred to chambers. Olive, In re, 8 L. T. 567; 11 W. R. 819.

When an intended husband was about to return to a post abroad, the court, on evidence of the desirability of the marriage, sanctioned the marriage, but directed a reference to chambers to approve the settlement forthwith. Smith, Ex parte, 22 W. R. 294.

"Property in Expectancy."] — An interest under a will, ambulatory at the date of the marriage settlement of an infant, but coming into operation during the marriage:—Held, to be "property in expectancy" within the meaning of s. 1 of the Infants' Settlement Act. Johnson, In re, Moore v. Johnson, 60 L. J., Ch. 499; [1891] 3 Ch. 48; 64 L. T. 696; 39 W. R. 509.

General Power of Appointment—Death of Infant under Twenty-One.]—Section 1 of the Infants' Settlement Act enables an infant, in exercising a general power of appointment for making a settlement upon his marriage, to make an absolute appointment so that, on the failure of the limitations of the settlement, the property will become his own. In the event of the death of an infant under twenty-one, s. 2 of the act does not render the appointment void, except in the case of an infant tenant in tail. Scott, In re, Scott v. Hanbury, 60 L. J., Ch. 461 ; [1891] 1 Ch. 298 ; 63 L. T. 800 ; 39 W. R. 264.

4. AGREEMENTS FOR SETTLEMENTS.

By Parents.]—Agreements before marriage on behalf of infants, by parents and guardians, binding on infants. Ainslie v. Medlycott, 9 Ves. 19 ; 7 R. R. 135.

By Feme Covert.]—Feme, an infant, can in no case be bound by contract relative to her estate during her coverture. Stamper v. Barker, 5 Madd. 157.

An infant, by articles executed previously to her marriage, covenanted to settle her real estate. After she came of age, and during her coverture, she executed a settlement in pursuance of the articles, but did not levy a fine :—Held, that she was not bound either by the settlement or by the articles. Brown v. M'Clintock, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 347.

Articles upon marriage of feme infant tenant in quasi tail, covenanting to settle her estate when of age, not binding upon the remainderman, she dying before twenty-one. Lecky v. Know, 1 Ball & B. 210.

A covenant by an infant and her intended husband, in articles, to settle the descended estate on the issue of the marriage, is not in itself an alienation of the estate, and, therefore, does not withdraw it from the claims of the ancestor's creditors in a suit subsequently instituted by them. Whether a settlement executed pursuant to such articles after the institution of such suit would have that effect, quære. Pimm v. Insall, 1 Mac. & G. 449 ; 1 Hall & Tw. 487 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 1 ; 14 Jur. 357. Affirming 7 Hare, 193.

Money bequeathed to executors to accumulate till a niece attained twenty-one, and then to pay to the niece for her separate use. The niece married under twenty-one, and afterwards executed a settlement of this property, and joined her husband in the grant of an annuity secured on the legacy. She afterwards attained twenty-one :—Held, that the niece was entitled to have the legacy and accumulations for her separate use. Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Keen, 648 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 306.

Execution by one Party—Waiver.]—One by articles covenants, in consideration of his intended wife's conveying her lands to him and his heirs when she came of age, to settle certain lands of his own. After marriage the husband settles his lands mentioned in the articles, and recites the settlement to be in performance of the articles ; but never requires her to convey her land to him. The wife is a party to and executes this settlement. After the husband's death she enters on the settled lands. This settlement is a waiver by the husband of the proposed conveyance by the wife, and she shall hold as well her own estate as also the lands settled. Lucy v. Moore, 4 Bro. P. C. 343.

By marriage articles it was agreed that personal estate of the intended wife, a minor, and her contingent interest in a freehold estate, should be settled upon certain trusts, under which the husband took a life interest, and the wife, on failure of the trusts for the issue of the marriage, had a power of appointing the personalty by will. The personalty was afterwards duly transferred to the trustees of the articles. The issue of the marriage died, and the trusts for the issue failed. The wife died, having by will appointed the personalty to some of her relatives. Afterwards her interest in the freehold estate vested in possession, and went to her heir, no fine having ever been levied to confirm the articles :—Held, that as the husband knew that his wife was an infant, and as there was no settlement executed, nor were the articles recognised by her after twenty-one, the real estate was not bound by them ; and that the husband could not be entitled to any compensation out of the appointed personalty, the real and personal estate not having been conveyed and assigned upon the trusts of the articles through the negligence of the husband. Campbell v. Ingilby, 1 De G. & J. 393 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 654 ; 5 W. R. 837.

By a marriage settlement, made whilst the intended wife was an infant, the husband covenanted to assign to trustees certain property to which she was entitled to her separate use :—Held, that the settlement was inoperative. Waring, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 784 ; 16 Jur. 652.

Partial Execution.]—Previously to marriage in 1790, M. A. F., an infant tenant in common in tail, under a settlement dated 1767, executed an indenture settling her share upon her husband for life, with remainder to herself for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage. M. A. F., when a widow, but still an infant, married C. F. Later on the real estate was sold and vested in trustees, who, by indenture dated 1842, declared that they would stand possessed of M. A. F.'s share of the stock upon the trusts of the deed of 1790. Neither M. A. F. nor C. F. was a party to the deed of 1842. M. A. F. died in 1845, C. F. in 1849 :—Held, that the indenture of 1790 had no effect upon M. A. F.'s interest, she being under age when it was executed ; that the indenture of 1842 not having been executed by M. A. F., the presumption must be that the property remained by way of resulting trust, according to the trusts of the original settlement, and that M. A. F.'s interest in the stock was the same as her interest in the real estate, i.e. an estate tail ; and the stock was ordered to be paid to her personal representative. Fozard's Trust, In re, 1 K. & J. 233 ; 3 W. R. 219. See S. C., 24 L. J., Ch. 441.

Whether, if M. A. F. had put her share of the purchase money into the hands of her trustees, it might not have been held that the representative of an only child of M. A. F. by her first marriage was entitled, quære. Ib.

—— Reduction into Possession.]—An infant entitled, under a will, to a reversionary interest in residuary personalty expectant on the death of a life annuitant, executed marriage articles, agreeing, when of age, to settle all her interest under will on the trusts of the articles. She attained her majority. She did no act to confirm the articles, but always refused so to do. The trustee of the articles was also an executor of the will. As executor he retained in his hands the surplus interest arising from the expectant share of the infant. As trustee of the articles he lent some of the trust moneys to the husband, on the security of a mortgage from him. The husband and wife jointly petitioned the court in respect of the trust accounts, and the wife signed a receipt for interest on the mortgage money. The husband died, and after his death the wife gave the trustee of the articles a receipt for other supposed arrears of interest on the mortgage money, assuming it to be her trust moneys under the articles. The mortgage was called in. The annuitant died, and the residuary personalty then became divisible:—Held, that as to the surplus interest and the mortgage money there had been a reduction into possession during the husband's life, and that they were subject to the articles. Rawlins v. Birkett, 25 L. J., Ch. 837; 4 W. R. 795.

Part of the reversionary interest consisted of the purchase money of real estate which had been sold, and of real estate ordered to be sold, but not sold. The purchase money was in court:—Held, that she was entitled to the purchase money absolutely, and to an equitable fee in the unsold realty, independent of the articles. Ib.

Dissolution of Marriage.]—A woman, married during her infancy, was deserted by her husband and obtained a dissolution of the marriage. Under articles of settlement, personal estate belonging to her was held on trust for her absolutely after the death of her husband in her lifetime. She never assented to the settlement:—Held, that she was entitled to have the whole fund paid or transferred to her. Swift v. Wenman, 39 L. J., Ch. 336; L. R. 10 Eq. 15; 22 L. T. 194; 18 W. R. 480.

Trust for Next of Kin.]—Covenant by husband that the wife's real and personal property should be settled upon trust for himself for life, then for her for her life, and then, in default of issue, upon trust for her next of kin. The property was duly vested in the trustees. The husband died, and there was no issue of the marriage:—Held, that the trust for the next of kin was not binding against the wife. Gibbs v. Grady, 41 L. J., Ch. 163; 20 W. R. 257.

Specific Performance.]—By articles an infant and her husband covenanted to assign a reversionary interest in trust funds, in trust, for her and her husband, and the children of their marriage. A bill for specific performance, filed by the children whilst the fund remained outstanding, was dismissed. Borton v. Borton, 16 Sim. 552; 18 L. J., Ch. 219; 13 Jur. 247.

Personal Estate — Consent of Infant.] — Articles, on the marriage of a female infant, recited that all the real and personal estate to which she might be entitled should be settled, and the husband covenanted, "in case she would voluntarily consent thereto, but not otherwise," that he and she would settle the same:—Held, that the consent applied only to real estate, and that the personal estate must be settled, though the wife refused to consent. Daniel's Trust, In re, 18 Beav. 309.

When a Fair Settlement.]—To bind an infant, the marriage settlement must be fair and reasonable, and not tend to deprive her of everything. Williams v. Williams, 1 Bro. C. C. 152.

Infant, to express his consent, joins in a settlement by a woman in contemplation of marriage with him; he is bound thereby, if on fair consideration, and no fraud. Strathmore (Countess) v. Bowes, 1 Ves. Jun. 28; 1 R. R. 76.

Chattels Real.]—Articles of settlement of chattels real of infant on marriage will bind her and husband; and although no settlement be made pursuant to articles, wife is not entitled to any interest by survivorship. Trollope v. Linton, 1 Sim. & S. 477; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 3.

Who bound by Covenants.]—An agreement by husband and wife, an infant, in an ante-nuptial settlement, for the settlement by the husband and wife of the wife's after-acquired property, is a covenant by the wife as well as by the husband. Smith v. Lucas, 18 Ch. D. 531; 45 L. T. 460; 30 W. R. 451.

A male infant marries an adult female, who, by settlements, covenants that her estate shall be settled: he is bound by her covenant. Slocombe v. Clubb or Glubb, 2 Bro. C. C. 545.

A marriage settlement, the husband being adult and the wife a minor, is binding on the former, though not on the latter. Cave v. Cave, 15 Beav. 227.

—— Voidable by Infant.]—Marriage articles executed by an adult and an infant, there being no settlement under the Infants' Settlement Act, nor any afterwards executed, though voidable by the infant, are binding on the adult. Smith's Trusts, In re, 25 L. R., Ir. 439.

Acts in Fraud of Settlement.]—A female infant is not bound by an agreement to settle her real estate, if she does not accede to it when of age and after coverture, but the husband shall never be permitted to aid her in defeating it, nor is her act during coverture effectual. Durnford v. Lane, 1 Bro. C. C. 106. S. P., Milner v. Harewood (Lord), 18 Ves. 277.

Effect of an agreement, on marriage of a female infant, to settle her real estate. It would be a fraud upon the husband's contract if he were to consent to a disposition of the estate by his wife calculated to defeat the settlement. Blake, Ex parte, 16 Beav. 463.

After-acquired Property.]—An infant married without any settlement executed, but a draft had been prepared which contained a covenant to settle her future property. On payment out of court to the trustees of a post-nuptial settlement, the court directed that a covenant similar to that in the draft should be indorsed on the post-nuptial settlement. Hoare, In re, 7 L. T. 523; 11 W. R. 181.

5. Ratification and Repudiation of Settlements.

General Rule — After-acquired Property.]—Ratification of a covenant made during infancy, consists in recognising the covenant as binding, not in making a new covenant, or a new disposition of the property comprised in the covenant. Harris v. Wall (1 Ex. 122) and Mawson v. Blane (10 Ex. 206), followed. Hodson's Settlement, In re, Williams v. Knight, 63 L. J., Ch. 609; [1894] 2 Ch. 421; 8 R. 346; 71 L. T. 77; 42 W. R. 531.

The disability of coverture does not preclude a married woman from affirming a covenant entered into by her while a spinster and an infant. Wilder v. Pigott (22 Ch. D. 263) and Greenhill v. North British and Mercantile Insurance Co. (3 R. 674) followed. Ib.

Infants' Relief Act, 1874.]—The Infants' Relief Act, 1874, does not apply to a marriage settlement executed by an infant; but such a settlement is, as against the infant, voidable only.

Jones, Ex parte (18 Ch. D. 122), explained. Duncan v. Dixon, 59 L. J., Ch. 437; 44 Ch. D. 211; 62 L. T. 319; 38 W. R. 700.

Accepting Jointure or Pin-money.]—An infant is bound in a court of equity by a marriage contract, especially if she accept pin-money, or after her husband's death a jointure under the contract. Smith v. Low, 1 Atk. 489.

Partial Accession.]—Partial accession at the age of twenty-one, to a settlement by a female infant, an election to abide by the whole. Milner v. Harewood (Lord), 18 Ves. 277.

Interest of an infant, not affected by the recital of a deed made during infancy. Id. 274.

Female infant not bound by agreement to settle her freehold estate on marriage, without an option when twenty-one to refuse; but her heir bound under the circumstances; the settlement confirmed by her repeated acts and fines. Id. 259.

Lunatic.]—An infant, upon her marriage, executed a settlement of two reversionary interests in personalty. While she was widow one of the funds fell into possession, and was, by her direction, paid to the trustees of the settlement, upon the trusts thereof. Before the second fund fell into possession she had become a lunatic:—Held, that she must be taken to have confirmed the settlement in toto, and that the second fund was subject to the trusts thereof. Davies v. Davies, 39 L. J., Ch. 343; L. R. 9 Eq. 468; 22 L. T. 505; 18 W. R. 634.

Agreement in Writing.]—An infant, prior to marriage, wrote to his future wife saying he would make her a present of a portion of his property, viz. seven specified houses, which would bring her in 200*l.* a year and make her "happy for life." He subsequently came of age, married, and executed a post-nuptial settlement which did not refer to the agreement, by which he settled nine houses, including the seven, on his wife for life, remainder to himself for life, remainder to the wife in fee:—Held, that there had been no ratification in writing of the agreement, as required by 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, and that the settlement was bad as against a purchaser from the husband. Trowell v. Shenton, 47 L. J., Ch. 738; 8 Ch. D. 318; 38 L. T. 369; 26 W. R. 837—C. A.

By Deed.]—An infant feme covert entitled to property for her separate use, executed a post-nuptial settlement. Subsequently, when of age, she executed a deed confirming the settlement. She is precluded from attempting to set the settlement aside. Merryweather v. Jones, 4 Giff. 499; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 290; 10 L. T. 62; 12 W. R. 524.

Election—Post-nuptial Settlement.]—A case of election may arise where a lady marries while an infant, and after she becomes of age joins in a settlement which includes property of her husband, property of her father, and property in which her father has a life interest, and she has an absolute interest in reversion, and she becomes discovert, and then claims the reversionary property independently of the settlement. Codrington v. Codrington, 45 L. J., Ch. 660; L. R. 7 H. L. 854; 34 L. T. 221; 24 W. R. 648.

Appointment of New Trustee.]—By an ante-nuptial settlement the wife, a minor, covenanted to settle after-acquired property. After attaining twenty-one the husband and wife by deed appointed a new trustee of the settlement. Subsequently the wife acquired property under a will:—Held, that the appointment of a new trustee, in accordance with the usual power, by a married woman did not show her intention to confirm the settlement. Haywood v. Tidy, 63 L. T. 679.

Joint Tenancy—Severance—Cæterorum Grant.]—Where on the marriage of a female infant her interest as one of several joint-tenants in a reversionary property is settled, the settlement is valid and effectual until avoided, and operates to sever the joint-tenancy. Smith v. Lucas (18 Ch. D. 531) considered. Burnaby v. Equitable Reversionary Interest Society, 54 L. J., Ch. 466; 28 Ch. D. 416; 52 L. T. 350; 33 W. R. 639.

The lady, in exercise of a power given by the settlement, appointed all her property to her husband absolutely and appointed him executor:—Held, that the husband could make a good title to the wife's interest without any cæterorum grant. Held also, that the husband's title was sufficiently clear to be forced upon a purchaser. —Ib.

Reversionary Interest.]—By a marriage settlement, the wife being an infant, personal property was assigned by the husband and wife to trustees upon the usual trusts. There was a covenant by the husband that he and his wife would, so soon as she should attain twenty-one, convey and assign real and personal property to which she was entitled. There was an agreement to settle the wife's after-acquired personal property. The wife (a week after she attained twenty-one) and her husband executed a deed, which she acknowledged, by which she assigned all the personal property expressed to be assigned by the settlement which had not become vested in possession, and conveyed property purported to be conveyed by the settlement upon the trusts thereof. At the date of the settlement she was contingently entitled to a reversionary interest in personal estate. It fell into possession, and it was by the direction of the wife and her husband invested in the names of the trustees:—Held, following Barrow v. Barrow (4 K. & J. 409) and Smith v. Lucas (18 Ch. D. 531), that the wife could during her coverture elect to confirm the settlement, and that she had by her acts elected. Wilder v. Pigott, 52 L. J., Ch. 141; 22 Ch. D. 263; 48 L. T. 112; 31 W. R. 377.

The wife having become of unsound mind, if she had not elected the court would have made an election on her behalf, it having jurisdiction to bind the equitable interests of lunatics, not so found by inquisition, when it appears to be for their benefit. Jones v. Lloyd (L. R. 18 Eq. 265) followed. Ib.

—— Consent Decree.]—By a settlement the intended husband and wife (a minor) agreed to convey to trustees, as soon as possible, funds to which the wife was contingently entitled in reversion, and the husband agreed to bring certain property into settlement. After the husband's death, in a suit relating to property agreed to be settled by him, in which the widow, as administratrix, was a defendant, a decree was made by consent by which part of the property was paid to the trustees:—Held, a confirmation by the widow of the settlement. The widow married again; and the reversionary funds fell into possession, and upon a petition by the husband and wife an order was made that the wife's funds be carried over to an account entitled the "Account of the settlement made on the first marriage." White v. Cox, 45 L. J., Ch. 685; 2 Ch. D. 387; 34 L. T. 418.

On a suit by the second husband to have the settlement declared void against him and the children of the second marriage:—Held, that the presentation of the petition, followed by the order of the court, amounted to a confirmation by second husband of the settlement. Ib.

—— Annuity.]—In a marriage settlement, the father of the lady (a minor) covenanted to pay an annuity to his daughter during life, and after her death to her husband, she covenanting that the share to which she might become entitled under a will should be settled upon the trusts of the settlement. She never formally ratified the settlement, but regularly received the annuity:—Held, that she had ratified the settlement by her acts, and that the fund under the will was bound by the trusts of the settlement. Smith, In re, 38 L. T. 466.

Repudiation—Within what Time.]—Semble, that a settlement made upon marriage of the property of an infant, with sanction of court, may be afterwards repudiated by the infant coming of age and, if a female, surviving her husband. Ashton v. M'Dougal, 5 Beav. 56; 11 L. J., Ch. 344; 6 Jur. 447.

On the marriage of a female infant, her reversionary interests in choses in action were settled under the court. She afterwards contracted subsequent marriages, but no further settlement was executed. Part of the reversionary interests fell into possession during the first coverture, and part during the second, and were transferred to the trustees:—Held, that the wife having survived, and not having called for a transfer of the fund, must be deemed to have acquiesced in and adopted it, as it was for her interest to do so, and that her second husband was bound by it. Ib.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]—Any property of a woman married after the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which would have been bound, apart from the act, by an assignment of the husband alone in a settlement, is still bound by such assignment under s. 19, notwithstanding s. 2, which makes the property of a woman married after the act her separate property. Hancock v. Hancock (38 Ch. D. 78) applied and followed. Stevens v. Trevor-Garrick, 62 L. J., Ch. 660; [1893] 2 Ch. 307; 3 R. 468; 69 L. T. 11; 41 W. R. 412.

What is a Reasonable Time.]—A female infant executed a marriage settlement of a reversionary interest in real estate. The interest fell into possession in 1890, and the wife then received payments in respect of income from the trustees of the will under which she was entitled:—Held, that the wife was entitled to repudiate, and that a reasonable time to repudiate is when the question arises whether anything is to be received under the settlement. Jones, In re, Farrington v. Forrester, 62 L. J., Ch. 996; [1893] 2 Ch. 461; 3 R. 498; 69 L. T. 45.

An infant's settlement being voidable becomes binding if not repudiated within a reasonable time after the settlor's majority. In determining what is a reasonable time the fact that the property did not fall into possession till some years after such majority, or that the settlor was imperfectly acquainted with the terms of the settlement, cannot be taken into consideration. Edwards v. Carter, 63 L. J., Ch. 100; [1893] A. C. 360; 1 R. 218; 69 L. T. 153; 58 J. P. 4.

—— Compensation.]—By a marriage settlement the husband's property was settled on the husband for life, remainder to the wife (a minor) for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation during any coverture, with trusts in remainder for the issue. The wife's property was settled on the wife during the joint lives of the parties, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with trusts for the issue. The husband and wife covenanted to settle the wife's after-acquired property on the same trusts as the wife's other property. The settlement was not executed under the Infants' Settlement Act. The wife was entitled to certain reversionary interests. She also took under the settlement certain interests as to which she was not restrained from anticipation. There was issue of the marriage. The husband obtained a decree nisi for divorce. Before the decree was made absolute the wife brought an action claiming that her covenant was inoperative. After decree absolute the plaintiff married again. The plaintiff had not confirmed the settlement as regarded certain reversionary interests still outstanding:—Held, that as regarded these interests the plaintiff's covenant was inoperative, but that she was put to her election, and that if she elected not to be bound by her covenant she must compensate, out of any benefit she took under the settlement, those whom she disappointed by her repudiation. This order, however, was not to apply to the income of the husband's property during the plaintiff's present coverture, nor to the income of the wife's property during such portion of the plaintiff's present coverture as the defendant should live:—Held, further, that the plaintiff had not already made her election by bringing the action, but must elect within one month from the judgment. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 61 L. J., Ch. 220; [1892] 1 Ch. 396; 66 L. T. 112; 40 W. R. 312. And see Codrington v. Codrington, supra, col. 1395.

Agreement to assign Wife's Property to Trustee.]—The plaintiff's husband, who married when he was seventeen, agreed in writing before the marriage, and in consideration of the same, to assign all her property to a trustee for her sole and separate use. At the time of the marriage the plaintiff was possessed of leasehold property in her own right, and of other leasehold property in trust for her son by a former marriage, and the defendant, her agent, received the rents both before and after the marriage. Immediately after the last marriage the plaintiff was deserted by her husband, and she obtained a protection order, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21, protecting all her earnings and property acquired since the desertion. The action was brought by the plaintiff without her husband (still an infant) for the rents received by the defendant after the marriage. The husband made no claim to any of the rents, but the defendant refused to pay them to the plaintiff:—Held, that the agreement to assign was void as against the infant husband. Kingsman v. Kings-

Held, by Lord Selborne, L.C., and Baggallay, L.J., that the agreement being void against her husband she could not recover the money received from the property which belonged to her absolutely. Ib.

Held, by Brett, L.J., that she could, since the husband had made no claim, and therefore the defendant could not set up the husband's right as an answer to the action. Ib.

Held, also, that the protection order did not apply, but that the plaintiff was entitled to sue alone and to recover the money received from the property of which she was trustee. Ib.

6. Payment out of Court.

Feme Covert.]—The court declined taking the consent of a married woman who was a minor to the payment out of court of money to which she was entitled. Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Beav. 496 ; 3 Jur. 1118.

The court will not take the consent of a married woman, who is under age, to the payment to her husband of money to which she is entitled. Abraham v. Newcombe, 12 Sim. 566 ; 6 Jur. 433.

A fund in court belonging to an infant married woman will not be paid out to her husband, as she cannot waive her equity to settlement. Angibau, In re (15 Ch. D. 228), noticed. Shipway v. Ball, 50 L. J., Ch. 263 ; 16 Ch. D. 376 ; 44 L. T. 49 ; 29 W. R. 302.

—— Consent.]—The court will take the consent of a married woman, though a minor, to the payment to her husband of a sum to which she is entitled. Gullin v. Gullin, 7 Sim. 236.

On the marriage of an infant feme, a settlement was made of funds in court to which she was entitled. On her attaining twenty-one a petition was presented for payment to the trustees :—Held, that the consent of the lady in court or by commission was necessary. Day v. Day, 11 Beav. 35.

—— To Solicitor.]—An infant was entitled on her attaining her majority to a share of a fund in court. The court declined to order the share to be paid out a month before majority to her solicitor, but gave liberty to apply in chambers for payment, on a certificate of the chief clerk that she had become entitled. Sothern, In re, 9 L. T. 534.

E. Advancement and Satisfaction.

1. In General.

What is Proper.] —The father is the only judge of what is a proper advancement for his child. Cook v. Arnham, 3 P. Wms. 285.

A parent's duty to provide for all his children will extend to posthumous ones. Wallis v. Hodson, 2 Atk. 116.

What is.] —Advancement is a payment to persons who are presumably entitled to, or have a vested or contingent interest in, an estate or a legacy before the time fixed by the trust instrument for their obtaining the absolute interest in a portion or a whole of that to which they would be entitled. (Per Cotton, L.J.) Aldridge, In re, Abram v. Aldridge, 55 L. T. 554—C. A.

Absence of Express Words — Power whether inferred.]—In the absence of express words authorising the payment, by way of advancement, of part of the corpus of an estate to a person who, under the trust instrument, can never become absolutely entitled to a share of the corpus, the court will not infer a power to the trustees to advance a sum out of the corpus from the mere fact that the instrument contains a power of advancement simpliciter. Ib.

Power of, exercisable with Consent of Life Tenant—Bankruptcy.]—Trust of half income of fund to J. for life, and after his death in trust for W. (an infant), empowering the trustees to raise any part not exceeding one-half of W.'s share for his advancement, subject to the consent in writing of J. :—Held, that J.'s power of consenting was not extinguished by his bankruptcy, but could not be exercised without the sanction of his trustee in bankruptcy acting under the direction of the court of bankruptcy. Cooper, In re, Cooper v. Slight, 27 Ch. D. 565 ; 51 L. T. 113 ; 32 W. R. 1015.

Son's Wages Satisfied by Legacy.] —A son, placed by his father in business, accounted to his father for all profits ; having made no demand for wages during his father's life, was held not entitled as a creditor after his father's death, or if he had a demand it was satisfied by a legacy to a greater amount. Plume v. Plume, 7 Ves. 258.

Payment of Son's Debt.]—A father voluntarily paid a debt due from his son, and the father died insolvent :—Held, that there was no debt from the son to the father's estate. Graham v. Wickham, 31 Beav. 478.

Son's Wages Received by Father.] — Father receives his child's earnings while living with him, and becomes bankrupt ; the child, by agreement, admitted a creditor for a particular sum to avoid an inquiry. Macklin, Ex parte, 2 Ves. Sen. 675.

Father-in-Law—Debt not satisfied by Legacy.] —A legatee, son-in-law to the testator, was held entitled to his legacy discharged from debts due by him to the testator, and a debt for which the testator was his surety upon evidence, from the testator's accounts, letters, and memorandums, in his handwriting. Eden v. Smith, 5 Ves. 341.

—— Debt Secured by Mortgage.]—A father-in-law, who paid a mortgage debt secured on his son-in-law's property and took a receipt from the mortgagee, in which the mortgagee agreed to reconvey the property when required :—Held, not to have shown an intention to exonerate the property. Fenwick v. Potts, 8 De G. M. & G. 506.

Advances, how brought into Account.]—In administering the estate of an intestate who has made advances to his children, the inquiry as to advances should follow the words of the Statute of Distributions. Ennis, In re, Waterton v. Ennis, 43 L. T. 748 ; 28 W. R. 885.

A husband directed his trustees to pay the income of one moiety of his residuary estate to his widow during her life, and to divide the other moiety between his children in equal shares, as tenants in common. Advances were made by the testator to children after the will:—Held, that the advances could only be brought into account for the benefit of the children among themselves, and not for the benefit of the widow. Meinertzhagen v. Walters, 41 L. J., Ch. 801; L. R. 7 Ch. 670; 27 L. T. 326; 20 W. R. 918.

—— Direction by Testator.]—A testator having directed an allotment of his residuary estate into shares among his children, recited that he had made provisions by advancement for some of them, and proceeded to direct that "such advances should be brought into hotchpot," adding a declaration of the principle on which the money was to be brought into hotchpot upon a statement of figures and calculation of the amount of advancement, and of his residuary property:—Held, that the calculation of the testator was only an illustrative example of his meaning, and that the bringing into hotchpot should be according to the legal meaning of that term. Maclaren v. Stainton, 30 L. J., Ch. 723; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 715; 4 L. T. 715; 9 W. R. 908.

A testator divided his property between his son and married daughters, and he declared that the debts due to him from his son and his sons-in-law should be "paid or accounted for to his executors," before his children should receive any part of his estate. By a codicil he cut down his son's interest to a life estate, and gave interests in share to his wife and children:—Held, that the son was only to bring the amount of his debts into hotchpot as regarded his two sisters. White v. Turner, 25 Beav. 505.

Trust to convert, and after the death or second marriage of his wife to hold the proceeds for his child or children living at that time, and the issue then living of his child or children dying before that period, such objects to take as tenants in common according to the stocks. His real estate was to be considered as converted from his death, and it was declared that no child, to whom or to whose husband he should have paid any portion in his lifetime, should participate without bringing the portion so paid into hotchpot. On the marriage of one of his daughters before the will, the testator covenanted to stand seised of a freehold house to her use, her heirs and assigns for ever. She died leaving issue:—Held, that the hotchpot clause could not be extended to the issue of the testator's children, so that the value of the house given to his daughter was not to be deducted from the share of her issue. Hewitt v. Jardine, L. R. 14 Eq. 58; 26 L. T. 546.

A testator gave his residuary estate in trust for sale, and to stand possessed of the proceeds in trust for his children, nominatim, in equal shares, including F. and J.; and after reciting that he had advanced 4,000*l.* to F. and 500*l.* to J., he declared that "neither of my said sons, nor any of my children who shall receive any sum for their advancement, shall be entitled to any part of my residuary estate without bringing the said sums of 4,000*l.* and 500*l.*, and all other sums so given, with interest thereon at 5*l.* per cent. per annum from the times of advancing the same into hotchpot." By a codicil the testator revoked the provision made in favour of J., thereby causing a lapse of J.'s one-sixth of the residue:—Held, that the codicil must be read as if it expressly declared a trust of the lapsed share for the testator's wife and children according to the Statute of Distributions; and accordingly that the hotchpot clause applied to the shares taken by the children under the codicil, but did not apply to the widow so as to increase her share under the codicil. Stewart, In re, Stewart v. Stewart, 49 L. J., Ch. 763; 15 Ch. D. 539; 43 L. T. 370; 29 W. R. 275.

Devise in Shares.]—A. having seven children makes an executor in trust, and devises to each child one-seventh of his personal estate; one of the children dies in A.'s lifetime, and one of the six surviving children has been advanced; yet this child shall take his full share of the seventh part, without bringing what he had received before into hotchpot. Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. Wms. 124.

Statute-barred Debts or Advances.]—A testator directed his residuary estate to be divided amongst his six children, with a clause that any debt owing to him at his decease by any of his children should be considered as part of his residuary estate. One of his sons owed him a debt, but part of it was barred by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that the whole must be paid out of his share, and that the clause amounted to a hotchpot clause. Rose v. Gould, 15 Beav. 189; 21 L. J., Ch. 360.

—— Deduction by Executors.]—A husband by will gave his property to his wife for life, and after her death equally between his children, subject to a proviso that if, at the period of distribution, B. "should be indebted to any of her brothers or sisters in respect of advances made to her, his trustees should be empowered to deduct all or any such debts or advances from her share." B. had borrowed from one brother 100*l.*, and other sums from another brother. Nearly all these debts had become barred by the statute:—Held, that the trustees were authorised to deduct from B.'s share all the debts, though barred by the statute. Poole v. Poole, L. R. 7 Ch. 17; 25 L. T. 770; 20 W. R. 133.

Where Father had no Title to Property advanced.]—The court will supply a defective conveyance in favour of children; but there is no case where the court would decree satisfaction out of assets, if the father had no title to the thing he conveys to his child. Saltern v. Melhuish, Amb. 251.

Breach of Trust—Following Trust Funds—Advance by Father to Son.]—A father obtained control over the funds, subject to the trusts of a settlement under which his wife and he took successive life interests with remainder to his two sons. He realised the funds, and treated the proceeds as his own property. He made to his sons certain advances which were held not to be a satisfaction of his liability to the sons in respect of the trust funds. The advances to one of the sons comprised a sum of 4,000*l.* dock stock which had been purchased with a sum of 2,885*l.*, part of the proceeds of the trust funds. The father, his wife, and son were all dead. There was nothing to show that the son was aware that there had been any dealing with the trust funds, or out of what money the dock stock had been purchased; and the correspondence which passed on the occasion of the advance showed that the intention was that the father should make it out of his own money, and that the son's share under the settlement was not to be dealt with:—Held, that the son was not to be taken as having to the extent of the 2,885*l.* received his share of the trust funds, and the father's estate was accountable for that sum equally with the remainder of the proceeds of the trust funds. Crichton v. Crichton, 65 L. J., Ch. 491; [1896] 1 Ch. 870; 74 L. T. 357—C. A.

Law in Scotland.]—The English rule against double portions to children does not obtain in Scotland. Johnstone v. Haviland, [1896] A. C. 95.

And see PORTION—WILL.

2. BY PARENT IN NAME OF CHILD.

Presumption in Equity.]—Purchase in the name of another is a trust for the party who pays the consideration, except by a parent in the name of his child, which is presumed an advancement; the presumption capable of being rebutted, but does not give way to slight circumstances. Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. 43; 10 R. R. 12.

When a father purchases property with his own money, and takes a conveyance in the name of his son, the law presumes it to be an advancement, and not a trust. Those who allege a trust are bound to prove it; and the evidence for that consists mainly, if not exclusively, of contemporaneous circumstances. Christy v. Courtenay, 13 Beav. 96.

Purchase by a father in the name of his son an advancement. Grey v. Grey, Finch, 338; 1 Ch. Ca. 296; 2 Swanst. 594; 19 R. R. 150. S. P., Mumma v. Mumma, 2 Vern. 19.

Eldest Son.]—If a father purchases land in the name of his eldest son, this shall be an advancement, and not a trust, though the father had been in possession and had received the rents and profits. Grey v. Grey, 1 Ch. Ca. 296; Finch, 338; Scroope v. Scroope, 1 Ch. Ca. 27; Elliot v. Elliot, 2 Ch. Ca. 231, where this was said to be the constant rule; but Lord Chancellor, in that case, said that where a parent made a purchase in the name of an unadvanced child, and where in the name of one already advanced, in the former case it should be considered an advancement, and in the latter a trust for the parent. See Shales v. Shales, 2 Freem. 252, where this rule is said to have been so settled before the Statute of Frauds, and it is stronger since; and in Redington v. Redington, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 181, it was said by Fitzgibbon, Ch., that the rule laid down in Grey v. Grey, supra, and also in Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. Wms. 111, and in Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 386, has this strong additional circumstance in the two latter cases, that parol evidence was there held admissible on the part of the advanced son to rebut a claim of trust. Bridgm. Ind.

A father, having provided for his eldest son, but not for the rest, takes a security for the proceeds of an estate, sold in the name of himself and eldest son:—Held, a trust for the father's personal representatives. Pole v. Pole, 1 Ves. sen. 76.

—— Dower.]—A. purchases lands in his eldest son's name, and puts him into possession, and the son falling sick, takes a declaration of trust from him, and after the son's recovery he continues in possession. The son marries and dies, and the father gets a conveyance from his youngest son. The eldest son's wife shall have dower in these lands. Bateman v. Bateman, 2 Vern. 436.

Son already Advanced.]—Where there is no clear proof of a trust between father and son, the law will never imply a trust. If a son is married in his father's lifetime, and by him fully advanced, there a purchase by a father in the name of a son may be a trust for the father; but where the son is not advanced but in part, it must be taken as an advancement for the son. Redington v. Redington, 3 Ridgw. 176.

The presumption that a voluntary transfer by a father into a son's name is a gift, is independent of any consideration of the son's need of advancement, or of the relative means of the father and son; and the circumstance that the father is very old, and the transfer is made from his name by the son acting under a power of attorney, does not tend to rebut the ordinary presumption. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 40 L. J., Ch. 111; L. R. 11 Eq. 10; 23 L. T. 388; 19 W. R. 46.

A grandfather settled 1,000*l.* on each of his granddaughters, the children of his only son, and afterwards he transferred all the property which he possessed into the name of his son. He died at the age of ninety-four, having resided the last ten years with his son, a man of considerable property:—Held, that the transfer to the son operated as an absolute gift to him. Ib.

Younger Son—Joint Tenants.] — A purchase made in the name of a younger son, the heir cannot maintain it a trust for the father. Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 480.

When a father takes an estate in it to himself for life, with remainder to his son in fee, as the father has the profits for life he is liable to the creditors. Ib.

In the judgment of Lord Hardwicke, cases have gone full far enough in favour of advancements. Ib.

Purchase in the son's name, though the possession continued in the father, has been held in advancement of the son, because the father is the natural guardian during minority. Ib.

Purchase in the names of father and son, as joint tenants, is no advancement to the son; for, till a division, the father has possession of the whole, and even after it a moiety, besides the chance of the other moiety by survivorship. Ib.

Possession by Father.]—A father purchases lands in his son's name, then eighteen years of age; the father continued in possession till his death. This shall be an advancement for the son. Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 386.

Purchase in Name of Trustee.] — Father buys an estate in the name of his younger son and of a trustee; it shall be taken as an advancement. So, though a reversion be settled on the younger son expectant on the mother's death. Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. Wms. 111.

Deed Executed by Son.]—A deed of conveyance by a father to a son was executed by both father and son, but was kept by the father, and found among his papers when he died. It was registered by him nine months after its date, he being an attorney. The father received the profits of the estate and made new leases, to which the son assented. The son occasionally received money from tenants, which the father allowed credit for:—Held, that the deed being originally an advancement, none of these circumstances affected the son's title. Alleyne v. Alleyne, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 493; 2 Jo. & Lat. 544.

Practice—Petition.]—Lands bought by a father in the name of a son held not to amount to an advancement; but the Lord Chancellor declined to make an order to that effect on the petition of the father, though founded on the certificate of the master under s. 38 of the Trustee Act, 1850. Collinson v. Collinson, 3 De G. M. & G. 409.

Voting Qualification.]—A conveyance of property by a father to his son to give him a qualification to vote is not invalid, but is a bounty. May v. May, 33 Beav. 81.

A voluntary conveyance, for conferring a qualification under the Bedford Level Act, by a father in favour of his son, was executed and registered, but never communicated to the son, who died. The legal estate was outstanding in a mortgagee:—Held, that the father was entitled to have the property comprised in the deed conveyed to him. Childers v. Childers, 1 De G. & J. 482; 26 L. J., Ch. 743; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1277; 5 W. R. 793.

Out of Settlement Funds.]—Where A. invested some of the funds, subject to the trusts of his settlement, in the purchase of real estate, and added some money of his own:—Held, that it was an advancement to the parties entitled under the settlement. Ouseley v. Anstruther, 10 Beav. 461.

Lease by Lord of Manor.]—Lord of manor (his tenants refusing to renew) makes a lease of the premises to his daughter for ninety-nine years, and afterwards sells the manor to J., who has notice of the lease, but has security that the daughter when at age should surrender. Daughter decreed to have the benefit of the lease. Jennings v. Selleck, 1 Vern. 467.

Copyholds.]—Where a father and two sons, A. and B., were successive lives in a copyhold, wherein, by custom, person first named might dispose of the whole interest, and upon marriage of A., it was agreed that the father should have power to appoint, during life of A., and widowhood of his intended wife; father having afterwards obtained a new grant for lives of C., a third son, and A. and B., by will made after death of C., in which no mention is made of copyhold, gives residue of his personal estate to B.:—Held, that B. was not thereby entitled to copyhold. Rumboll v. Rumboll, 2 Eden, 15.

Copyhold granted to A., and B. his wife, and C. his younger son, to take in succession for their lives, and the life of the survivors; the purchase-money was all paid by A.; C. is not a trustee of his life interest for A., but takes it beneficially as an advancement from his father. Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Cox, 92; 2 R. R. 14.

One seised of a copyhold for the joint lives of himself and his brother afterwards surrenders it, and takes a new grant for the joint lives of himself, the brother, and one of the surrenderor's sons:—Held, that the latter, who survived, was entitled to the copyhold as an advancement. Skeats v. Skeats, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 9; 12 L. J., Ch. 22; 6 Jur. 942.

A father purchased a copyhold, and was admitted thereto to hold during the lives of his children, A., B. and C. successively. B., after the death of the father and of A., got admitted:—Held, that by the form of the grant, the father had made an advancement to his sons, who were therefore entitled beneficially. Jeans v. Cooke, 24 Beav. 513; 27 L. J., Ch. 202; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 57; 6 W. R. 175.

W., tenant by copy of court roll for his life, took, according to the custom, a grant of the reversion to C. and D., his sons, for the term of their lives, in trust for W., "as sole purchaser":—Held, that C. and D. were trustees of the reversion for W. Keats v. Hewer, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1040; 11 L. T. 209; 13 W. R. 34.

—— Entireties.]—A. purchases copyhold estate, and takes the surrender to himself and his wife and daughter, and their heirs; the husband and wife (as one person) take a moiety by entireties, and the daughter the other moiety; the husband mortgages it and dies; void for the whole, and no relief in equity. Back v. Andrew, 2 Vern. 120; Pre. Ch. 1.

—— Surrender to Use of Will.]—Tenant in possession procured a grant of the copyhold to son in remainder, and at same time surrendered it to use of his will:—Held, not an advancement, and son trustee only. Prankerd v. Prankerd, 1 Sim. & S. 1; 24 R. R. 142.

Consols.]—Consols invested by a father in the names of his two daughters:—Held, under the circumstances, to form part of his estate, and not to be an advancement to them. Bone v. Pollard, 24 Beav. 283.

—— Settlement.]—Consols were vested in the trustees of a marriage settlement. The husband directed the bankers who received the dividends and paid them to him, to invest an additional sum of 2,000*l.* consols in the names of the same trustees, so that they might receive the dividends as before. The bankers paid the dividends of the aggregate fund to the husband during his life. No notice was given to the trustees of the fresh investment:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* became subject to the trusts of the settlement, as an augmentation of the trust fund. Curteis, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 631; L. R. 14 Eq. 217; 26 L. T. 863.

Stock—No Trust Declared.]—A. directed his agents to invest part of his balance in their hands in the purchase of stock, in the names of himself and his wife, in trust for his infant son. The agents made the purchase in the joint names, but without any trust expressed. A. allowed the stock to remain without any trust being declared, and received the dividends down to his decease:—Held, that the stock formed part of his assets. Smith v. Warde, 15 Sim. 56; 15 L. J., Ch. 105; 9 Jur. 981.

—— Dividends Paid to Son.]—A father transferred a sum of stock from his own name into the joint names of his son and of their banker, to receive their dividends; and he told the banker to carry the dividends to the son's account:—Held, first, that the son was entitled to the stock absolutely; secondly, that a codicil to the father's will, executed after the transfer, could not be read to qualify or explain the effect of the transaction. Crabb v. Crabb, 1 Myl. & K. 511; 3 L. J., Ch. 181.

—— Dividends Received by Father.]—Purchase of stock by father in the name of the son, the father continuing to receive the dividends under a power from the son:—Held, after his death to be an advancement. Sidmouth v. Sidmouth, 2 Beav. 447; 9 L. J., Ch. 282.

Shares—Calls Paid by Father.]—A father having purchased shares, some in his own name, some in the name of his son, and having for some years paid the calls upon them:—Held, that it was a trust for the father. Scawin v. Scawin, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 65.

—— Director's Qualification.]—A father made his eldest son, who was living near him, and was married, a liberal annual allowance. He also took shares in three companies in his son's name, the number of shares being more than sufficient for a director's qualification. The son became a director of these companies, and received the fees as director, but voluntarily transmitted the dividend warrants on the shares to the father. On the father's death the three lots of shares were found in envelopes, two of the envelopes bearing the words "belonging to me":—Held, that the shares were taken in the son's name merely for the purpose of qualifying him as a director; that the presumption of advancement was rebutted; and that the son held the shares as trustee. Gooch, In re, Gooch v. Gooch, 62 L. T. 384.

Purchase in Trustees' Names—13 Eliz. c. 5.]—An investment of money in the purchase of stock, in the names of trustees, upon trust for the children of the settlor, he not having at the time sufficient property, besides the money so invested, to pay his debts, is void under the 13 Eliz. c. 5, because by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, the effect of such a settlement would be to delay, hinder, or defraud the creditors of the settlor. Barrack v. M'Culloch, 3 K. & J. 110; 26 L. J., Ch. 105; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 180; 5 W. R. 38.

—— 1 Jac. 1, c. 15, s. 5.]—Stock purchased by father, afterwards a bankrupt, in name of his son, an infant, and a trustee is within the mischief of 1 Jac. 1, c. 15, s. 5. Brown v. Bellaris, 5 Madd. 53.

Insurance on Son's Life.]—A father effected a policy in the name and on the life of his son, in which he had no insurable interest. The son died intestate and the father took out administration, and the insurance company paid the money assured by the policy to him:—Held, that as between the father and the estate of the son, the father was entitled to retain the money for his own benefit. Worthington v. Curtis, 45 L. J., Ch. 259; 1 Ch. D. 419; 33 L. T. 828; 24 W. R. 221.

Cheque.]—A father placed a cheque for 900*l.* in the hands of his infant son, and said, "I give this to baby; it is for himself, and I am going to put it away for him, and will give him a great deal more along with it." He then locked up the cheque, and died a few days afterwards:—Held, that there was neither a perfect gift to, nor a valid declaration of trust in favour of, the infant. Jones v. Lock, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 913; 14 W. R. 140.

Advance by Sister—Bond by Father.]—On the marriage of A., his sister advances him 600*l.*, and A. procures his father to give her a bond for the amount, payable at a month after his death. A. pays his sister interest during his father's lifetime:—Held, a debt on the estate of the father, not to be indemnified by A. Hill v. Ballard, 1 Ves. Sen. 77.

Payment of Son's Debts—"Advancement by Portion."]—A gift was made by a father to enable the son to pay a debt:—Held, on the death of the father intestate to be an "advancement by portion" of the son, within s. 5 of the Statute of Distributions. The opinion expressed by Jessel, M.R., in Taylor v. Taylor (L. R. 20 Eq. 155), dissented from. Blockley, In re, Blockley v. Blockley, 54 L. J., Ch. 722; 29 Ch. D. 250; 33 W. R. 777.

Loan to Stock Farm—Interest.]—A father borrowed and advanced to his son 200*l.*, to enable him to stock a farm. The father subsequently paid off the lender without taking any acknowledgment from the son, except that he received interest from him for some years:—Held, that there was a debt due from the son to the father. Milnes v. Sherwin, 33 W. R. 927.

Contract by Son—Payment by joint and several Notes of Father and Son.]—W. entered into an agreement with C. to purchase a business, part to be paid in cash and the balance to be secured by joint and several promissory notes of W. and his father. By his will the father divided his residuary estate into fifths, to be held upon trust for his five children, but W.'s share was settled, and the testator declared that before any of his sons should participate under the trusts of the will they should repay all sums advanced by him in his lifetime; but if they should be unable to repay such advances, they should be treated as part of their shares. W. had no means of his own. The cash payment and the amount due on the first promissory note were paid by the father in his lifetime. After the father's death W. assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors, who released him from his debts saving their rights against sureties. C. proved under the deed for the balance of the purchase-money, and he recovered the residue from the father's estate:—Held, first, that all the sums paid by the father or his executors were debts due from W. to the father's estate. Secondly, that the sums recovered from the father's estate after his death were not within the clause in the will relating to advances, but that the sums paid by the father in his lifetime were and ought to be set off against the corpus of W.'s share. Thirdly, that as to the former sums, the executors might elect whether they would recover against W. upon the agreement for indemnity arising out of the contract of suretyship, in which case they might retain W.'s life interest in his share in satisfaction, or whether they would stand in the place of C.; but that in the latter event the release given by C. to W. would be effective as between the executors and W. Whitehouse, In re, Whitehouse v. Edwards, 57 L. J., Ch. 161; 37 Ch. D. 683; 57 L. T. 761; 36 W. R. 181.

Illegitimate Child.]—Deputation procured by father for a natural son, on security of his estate, held to be for son's own benefit. Beckford v. Beckford, Lofft, 490.

A person transferred consols and stock into the names of his illegitimate daughter and her husband, and their two eldest children, and by parol declarations, declared the investment to be for the benefit of all his daughter's children who should attain twenty-one. He afterwards transferred long annuities into his own name, jointly with the names of his illegitimate daughter and her two eldest children, and made a parol declaration that he did not intend to part with the control over this stock, and he disposed of it by a codicil to his will:—Held, after the death of the two eldest children under twenty-one, that two surviving children who had attained twenty-one were entitled to the consols and stock, and that the long annuities passed by the testator's codicil. Kilpin v. Kilpin, 1 Myl. & K. 520.

By Mother—Person in loco parentis—Presumption.]—A son (the defendant) had joined as surety with the intestate (his mother) for loans for her own purposes, and he claimed as administrator to retain out of the assets a sum sufficient to repay these loans with interest. He had not repaid them, although he was personally liable to do so. The defendant was engaged in farming, and the intestate made him small advances to assist him in his business, or for his maintenance. The intestate took no acknowledgment for these moneys. The chief clerk allowed the defendant's claim, but disallowed the set-off claimed by the plaintiffs (creditors of the intestate):—Held, that the moneys advanced to the defendant by the intestate (who was in loco parentis at the time) to provide for his necessities, were presumably gifts to him, and accordingly the plaintiff's set-off could not be allowed. Orme, In re, Evans v. Maxwell, 50 L. T. 51.

An investment of stock by a mother in the joint names of herself and of a child, is an advancement of the child. If it can be shown from the relationship between the parties that the purpose of the transaction was to benefit the child, it is immaterial whether the person is the father or the mother, or even someone standing in loco parentis. Sayre v. Hughes, 37 L. J., Ch. 401; L. R. 5 Eq. 376; 18 L. T. 347; 16 W. R. 662.

—— Son Acting as Solicitor.]—A son acting as his mother's solicitor, with her consent, lent 2,500*l.* belonging to her, upon a bond conditioned for payment to himself absolutely of the amount thereby secured, without any declaration of trust, except a memorandum whereby the son acknowledged that he held 2,500*l.*, and undertook to pay the interest thereof to his mother during life. The son died in his mother's lifetime:—Held, that the relation of solicitor and client subsisting between the son and mother excluded the ordinary presumption in favour of a gift, and threw the burden of proof upon the executors; and the court declared the son's executors to be merely trustees for the mother. Garrett v. Wilkinson, 2 De G. & Sm. 244.

—— Rule in Equity.]—There is no obligation in equity on a mother to make a provision for her child, as in the case of a father; and therefore, when a mother makes a purchase in the name of her child, or in the joint names of herself and her child, that does not of itself afford the presumption of advancement. A sum of money borrowed by a widowed mother for her son's benefit:—Held, upon the evidence, to be a loan from the mother to the son. The doctrine of presumption of advancement explained. Bennet v. Bennet, 10 Ch. D. 474; 40 L. T. 378; 27 W. R. 573.

S. transferred stock into the names of her three infant children jointly with her own, solely to prevent another party obtaining the same. The court declared that the children were trustees jointly with her, and that she was absolutely entitled to the fund. Stone v. Stone, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 708.

A lady, living apart from her husband, purchased out of her separate estate stock in the names of her son and daughter. The lady died. The son became lunatic. The daughter petitioned for a transfer of the stock to her as executrix. The court ordered the transfer without requiring a bill to be filed. De Visme, In re, 33 L. J., Ch. 332: 9 L. T. 666: 12 W. R. 140—L. JJ.

Semble, the doctrine that a purchase in the name of a child will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be presumed to be an advancement, does not apply where the purchase is made by a mother. Ib.

Godmother—Intention to Benefit.]—The plaintiff, a widow, transferred consols into the joint names of herself and the defendant, her godson, with the express intention that the defendant in the event of surviving should have the consols for his own benefit, but that she should have the dividends during her life. The first notice the defendant had of the transaction was a letter from the plaintiff's solicitors, claiming to have the fund re-transferred to the plaintiff:—Held, that the legal title of the defendant as a joint tenant of the stock was complete. A transfer of property to a person without his knowledge, if made in proper form, vests the property in him at once, subject to his right to repudiate when informed of the transfer. Standing v. Bowring, 55 L. J., Ch. 218; 31 Ch. D. 282; 54 L. T. 191; 34 W. R. 204—C. A.

Held, further, that the plaintiff could not claim a re-transfer on equitable grounds, as she did not intend to make the defendant a trustee for her except as to the dividends. Ib.

Grandfather.]—If a grandfather takes a bond in the name of his grandchildren, their father being dead, this shall be deemed an advancement, for by the death of their father the grandchildren are under the immediate care of the grandfather. Ebrand v. Dancer, 2 Ch. Ca. 26.

Grandmother buys an annuity in the grandchild's name; child's father gives the grandmother a bond to repay the sum if the child dies before the grandmother, who receives the income and keeps the tally; the grandchild making no claim; this no trust for the grandchild. Lloyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 607.

3. By Persons in Loco Parentis.

Presumption.]—Son-in-Law.—The delivery of money by a person to another to whom the former has placed himself in loco parentis is presumed to be a gift, and the burden of proof lies upon any party who contends that it is a loan. Cox v. Bennett, 18 W. R. 519.

T. encouraged B., who was engaged to be married to T.'s daughter, to leave his place, and made him an allowance. T. handed over to B. 5,000*l.* for the purpose of purchasing a share in a business and entering a partnership, which B.

accordingly did:—Held, that T. had placed himself in loco parentis to B.; and the 5,000*l.* held accordingly to be a gift. Ib.

Adopted Child.]—Where the plaintiff invested money in the name of his wife's nephew, whom they had adopted as their child:—Held, to be intended for his advancement. Currant v. Jago, 1 Coll. C. C. 261; 8 Jur. 610.

Niece.]—A purchase of stock by an aunt in the name of a niece held to be for the benefit of the latter, the evidence showing that such was her intention. Beecher v. Major, 13 W. R. 1054.

Nephew—Unpaid Purchase-money.]—Where a testator (who had adopted his nephew) contracted for the purchase of a warehouse for him, paid part of the purchase-money, caused his nephew's name to be inserted in the agreement, and induced him to sign the agreement, on his representation that the purchase was for his nephew's benefit, and died leaving the balance of the purchase-money unpaid, the court directed it to be paid out of the assets. Skidmore v. Bradford, L. R. 8 Eq. 134; 21 L. T. 291; 17 W. R. 1056.

Brother—Shares.]—Railway shares were bought by A., in the name of his younger brother, in regard to whom A. stood in loco parentis, and to whom A. gave on some occasions the dividends:—Held, no advancement, there being no evidence of a present intention to benefit. Forrest v. Forrest, 34 L. J., Ch. 428; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 317; 11 L. T. 763; 13 W. R. 380.

Grandchild.]—A testatrix, both before and after she made her will, purchased stock in the names of herself and the son of her daughter-in-law. By her will she gave the residue of her estate to the daughter-in-law for life, and after her death to the son and the daughter of the daughter-in-law:—Held, that the stock was a gift to the son of the daughter-in-law. Fowkes v. Pascoe, 44 L. J., Ch. 367; L. R. 10 Ch. 343; 32 L. T. 545; 23 W. R. 538.

Held, that the testatrix had not placed herself in loco parentis to the son of her daughter-in-law or to the other residuary legatee, and that both these facts would have to be proved to make the gift an ademption of the residuary bequest. Ib.

Son-in-Law.]—Stock was transferred by a lady into the names of herself, her daughter, and her daughter's husband: the dividends were received by the son-in-law and paid over to the transferor during her life. The daughter pre-deceased her mother, and the son-in-law survived her:—Held, that the son-in-law was entitled to the stock. Batstone v. Salter, 44 L. J., Ch. 760; L. R. 10 Ch. 431; 33 L. T. 4; 23 W. R. 816.

Illegitimate Grandson—Copyholds.]—Where, by the custom of a manor, copyholds were held for lives successively, the legal tenancy being in the cestui que vie, the insertion, by the beneficial owner of such copyholds, of the name of an illegitimate grandchild to whom he had placed himself in loco parentis, as cestui que vie, is not sufficient to raise a presumption that such copyholds were given by way of advancement. Tucker v. Burrow, 2 H. & M. 515; 34 L. J., Ch. 478; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 485; 13 W. R. 771. See cases, supra, col. 1410.

4. Evidence of Intention.

Person to Benefit.]—The court will not act on the unsupported testimony of a person in his own favour. Down v. Ellis, 35 Beav. 578.

Receipt of Rent.]—A purchase of property by a father in the name of a son raises, primâ facie, a presumption in favour of an advancement, but this may be rebutted by evidence of acts of ownership of the father. Stock v. McAvoy, 42 L. J., Ch. 230; L. R. 15 Eq. 55; 27 L. T. 441; 21 W. R. 520.

When the father allowed a tenant to retain occupation at an increased rent without consulting his son, and during his life received the rent, and paid the outgoings:—Held, that this rebutted the presumption of an advancement. Ib.

Evidence of an intention to reserve successive life interests to the father and mother, is a distinct indication that no advancement is intended. Ib.

Will not Evidence.]—In a question of a father's intention in purchasing in the name of a child, his will is not evidence. Skeats v. Skeats, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 9; 12 L. J., Ch. 22; 6 Jur. 942.

Transfer under Misapprehension.]—The transfer (by a father) of stock into the joint names of himself and his child, is presumed to be an advancement; but this presumption may be rebutted by the evidence of the transferor, that no trust was intended, but that the transfer was made under a misapprehension of its legal effect. Devoy v. Devoy, 3 Sm. & G. 403; 26 L. J., Ch. 290; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 79; 15 W. R. 222.

Contemporaneous Acts.]—The evidence to rebut the presumption in the case of a purchase by a father in the name of a child, ought to be distinct and contemporaneous. Jeans v. Cook, 24 Beav. 513; 27 L. J., Ch. 202; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 57; 6 W. R. 175.

—— Parol Evidence.]—When a father purchases in the name of his child, his declarations of intention contemporaneous with the transaction itself are alone admissible to prove a trust. Williams v. Williams, 32 Beav. 370.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove that lands were purchased by a father in the name of his child, not as an advancement, but as a trustee. Ib.

A father purchased stock in his son's name, and the latter gave him a power of attorney to receive the dividends, which he did during his life:—Held, to be an advancement to the son, there being no evidence of contemporaneous acts; in such cases contemporaneous acts and declarations are admissible but not subsequent acts, though any such by the son may be so. Sidmouth v. Sidmouth, 2 Beav. 447; 9 L. J., Ch. 282.

A father, having purchased in the names of his sons a copyhold estate, which he afterwards demised by licence, the sons take as an advancement. To repel the presumption of advancement, evidence of the father's intention must be contemporaneous with the purchase. Murless v. Franklin, 1 Swanst. 13; 18 R. R. 3.

Parol evidence is admissible on the part of an advanced son, or his heir, to rebut a claim of trust, though improper against the legal operation of a deed. Redington v. Redington, 3 Ridgw. 182. S. P., Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 387; Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. Wms. 111.

Evidence of declarations, coupled with acts, admitted in a question whether a purchase by a father in his son's name was intended to be advancement or not. Scawin v. Scawin. 1 Y. & C. C. C. 65.

Parol evidence as to the intentions of a testator by the attorney who made the will also admitted on the same question. Ib.

Joint Deposit—Dividends.]—A father who had government stock, transferred all except a small portion into the joint names of himself and his son A. He also deposited moneys in a bank, in their joint names. Small purchases of stock in their joint names were made at intervals; and the joint deposits were made at intervals, to the father's death. The father during his life received all the dividends on the stock, and the interest on the deposit receipts. There was evidence that the father, before his death, refused to allow his son to meddle with the stock certificates and deposit receipts; evidence of testamentary intentions in favour of other children was also given:—Held, that there was an advancement for A. to the extent of the joint investments and deposits. Fox v. Fox, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 89.

Stock.]—Transfer of stock of an intestate into the name of himself jointly with that of another, accompanied with proof of his having said in his lifetime that it was his intention to give the other the stock at his death, and that he had transferred it for that purpose:—Held, to be sufficient proof of gift of such stock. George v. Howard, 7 Price, 646; 21 R. R. 775.

Securities — Memorandum after Deposit.]—Foreign and colonial securities were deposited by a father, in the joint names of himself and daughter; a memorandum was found among his papers, dated and signed by him fifteen months after the lodgment, directing the securities to be applied to a different purpose:—Held, not admissible in evidence to rebut the presumption of advancement. O'Brien v. Sheil, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 255.

An advancement by a father to his child is a gift which cannot be altered by subsequent declarations of the father. Ib.

Mortgage.]—D. advanced money on mortgage, which he took in the name of his son, A. The evidence showed that at the time D. said, if he did not alter his mind before his death, he might give the mortgage money to his son:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption of advancement, and the court ordered A. to assign the mortgage to his father. Dumper v. Dumper, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 503; 6 L. T. 315.

Purchase before and after Will.]—Where a testatrix both before and after she made her will, purchased stock in the names of herself and the son of her daughter-in-law, and by her will gave the residue of her estate to her daughter-in-law for life, and after her death to the son and daughter of the daughter-in-law:—Held, that the evidence of the son and his wife was admissible, and that it was sufficient to rebut the presumption. Fowkes v. Pascoe, 44 L. J., Ch. 367; L. R. 10 Ch. 343; 32 L. T. 545; 23 W. R. 538.

After Death of a Person Benefited.] — Money standing in the name of a married woman after her decease and that of her husband, was claimed by her mother on affidavit and proof that the dividends had been received by her with the assent of the daughter and her husband:—Held, that the claim of the mother was established. Down v. Ellis, 35 Beav. 578.

Application of Dividends.]—The dividends of stock purchased during coverture in the name of the wife by her husband, were by her applied for domestic expenses:—Held, that the presumption that the stock was a gift to the wife, was rebutted by the mode of dealing with the dividends. Hoyes v. Kindersley, 2 Sm. & G. 195.

Shares—Custody.]—Where sixty-four railway shares were purchased by A. in the name of his younger brother, and A. handed him the key of his strong box, and gave him all the shares therein, and he took out fourteen:—Held, that there was a good gift of the fourteen. Forrest v. Forrest, 34 L. J., Ch. 428; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 317; 11 L. T. 763; 13 W. R. 380.

Lease—Agreement to Purchase.]—N. took a lease in the name of his sister M. from S. He subsequently agreed to purchase from S., and an agreement was entered into. Subsequently a new agreement between N. and S. was prepared, and in this N. substituted the name of M. for his own, and M. signed the agreement, as also did S. N. died intestate. The purchase was subsequently completed; a conveyance was made to M., and she, as administratrix of N., was allowed credit for the purchase-money out of the assets of N.:—Held, that there was no evidence to rebut a resulting trust; that M. was the agent of N., with a right to be indemnified consistent with any beneficial interest belonging to her. Nicholson v. Mulligan, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 308; 17 W. R. 659.

Held, also, that her representative capacity, reconciling the two agreements, excepted the case from the doctrine admitting evidence to rebut a resulting trust. Ib.

Purchase of Farm and Stock.]—After a testator had made his will, giving his son a share in his residuary estate, he purchased for him farming stock, and placed him in a farm. The testator died, and the trustees of the will debited the son with a sum of money equal to the value of the farming stock:—Held, that on the authority of Grave v. Salisbury (Earl) (3 Bro. C. C. 425), and Kirk v. Eddowes (3 Hare, 509), the value of the farming stock must be deducted from the share of the son. Turner, In re, Turner v. Turner, 53 L. T. 379.

5. HOTCHPOT CLAUSE—PROVISO FOR DEDUCTION OF ADVANCE.

Part Advance.]—Where money is expressed to be given in part of a portion, though of small amount, yet it is an advancement, and must be brought into hotchpot. Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atk. 403.

Life and Reversionary Interests.]—Life and reversionary interests must be brought into hotchpot under the usual hotchpot clause. Eales v. Drake, 45 L. J., Ch. 51; 1 Ch. D. 217; 24 W. R. 184. And see Williamson v. Jeffreys, 18 Jur. 1071.

Deed of Gift—Sale.]—A deed of gift by father to son, whereby the father purports to deprive himself of everything which he has, cannot be supported as an advancement. Hughes v. Seanor, 18 W. R. 108.

A deed purporting to be a sale cannot be supported as an advancement. Ib.

Portion — Annuity.]—Husband by marriage settlement secures a portion for daughters; there is one daughter; the husband marries again; leaves issue by the second wife, and dies intestate; if the daughter lives till the portion is due, it is an advancement pro tanto, and must be brought into hotchpot as to the other issue. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 435.

An annuity settled by a father upon a child, to commence after the father's death, is an advancement pro tanto, and must be brought into hotchpot. Ib., 442.

A provision for a child by a father, though contingent, yet when the contingency happens, is an advancement pro tanto. Ib.

Annuity.]—By a deed of separation the husband covenanted to pay an annuity of 200*l.* to his daughters during their respective lives. The husband survived his wife, and died intestate:—Held, that so much of the annuities as were paid during their father's lifetime were not advancements; and that the value of each annuity must be estimated as at the death of the intestate, and the amount brought into hotchpot. Hatfeild v. Minet, 47 L. J., Ch. 612; 8 Ch. D. 136; 38 L. T. 629; 26 W. R. 701.

Under power to Advance.]—Bequest of residue to A. for life, with power thereout to advance her son, and a gift after A.'s death of the residue to A.'s children equally:—Held, that the amount advanced to A.'s eldest son was not to be taken into account in the ultimate division. Upjohn v. Upjohn, 15 Beav. 152.

Power to Appoint—Unappointed Fund.]—A. gave a fund to four persons in such shares, &c., as B. should appoint, and in default equally. He directed that such persons should bring into hotchpot the amount of the advances he might make in his life:—Held, that the hotchpot clause operated only on the unappointed fund, if any. Brockiehurst v. Flint, 16 Beav. 100.

Legacy—Share of Residue.]—A father directed his trustees to pay his son 3,000*l.* and to invest 28,000*l.* upon trusts for his children ultimately. The testator directed his residue to be divided after the termination of a life estate amongst his children, and the will provided that any money advanced to his children and not repaid at his death should be set off against their share of the residue. The testator's son was indebted to him for advances in a sum nearly equal to his share of the residue:—Held, that the legacy to the son was not to be set off against his debt, but was to be paid immediately. Smith v. Crabtree, 6 Ch. D. 591; 25 W. R. 824.

A testator directed his trustees to secure 1,500*l.* to his daughter for life, and to her children in fee; but with a proviso that payment in his lifetime should go in satisfaction of the gift. She received 1,000*l.* from the testator, and pre-deceased him:—Held, that the 1,000*l.* must be deducted from the 1,500*l.* Hutchison v. Skelton, 2 Macq. H. L. 492.

Advance, how Deducted.]—A testator, who had lent money to his son J., bequeathed his residuary estate to J. and his other children equally for life, with remainder over to their children, and declared that neither of his children should receive anything until they should have accounted for any sum lent by him to them. The testator afterwards agreed to accept a composition on his debt, which was not paid at his death:—Held, that the son's debt was not to be deducted from his children's interest. Silverside v. Silverside, 25 Beav. 340.

Trust to convert and after death of wife to hold the proceeds for his child or children living at that time, and the issue then living of his child or children dying before that period, such objects to take as tenants in common according to the stocks. His real estate was to be considered as converted from his death, and it was declared that any portion paid to a child in his lifetime should be brought into hotchpot. On the marriage of a daughter before the will, the testator covenanted to stand seised of a freehold house for her use. She died leaving issue:—Held, that the hotchpot clause could not be extended to the issue of the testator's children, so that the value of the house was not to be deducted from the share of the daughter's issue. Hewitt v. Jardine, L. R. 14 Eq. 58; 26 L. T. 546.

Estate to be brought into Hotchpot.]—A father directed that in the division of his property an estate belonging to one of his children should be brought into hotchpot. After the will he acquiesced in the sale of this estate and the settlement of the proceeds:—Held, that the condition was not waived, and that the estate must be brought into hotchpot. Middleton v. Windross, 42 L. J., Ch. 555; L. R. 16 Eq. 212; 21 W. R. 822.

Advance to carry on Business.]—A., by a settlement, gave to son "a like sum of 5,000*l.*, payable, &c., after my decease, from which provision shall be deducted any sum that I may advance for him to enable him to carry on his business." A. entered into a guarantee for 2,000*l.* for the firm of which his son was a partner. A. was compelled to pay that sum:—Held, that this was an advance to the son to enable him to carry on his business, and that the son could only claim the balance of the 5,000*l.* after deducting the sum thus advanced. Berry v. Morse, 1 H. L. Cas. 71.

Advance not Completed at Death.]—A. bequeathed funds to a daughter, and declared, that in case he should make any advance to the husbands of his daughters, which should not have been repaid at his death, such advance must be brought into hotchpot:—Held, that money agreed to be paid for a business sold by the testator to a son-in-law, was not an advancement, the testator having died before the money was due. Auster v. Powell, 1 De G. J. & S. 99; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 421; 8 L. T. 73.

The proof of a debt, and receipt of a dividend by the testator, under the bankruptcy of his son-in-law, did not operate as an extinguishment of the debt. Ib.

The debt, less the amount of the dividend, was an advance within the meaning of the clause. Ib.

Mortgage Assigned by Father.]—A., before the marriage of his son, stated in a letter to the father of the intended wife, "I will give C. one-third of my business, and at my death he will have half the business and a child's share of what property I may be worth." The father in his lifetime assigned a mortgage to the son, to take effect at the father's death, with a power of revocation reserved to the father, which he did not exercise. He also advanced other property to others of his children at different periods. By his will he left C. "one shilling in full of all claims in reference to my property, having already given to him what I consider fair and reasonable;" he directed his debts to be paid, and divided his property among his widow and other children:—Held, that by the letter the father contracted a debt payable out of the assets which he left at his death, but that the son was bound to bring into account and give credit for the value of the mortgage. Keays v. Gilmore, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 290; 22 W. R. 465.

Held, also, that the other children were not bound to bring into account the advancements made to them. Ib.

Construction—Advance of Money during Lifetime—Descent of Lands after Death.]—By a settlement it was provided that if the husband should, during his life, advance or pay any money for the advancement of any child of the marriage, or in case any lands or tenements, money, goods, or chattels should descend or come by or from him unto any such child, then such moneys and chattels, and the value of such lands should be accounted as part or in full of the portion provided by the settlement:—Held, that the advances and payments should be construed advances and payments made inter vivos, perfected in the lifetime of the husband; and that the lands, &c., should be confined to matters not perfected until after his death: that property which during the coverture accrued to the husband and wife, and was settled upon them for their lives with remainder to their children, as they or the survivor of them should appoint, was not property to be accounted for, as part of their portion, by the children to whom it was appointed: that a leasehold house assigned by the husband in his lifetime to one of the children for his more comfortable maintenance, did not affect the share of such child: and that an advance by the husband in his lifetime to a daughter for the purpose of apprenticing her son—the share of such daughter having been settled with remainder to her children—did not affect the share of such daughter of the trust fund. Douglas v. Willes, 7 Hare, 318.

Advances Before and After Will.]—A. gave to three of his sons, T., J. and P., legacies of 500*l.*, and directed that neither of his sons to whom he should have advanced any sums of money in his lifetime should be entitled to receive his legacy without bringing such sums into hotchpot. The residue he divided between his four sons, C., T., J. and P., and his daughter. The father had advanced to C., before the will, 500*l.*, 170*l.*, and 58*l.*, and to T., after the will, 500*l.* and 380*l.*:—Held, that the advances to C. should not be taken into account, but that the sum of 500*l.* to T. was a satisfaction of his legacy, and the 380*l.* advanced after the will must be deducted from his share of the residue. Peacock, In re, Owen v. Peacock, L. R. 14 Eq. 236; 27 L. T. 472.

A husband gave the residue of his estate to trustees to pay the income of one moiety to his wife, and to divide the other moiety equally among his children. Subsequently to his will, the testator advanced sums to children:—Held, that the widow was entitled to the income of a moiety of the actual residue only, but that the children must account for the sums advanced to them by the testator in his lifetime. Meinertzhagen v. Walters, 41 L. J., Ch. 801; L. R. 7 Ch. 670; 27 L. T. 326; 20 W. R. 918.

When a testator, who, before his will, made advances to his sons, for some of which he took security, declared by his will, "in case I shall at any time during my life" advance any sum, the sums so advanced shall be brought into hotchpot:—Held, that the words did not necessarily imply futurity, and that the advances made before the will must be accounted for. Davies v. Atkinson, 23 L. T. 41; 18 W. R. 1016.

Gift.]—Upon the marriage of one of his daughters the testator said that he would buy his son-in-law's snuff-box, and at the same time gave him with one hand 1,000*l.* in bank notes, and with the other hand took the snuff-box. He afterwards made his will, by which he gave each of his daughters, for her separate use, 1,000*l.*, but provided that in case any of his daughters should, during his life, have received, by way of marriage portion or advancement, 1,000*l.*, such daughter should not receive the legacy:—Held, that the daughter was entitled to the legacy. M'Clure v. Dawson, or Evans, 29 Beav. 422; 30 L. J., Ch. 295; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 204; 3 L. T. 870; 9 W. R. 428.

Debt Due to Child.]—A father being indebted to the trustees of his daughter's settlement upon a covenant contained in the settlement of his daughter, by will directed his estate, after payment of debts, to be divided amongst his children equally; but if the net produce of his estate exceeded 40,000*l.*, then his sons were to have one-twentieth part more than the daughter; and he declared that the moneys due on the covenant should be taken in satisfaction pro tanto of the daughter's share, and should be brought into hotchpot. It was found that, if the moneys due upon the covenant were not to be brought into account for the purpose of distribution, but were to be treated as a debt, the estate would be under 40,000*l.*:—Held, that the moneys due upon the covenant must be brought into account, and that the sons were therefore entitled to one-twentieth more than the daughter. Fox v. Fox, 40 L. J., Ch. 182; L. R. 11 Eq. 142; 23 L. T. 584; 19 W. R. 151.

Evidence of.]—A testator by will declared for the information of his trustees that the amount or values expressed in his ledger and entered on the twenty-first page and signed by him and dated, were the only advancements either by way of gift or loan made by him to his children. The twenty-first page of the ledger was not admitted to probate. The sums entered therein were not in all instances the true amounts received by the children:—Held, that the will must be read as if the entries in the ledger were incorporated into it, and that the entries were conclusive for the purposes of the will. Quihampton v. Going, 24 W. R. 917.

A father gave his residuary estate upon trust for his two sons and four daughters equally, and declared that all sums he had then advanced, or should thereafter advance, to either of his children, which should appear in any account in his handwriting, or which should be shown in any other manner, should be taken in full for or in part of his or her share in the trust estate. Subsequently to his will the testator advanced to one of his sons 1,575*l.*, and to the other 1,560*l.* He afterwards wrote letters to each of them stating that it was his intention to make a present to them of sums of 640*l.* and 650*l.*, part of the 1,575*l.* and 1,560*l.* respectively, and requiring them to send him promissory notes for the balance :—Held, that these letters were not admissible in evidence to vary the operation of the proviso contained in the will, and that the sums of 640*l.* and 650*l.* must be brought into account by the sons. Smith v. Confer, 47 L. J., Ch. 878 ; 9 Ch. D. 170 ; 27 W. R. 149.

By a settlement on the marriage of a daughter 4,000*l.* was secured to her on her father's bond, to produce 200*l.* per annum, and he agreed to allow 150*l.* per annum besides. In his account books he for many years treated the 150*l.* per annum as a debt, but for some few years preceding and up to his death he entered it in his books as an advance. By will he bequeathed a legacy to his daughter and her husband and children, and declared, that "inasmuch as he had already advanced and might during his lifetime advance, for the use of his daughter or her husband, sums of money over and above what was secured to her and them by their marriage settlement, such advances with interest at 5 per cent. should be retained and deducted from the legacy ;" and he directed that his "books of account should be conclusive evidence of the accounts and of the balances therein mentioned to be due and owing to him." He bequeathed the residue of his property between four of his sons. By a codicil he directed how the interest on the legacy was to be paid, "first deducting what had already been advanced :"—Held, that the 150*l.* per annum agreed to be paid to the testator's daughter was not an advance, and ought not to be deducted from the legacy. Hargreaves v. Pennington, 34 L. J., Ch. 180 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 834 ; 10 L. T. 857 ; 12 W. R. 1047.

Testator directed that "all sums of money which I have already advanced or covenanted to pay or may hereafter advance to my children as will appear in a statement in my handwriting, shall be brought into hotchpot." An unattested document signed by the testator and enumerating the advances made to his children was found among his papers :—Held, that this was admissible as primâ facie, but not as conclusive, evidence of the advances made. Whately v. Spooner, 3 K. & J. 542.

For Proviso for Deduction of Advances in Case of Portions.]—See PORTION.

6. INTEREST ON ADVANCES.

From what Time.]—Interest at 4 per cent. directed to be computed on advancements made by a father to his children from the time when the father's property was divisible amongst them. Andrewes v. George, 3 Sim. 393.

A father gave to several of his children real estates, and bequeathed his residuary personal estate to all, with a direction that their portions should be equal, and to that end that those to whom he had given the real estates should respectively take them on account of their shares at the estimated values mentioned in his will. The executor absconded with the personal estate, but after many years a considerable part was recovered :—Held, that the amount recovered must be treated as consisting of a principal sum, with interest thereon at 4*l.* per cent. per annum from the testator's death ; that the devisees of the real estates must bring into account their estimated values as part of the principal ; and that, the shares of principal having been thus ascertained, the part apportioned as interest must be divided between them in proportion to those shares. Ackroyd v. Ackroyd, L. R. 18 Eq. 313.

—— Option to take Business—Accumulations.]—The testator directed that if his eldest son elected to take his business he should be debited with the estimated value thereof in the division of his residuary estate. He gave the residue to trustees upon trust to convert, pay annuities, and accumulate the surplus income till his youngest child attained twenty-one, when the funds were to be divided between the children and the issue of deceased children as tenants in common per stirpes. The trustees had power to make advances to the children, such sums to be taken in part satisfaction of their shares of the trust premises. The eldest son took the business, and the second son received advances :—Held, that the eldest son was not liable till the period of distribution to pay interest on the value of the business. Held further (dissentiente Rigby, L.J.), that the second son was not liable till the period of distribution to pay interest on his advances. Dallmeyer, In re, Dallmeyer v. Dallmeyer, 65 L. J., Ch. 201 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 372 ; 73 L. T. 671 ; 44 W. R. 375—C. A.

A father, after bequeathing a share of mixed residue to one of his sons, stated that he had advanced 2,550*l.* to the son, and directed his executors to deduct that sum from the share :—Held, that the son was chargeable with interest at 4*l.* per cent. on the sum from the death of his father. Field v. Seward, 5 Ch. D. 538.

At what Rate.]—A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees in trust for sale, and to stand possessed of the proceeds in trust for his six children, nominatim, in equal shares, including two sons, F. and J. ; and after reciting that he had already advanced 4,000*l.* to F. and 500*l.* to J., he declared that "neither of my said sons shall be entitled to any part of my residuary estate without bringing the said sums of 4,000*l.* and 500*l.*, with interest thereon at 5*l.* per cent. per annum from the times of advancing the same respectively, into hotchpot." By a codicil the testator revoked the provision made by his will in favour of his son J., thereby causing a lapse of J.'s one-sixth of the residue :—Held, that the codicil must be read as if it expressly declared a trust in the executors of the lapsed share of residue for the wife and children according to the statute of distributions ; and accordingly that the hotchpot clause applied to the shares taken by the children under the codicil. Stewart, In re, Stewart v. Stewart, 49 L. J., Ch. 763 ; 15 Ch. D. 539 ; 43 L. T. 370.

The 4,000*l.* and 500*l.* advanced to F. and J. respectively, together with interest at 5 per cent. up to the testator's death, and interest at 4 per cent. on the aggregate amount in each case from the death, were therefore ordered to be brought into hotchpot in ascertaining their shares of residue. Ib.

In the absence of any direction by a testator to the contrary, advancements to his children on account of their portions bear no interest up to his death, but from his death they bear interest at 4 per cent. Ib.

Statute-barred Debts.]—A husband by will gave his property to his wife for life, and after her death equally between his children, subject to a proviso that if, at the period of distribution, B. "should be indebted to any of her brothers or sisters in respect of advances made to her, his trustees should be empowered to deduct all or any such debts or advances from her share." B. had borrowed from one brother 100*l.*, and had borrowed other sums from another brother. Nearly all these debts had, before the time of distribution, become barred by the statute:—Held, that the trustees were authorised to deduct from B.'s share all the debts, though barred by the statute, but that the intention of the testator was to put advances by brothers and sisters on the same footing as advances by himself, and that interest, therefore, ought not to be deducted. Poole v. Poole, L. R. 7 Ch. 17; 25 L. T. 770; 20 W. R. 133.

Where Life estate given.]—A testator gave his residuary estate to his widow for life, with remainder to his children equally, with a proviso for bringing into hotchpot all sums advanced to any of them during his lifetime. The testator made advances to some of his children:—Held, that the advanced children must bring their advances into hotchpot, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum up to the distribution of the estate: such interest to be computed from the death of the widow. Rees, In re, Rees v. George, 50 L. J., Ch. 328; 17 Ch. D. 701; 44 L. T. 241; 29 W. R. 301. And see Hilton v. Hilton, L. R. 14 Eq. 468, infra, col. 1429.

7. Satisfaction of Debt to Child by Advance Inter Vivos.

Marriage Portion—Legacy due to Child.]—Father having to pay a legacy to his daughter, gives her a greater sum on marriage, and no demand of the legacy, though knowledge of it. This held a satisfaction, and the husband not entitled. Seed v. Bradford, 1 Ves sen. 501.

Implied satisfaction of a debt from a father to his child by a marriage portion of a greater amount. Chave v. Farrant, 18 Ves. 8.

—— Knowledge of Debt not Necessary.]—A provision by a father, on the marriage of his daughter, of a greater sum than he owes her, is in general to be deemed a payment of the debt, and it is not necessary that there should be an express stipulation to that effect, or to show that the husband knew of the debt. Hayes v. Garvey, 2 Jo. & Lat. 268; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 90.

Where a fund in trust for the father for life, remainder to his son and daughter, was sold out by the father, who, on the marriage of the daughter, settled funds of much larger amount on her:—Held, to be presumed in satisfaction of her interest, and that such presumption was not affected by the ignorance or knowledge of her husband as to the rights of his wife. Plunkett v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 316. And see S. C., 13 L. J., Ch. 295; 8 Jur. 682.

Where Father retains Legacy due to Child.]—The doctrine of satisfaction does not apply to a gift by a father to his daughter, when he had in his hands, by permission of the executor, a legacy bequeathed to the daughter by the executor's testator. Acheson v. Fair, 2 Con. & L. 208; 3 Dr. & War. 512.

A legacy of 150*l.* given to the daughter of A., which was paid A., and who after gave her 1,000*l.* portion, settled a church lease on her, and maintained her and her husband fourteen years, yet held no satisfaction. Chidley v. Lee, Pre. Ch. 228.

Assumption of Son's Debt by Father.]—The assumption by a father of a debt due from his son to a partnership, in which the father and the son were partners, was deemed an advancement of a portion to a less amount, to which the son would have been entitled upon the father's death. Ansley v. Bainbridge, 1 Russ. & M. 657.

Father Administrator durante minore ætate.]—A father, administrator, durante minore ætate of his daughter, who was executrix and the residuary legatee of her grandmother's estate, agreed, that when she married plaintiff she should have 800*l.*, which, in the settlement, was called a portion. Lord Hardwicke directed that the father's representative should account for his personal estate as to the 800*l.* only, and interest at 4*l.* per cent. from the marriage. Wood v. Briant, 2 Atk. 521.

Debt by Brother to Sister.]—A. being indebted, as his father's executor, to the trustees of his sister's marriage settlement, settled on her and her children a sum to a larger amount:—Held, that this was not a satisfaction of the debt. Drewe v. Bidgood, 2 Sim. & S. 424; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 33.

8. Release or Bequest of Debt due from Child to Parent.

Person in loco parentis.]—The court will hold a debtor liberated from his obligation to pay a debt which once existed, and from which he has not been discharged by any testamentary instrument, where the transaction supposed to create the debt or obligation is rather in the nature of an advancement by one in loco parentis, or is part of a family arrangement. Peace v. Hains, 11 Hare, 151; 17 Jur. 1091.

What amounts to.]—4,500*l.* was advanced by A., a widow, to her son B., but no security or acknowledgment was executed by B. No interest was directly paid, but an allowance covenanted to be paid to B. by A. was set off against the interest, which, at 4 per cent., came to the same amount. A. made a codicil, containing a declaration that the 4,500*l.* was due and owing from B., and that his appointment as executor was not to have the effect of cancelling the debt. A further codicil was made, revoking the appointment of B. as executor, but confirming the will and codicils in all other respects. Subsequently A. wrote to B. as follows: "You must know when I gave you the money I never could intend it as a loan, but as an absolute gift; and I hope you will live many years to enjoy it":—Held that this letter being written under a misapprehension of the nature of the original transaction, and being inconsistent with the previous conduct of the parties, did not discharge the debt thereby created. Knapp v. Burnaby, 8 W. R. 305.

—— Promise to Bequeath Debt.]—C., being indebted to his mother, and being under an obligation to execute a security to her, refused to do so. The mother then promised to bequeath the debt to her son if he would execute the security. This was done, but the mother died without having bequeathed the debt:—Held, that the promise to bequeath could not be enforced in equity, and that the debt formed part of the mother's estate. Luxmore v. Clifton, 17 L. T. 460; 16 W. R. 265.

—— Destruction of Securities.]—Destruction by father of securities given by sons:—Held, under circumstances, an advance and release of debts thereby secured. Gilbert v. Wetherell, 2 Sim. & S. 254; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 138.

—— Trustees not to Enforce Bonds.]—Testator bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for son and daughter equally, and declared that certain sums which he had lent to his son should be deducted from his share of the residue, and that certain sums which he had lent to C., his daughter's husband, on bonds, should be taken and allowed in account as part of her share: and, if the balance should appear to be against C., the trustees were to refrain from putting the bonds in force against him, and to take a security from him for payment of the balance by instalments:—Held, that C. was released from the debts due from him, and was answerable only for the excess (if any) of those debts beyond the amount of a moiety of the residue. South v. Williams, 12 Sim. 566; 11 L. J., Ch. 410; 6 Jur. 332.

Debt Incurred after Will.]—Testator gave to his son "all sum and sums of money due to me, from him, on bond or bonds, or any other security." The son was indebted to testator by bond at the will, and afterwards became indebted to him by another bond. The bequest does not include the subsequent bond. Smallmen v. Goolden, 1 Cox, 329.

—— Codicil.]—A testator, reciting that there was due to him from his son 1,440*l.* or thereabouts, secured to him by bills or notes, released his son from payment of any interest up to the time of his death, and directed that he should have time for payment of the principal: after he made a codicil not containing any reference to the release. At the will the son was indebted to his father in 1,400*l.*, and between the will and codicil that sum was paid off and a subsequent advance of 1,291*l.* was made:—Held, that the release of interest was equivalent to a specific legacy of the interest on the debt due at the date of the will; that the legacy had been adeemed, and that the release did not extend to the interest on the subsequent debt due at the date of the codicil. Sidney v. Sidney, 43 L. J., Ch. 15; L. R. 17 Eq. 65; 29 L. T. 569; 22 W. R. 101.

A., after reciting that his son was "now indebted" to him in various sums of money in respect of advances, and that he was desirous that his son should be released from the said sums, and that the securities held in respect thereof should be given up to him, bequeathed to his son all the aforesaid moneys, with the securities then in the testator's custody relating thereto, and also released him from all claims in respect of the aforesaid moneys, "and all other moneys due from him" to the testator. By a codicil the testator released the son from another specified debt:—Held, that the will must be construed as speaking from the death of the testator; and that the son was released from the repayment of money advanced to him by his father between the date of his codicil and of his death. Everett v. Everett, 47 L. J., Ch. 367; 7 Ch. D. 428; 38 L. T. 580; 26 W. R. 333.

No Mention of Debt.]—A testator, who had advanced money to his son, bequeathed him a legacy without making mention of the debt:—Held, that the loan balance must be set off against the legacy. Smith v. Smith, 3 Giff. 263; 31 L. J., Ch. 91; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1140; 5 L. T. 302.

Principal and Interest on Promissory Notes.]—Executors of a testator, who was surety upon promissory notes drawn by his son, borrowed 4,000*l.* to take up the notes, and stop proceedings by the creditors to obtain payment:—Held, that the share, to which the son was entitled as one of the residuary legatees under his father's will, was bound, as against subsequent mortgagees, to repay to the trustees the principal due upon the notes and the interest upon the amount for which they were originally drawn. Willes v. Greenhill, 30 L. J., Ch. 808; 9 W. R. 217.

Life Interest to be Retained to pay Debt.]—The testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees, and directed the income to be paid to his son and other persons during their joint lives; and that on the decease of his son, "the share of the income of the said residuary estate to which he would from time to time, if living, be or become entitled," was to be paid to his wife for life; and on the decease of the survivor, "such a part or share of the principal as his said son would, if then living, from time to time, for the time being, be entitled to of the income," was to be for the children of his said son. In another part of his will the testator, reciting that he had advanced his son 284*l.* 10*s.*, declared that it should be treated as a debt due by him, and that his executors were to retain the same out of the share of his son of the income of the residuary estate. The son survived the testator, but died before his share of income sufficed to satisfy the 284*l.* 10*s.*:—Held, that the executors were to retain the balance out of the income given to the wife. Knight v. Sterry, 18 Jur. 928.

F. MAINTENANCE.

1. In General.

When Allowed.]—The court will not direct money to be paid out to an infant executrix, but will refer it to the master to inquire whether there are any debts or legacies, and to consider of a maintenance. Campart v. Campart, 3 Bro. C. C. 195.

Maintenance for a child can be charged only out of the interest of its fortune. Beasley v. Magrath, 2 Sch. & Lef. 35.

Maintenance will be allowed where child has a vested interest in principal and interest. Stretch v. Watkins, 1 Madd. 253.

—— Account.]—Where the court is satisfied that the fund is clear, maintenance will be allowed pending the account to the residuary legatee. Warter v. ——, 13 Ves. 92.

If, on voluntary settlement by father, an account is directed for the child, maintenance to be deducted. Williamson v. Cadrington, 1 Ves. sen. 517.

—— Legacy—Interest.]—In the case of a legacy to a child, let the testator give it how he will, and the child has no other provision, the court will give interest by way of maintenance: for it will not presume a father to leave a child destitute. Heath v. Perry, 3 Atk. 102.

The presumption that a legacy given by a person in loco parentis to an infant on his attaining twenty-one, carries interest by way of maintenance in the meantime, is rebutted if the testator makes any other provision for such maintenance. George, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 118; 5 Ch. D. 837; 37 L. T. 204; 26 W. R. 65—C. A.

No Provision in Settlement.]—Where by a marriage settlement a portion is provided for a daughter and the portion vested in the daughter in the lifetime of the mother, it was decreed to be raised by a sale, with reasonable maintenance in the meantime, though no maintenance is provided by a settlement. Staniforth v. Staniforth, 2 Vern. 460.

Where an infant recovers by a decree of the court, the court may allot the infant a maintenance, though no provision in the trust for that purpose. Englefield v. Englefield, 2 Vern. 236.

Accumulations.]—Maintenance will not be allowed out of funds which, by the will, are to accumulate and be laid out in the purchase of lands to be entailed on the minor, with remainder over. Shaw v. M'Mahon, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 584.

An allowance out of a residue which was directed to be accumulated, for a legatee between the time when the legatee attained full age and the time for distribution. M'Dermott v. Keely, 3 Russ. 264; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 102.

Maintenance for infant out of produce of residue of personal estate, interest being to accumulate. Mole v. Mole, Dick. 310.

—— Death of Infant.]—Property was bequeathed in trust for an infant, with a gift over in case of his death under twenty-one. The trustees accumulated the income not required for maintenance. The infant died under twenty-one:—Held, that the accumulations of income to the time of the death of the infant belonged to the infant. Buckley's Estate, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 439; 22 Ch. D. 583; 48 L. T. 109; 31 W. R. 376.

Compulsory Sale of Devised Lands.]—Devise of lands to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of the children of A., as tenants in common in tail, with benefit of survivorship, with remainders over. The lands were purchased under an act of parliament, and the interest of the children ascertained without reference to the value of the estate of A., and the amount was paid into the bank. The court refused to order the dividends to be paid for the maintenance of the children of A. Whitehead, Ex parte, 2 Y. & J. 243.

Tenant for Life.]—Tenant for life being not otherwise provided for, is as against the remainderman entitled to maintenance. Burges v. Mawbey, Turn. & R. 174; 24 R. R. 9.

For what Children.]—A direction for maintenance, in general terms, not restrained by the bequest of the capital in terms limited to those living at the date of the will. Freemantle v. Taylor, 15 Ves. 363.

Younger Brother.]—If a younger brother have a provision under settlement, and lived with the elder, whose estate is charged with his portion, he shall have an allowance for his maintenance out of the interest due. Boycot v. Cotton, 1 Atk. 556.

Incumbrances.]—The present income of a minor's property was insufficient to keep down the interest of the incumbrances: but the property being sufficient for the discharge of all the incumbrances, the court gave the minor maintenance. Corkers, In re, 3 Jo. & Lat. 377.

Legacy by Father.]—Where maintenance is allowed, it is always paid out of the child's estate, and never deducted out of a legacy left by a father to a child. Jeffreys v. Jeffreys, 3 Atk. 123.

Order of Court—Death of Trustee.]—By an order of the court the income of property belonging to a female minor was directed to be paid for her maintenance to her mother. The mother married again and the income was paid till the daughter attained twenty-one, though one of the trustees had died:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, that the whole income ought to be treated as having been properly applied, and this was affirmed on appeal, but the court was of opinion that the order for maintenance had come to an end only on the marriage of the mother. Smith v. Brown, 48 L. J., Ch. 694; 10 Ch. D. 377; 40 L. T. 374; 27 W. R. 588—C. A.

Agreement as to.]—A separation deed contained a covenant that the husband would pay the whole expense of the education, maintenance and support of their children, all of whom should be and remain in the custody of the husband:—Held, that this was a general covenant on the part of the husband to maintain the children at all times, and therefore he was responsible, notwithstanding they were of age, and were not under his custody. De Crespigny v. De Crespigny, 9 Ex. 192; 2 C. L. R. 404; 23 L. J., Ex. 27; 2 W. R. 75.

Repayment to Child.]—Although, where trustees advance to a father the interest of his infant son's fortune, the court may, in a proper case, hold it a due application of such interest towards the maintenance and education of the child, yet, if the money was paid and received by the father as an advance for his own purposes, the court will enforce payment to the child of the sums advanced by the trustees. Culbertson v. Wood, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 23; 19 W. R. 260.

repairing, and furnishing considered. Griggs v. Gibson, 21 W. R. 818—L.JJ.

Arrears—Interest.]—Interest not given upon arrears of maintenance. Mellish v. Mellish, 14 Ves. 516; 9 R. R. 335.

Charging Property with.]—The court has jurisdiction to charge reversionary property of infants with money for their maintenance, even where some of the infants may not ultimately become entitled in possession. A security for this purpose approved, with a provision for restoring the money by means of an insurance against the contingency. De Witte v. Palin, L. R. 14 Eq. 251; 26 L. T. 825; 20 W. R. 858.

The court refused to declare that sums advanced by a father for the benefit of his infant son were a charge on property to which the son would become entitled only in the event of his attaining twenty-one. Tanner, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 1108; 51 L. T. 507.

—— Real Estate.]—On an application by an infant for maintenance, the court has jurisdiction, without suit, to charge the expenses of his past maintenance and the costs of the application on the corpus of a freehold estate to which he is entitled in fee. Howarth, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 316; L. R. 8 Ch. 415; 28 L. T. 54; 21 W. R. 449.

Where two infants were entitled to successive estates tail in remainder after the life of their father, which life estate had been sold under his bankruptcy: the court refused to allow a yearly sum for their maintenance to be borrowed on the security of a mortgage or charge on the real estate. Hamilton, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 282; 31 Ch. D. 291; 53 L. T. 840; 34 W. R. 203—C. A.

So also where the tenant for life was willing to release her life estate so as to give the first tenant in tail an estate in possession, and to join in the necessary deeds. Howarth, In re (supra), distinguished and doubted. Cadman v. Cadman, 55 L. J., Ch. 833; 33 Ch. D. 397; 55 L. T. 569; 35 W. R. 1—C. A.

Powers of Trustees.]—Trustees were given powers of maintenance out of the income of land, but no estate thereon was devised to them:—Held, that they took no implied estate, but had implied powers of entry and revocation of uses sufficient to enable them to execute the power of maintenance. Dean v. Dean, 60 L. J., Ch. 553; [1891] 3 Ch. 150; 65 L. T. 65; 39 W. R. 568.

—— Jurisdiction of Court to Control.]—A female infant was entitled contingently to a fund. The trustees had power to "apply all or any part" of the income for her maintenance and education. On a summons in the matter of the infant:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction on a summons in the matter of an infant to make any order for payment by trustees or other persons. Lofthouse, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1087; 29 Ch. D. 921; 53 L. T. 174; 33 W. R. 668—C. A.

Whether the court could control the discretion of the trustees as to the amount for maintenance so long as such discretion was honestly exercised, quære. Ib.

—— Child assigning Interest.]—A testator directed his trustees to apply the income of his estate "in and towards the maintenance, education and advancement of my children in such manner as they shall deem most expedient until the youngest of my said children attains the age of twenty-one years," and on the happening of that event he directed them to divide his estate equally among all his children then living:—Held, that no child of the testator was entitled prior to the attainment of twenty-one by the youngest, to the payment of any part of the income, and that the trustees were entitled to apply the income for the maintenance of the children in their absolute discretion; that H., to whom one child had assigned all his interest under his father's will, had no interest in the income. Coleman, In re, Henry v. Strong, 58 L. J., Ch. 226; 39 Ch. D. 443; 60 L. T. 127—C. A.

On Ill-treatment by Father.]—Order for a guardian and maintenance for infants upon ill-treatment by their father. Whitfield v. Hales, 12 Ves. 492.

Mother's Separate Estate.]—Children have no right in law or in equity, during the life of their mother, to be maintained out of her separate estate, while their father is living. Hodgens v. Hodgens, 4 Cl. & F. 223.

Mother, married to a second husband, not obliged to maintain the children by the first, but shall have an allowance from the interest of their fortunes. Billingsley v. Critchet, 1 Bro. C. C. 268.

Where father is not of ability court will allow maintenance for children, though mother has a competent separate estate. Haley v. Bannister, 4 Madd. 275; 20 R. R. 299.

Advances by Mother.]—When a mother made advances to a son during his minority, and not with the intention of claiming as a creditor:—Held, that there was no debt due to her for maintenance. Cottrell, In re, Joyce v. Cottrell, 41 L. J., Ch. 70; L. R. 12 Eq. 566; 25 L. T. 405; 19 W. R. 1076.

Held, also, that to support a claim by a mother for maintenance during a period after the son attained majority, there must have been a contract. Ib.

Amount Mother entitled to.]—The allowance to which a mother, who has maintained her orphan child, is entitled, out of the accumulations, is limited to what she has actually expended upon such maintenance, and the allowance ought to be paid out of that part of the child's fortune which it would have been most for the benefit of the child, if living, to have applied for that purpose. Brain v. Knott, 1 Ph. 572; 14 L. J., Ch. 440; 9 Jur. 979.

A widow and her children being entitled to personal property, the court directed that the widow maintaining the children in a proper manner the income should be paid to her during the infancy of the children, or until further order. Crockett v. Crockett, 1 Hare, 451; 11 L. J., Ch. 279; 6 Jur. 531.

Illegitimate Child.]—A testator constituted his widow guardian of his two children (one being the child of another woman), and he gave her 4,000*l.* "to be used for her own and the children's benefit, as she should, in her judgment and conscience, think fit." This gave the widow a discretion as to the application of the income which the court would not control, if bonâ fide exercised. The maternal relations of the boy removed him from the widow's custody. The widow married again, and appointed one-eighth of the capital to the boy, and the remainder to her own child. The court directed 30*l.* a year to be allowed out of the income of the 4,000*l.* for his education. Hart v. Tribe, 19 Beav. 149.

Mother excluded from Guardianship.]—A testator by his will expressly excluded his wife from the guardianship of his children, and directed that if she should attain possession of them, the provision he had made for their maintenance should cease, and he appointed his executors their guardians. The widow forcibly removed one of the daughters from a school and took the child abroad. The court ordered an account of the testator's estate to be taken, but referred it to the master to inquire into the alleged misconduct of the mother, and ordered all proceedings under the decree to be stayed till the report was made. Arnott v. Bleasdale, 4 Sim. 387.

One Guardian allowed to receive Money—Voucher of Expenditure.]—H. and C. were trustees and executors of a will, and guardians of the testator's daughters. The daughters during their infancy were maintained by C., and H. allowed him to receive the income for that purpose. After they attained majority judgment was given for administration of the testator's estate, in which the usual accounts of the personal estate were directed, and an inquiry how and by whom each of the daughters was maintained during infancy, and what was proper to be allowed and to whom:—Held, on appeal, that H., as trustee, was not discharged by mere evidence of payment of the income to C., his co-guardian, but that under the inquiry, H. was not bound to vouch the items of expenditure; and if it was shown that C. had properly maintained and educated the children, the sum proper for that purpose would be allowed against the balance found due on the account, without vouching the details of the application. Evans, In re, Welsh v. Channell, 53 L. J., Ch. 709; 26 Ch. D. 58; 51 L. T. 175; 32 W. R. 736—C. A.

Trust to Accumulate—Mode of Distribution.]—A father, after directing that his trustees should carry on his business till his youngest child should attain twenty-one, and should then sell his business if not previously sold, and directing the sale and conversion and investment of his estate, and giving an annuity to his wife, empowered his trustees to apply "the whole or so much as they shall think fit of the annual income as a common fund for the maintenance, education and bringing up or otherwise for the benefit of my several children till the youngest shall attain twenty-one, in such manner as my trustees shall judge expedient, accumulating the surplus income in aid of the common fund, and the income and accumulation shall follow the destination of the capital whence the same shall have arisen." The capital of the estate was directed to be divided equally amongst all the children who attained twenty-one, or being daughters married under that age. The youngest child had attained twenty-one, and the trustees having applied portions of the income, for the maintenance and benefit of the children, and accumulated the rest:—Held, that the proper mode of distribution was to divide the whole accumulated fund equally among the children, they giving credit for sums allowed for maintenance with interest. Hilton v. Hilton, L. R. 14 Eq. 468.

a. Out of Capital.

General Rule.]—Court rarely breaks in upon the capital for the mere purpose of maintenance, though frequently done for advancement. Walker v. Wetherell, 6 Ves. 474.

General rule, that trustee shall not break in of his own authority upon the capital of infant's fortune. Ib., 473.

The case in which maintenance may exceed income, is where there was a reasonable expectation that the fortune would be greater than it turned out to be. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 235.

By Trustee.]—Trustees may, in a case of necessity, break in upon the capital of a trust fund, for the maintenance or for the advancement of infant children, even where there is a gift over in the event of their dying under twenty-one. Tibbs, In re, 17 W. R. 304.

Trustees applied a part of the capital belonging to infants, who had been left destitute, for their benefit. They were allowed the amount. Prince v. Hine, 26 Beav. 634.

By Executor.]—When the act done by the executor in breaking in upon the capital of infant's fortune for advancement is such as the court would have authorised, it will be sustained. Carmichael v. Wilson, 3 Moll. 79.

—— Reference to Master.]—Where a father has deserted his children, and is not of ability to maintain them, the court orders a reference to the master to inquire whether it will be for the benefit of the infants that a certain sum should be raised out of property to which they are absolutely entitled under a will; and upon the master's report, and with the consent of the executors, the court will order the sum to be raised. England, In re, 1 Russ. & M. 499.

Small Fund.]—The whole of a small legacy and accumulations were paid out of court to an infant's solicitor for past maintenance and future advancement; any balance to be paid to infant on his attaining majority. Welch, In re, 23 L. J., Ch. 344; 2 W. R. 310.

The shares of infants not exceeding 20*l.* each, ordered to be paid to the person maintaining them, upon his undertaking to apply the same for their maintenance. Farrance v. Viley, 21 L. J., Ch. 313.

An infant's property being very small, 29*l.* maintenance ordered out of the principal without a reference. Green, Ex parte, 1 J. & W. 253.

So interest of 1,200*l.* the property of three infants. Dudley, Ex parte, Ib., 254, n.

—— Apprenticeship.]—100*l.* devised to an infant payable at twenty-one, and if he dies before, then it is devised over, and the interest for the child's maintenance. The trustee lays out 20*l.* for placing out the child as apprentice, and the child died under twenty-one. This 20*l.* allowed. Franklin v. Green, 2 Vern. 137.

—— Outfit.]—An infant's share, a residue of small amount, ordered to be paid to his father as an outfit and passage to India. Clay v. Pennington, 8 Sim. 359; 6 L. J., Ch. 183.

—— Out of Legacy.]—A legacy of 10*l.* to an infant for mourning may be directed to be paid to the father, he undertaking to apply it for the benefit of the infant. Ker v. Ruxton, 16 Jur. 491.

Money expended for maintenance and education, shall be allowed out of a small legacy given to an infant, though it breaks into the principal; otherwise, where the legacy is considerable. Barlow v. Grant, 1 Vern. 255.

Direction as to Fund.]—Where testator directs that the income shall be applied in maintenance, and the income is insufficient, the court will in some cases direct payment out of the capital of his personalty. Bridge v. Brown, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 181.

—— "Out of the Share."]—When a settlor directed maintenance from fourteen to twenty-one to be allowed by trustees "out of the share" of each child in 6,000*l.*, to which each would be entitled on attaining the latter age, and there was no direction for the payment of interest on that fund:—Held, that the maintenance for each child must come wholly out of the capital of the share of that child in the 6,000*l.* Cusack v. Jellico, 22 W. R. 344.

—— Contingent Share.]—Order made that executors be at liberty to apply certain small sums, part of the capital of the residuary shares bequeathed by a father to his infant children, towards their maintenance, though the shares did not vest till the children came of age. Chambers, Ex parte, 1 Russ. & M. 557.

Gift of income of residuary personalty, the capital to be paid at twenty-five, with survivorship, and a gift over and direction to apply, out of the personal estate, a sufficient sum, for maintenance:—Held, not to justify an application of capital. Evans v. Leach, 2 Jur. 758.

Father bankrupt—Legacy by Grandfather.]—A., after his brother's bankruptcy, took the children and maintained them:—Held, that his executrix could not retain the sums expended for maintenance out of a legacy given to the children by their grandfather. Worthington v. M'Craer, or M'Craw, 23 Beav. 81; 26 L. J., Ch. 286; 5 W. R. 124.

Held, also, that she could retain the premium paid by A. to apprentice one of his nephews out of a legacy, to which the nephew was contingently entitled. Ib.

Tenant for Life—Consent.]—When a settlement contained no provision as to maintenance, and an infant was entitled contingently on attaining twenty-one, the court directed a portion of the corpus to be raised for maintenance with the consent of the tenant for life, who was restrained from anticipation. Robinson, In re, 19 L. T. 81; 16 W. R. 1106.

A fund vested in trust to pay the interest to one for life, and after death to her children. The court refused, with the consent of the mother, to advance any part of the principal for the maintenance of the minor. Walker v. Walker, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 329.

Tenants in Tail.]—The court ordered advances out of capital for the maintenance of children entitled to the income, and as tenants in tail, to the capital, to their mother. Nottley v. Palmer, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 968; 13 L. T. 647; 14 W. R. 170.

Accumulations—Rent paid.]—Maintenance out of the principal of minor's fortune composed chiefly of accumulated interest, refused. But rent paid for minors in order to save the costs of an ejectment, allowed out of principal. Key, Ex parte, 1 Ball & B. 405.

For Emigration.]—Part of principal in court, advanced towards enabling infants to emigrate with their guardian. Clarke, In re, 17 Jur. 362.

Reversionary term—Portions.]—The court does not favour raising portions or maintenance out of a reversionary term, and when the term fell into possession, and the portion was raised, refused to charge the difference between the sum annually allowed for maintenance, and the sum charged. Clinton v. Seymour, 4 Ves. 440.

—— Mortgage of.]—Settlement of real estate gave a term to trustees to raise a portion for daughter, and in the meantime, 300*l.* per annum, for her maintenance, to be raised either by rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage. Bill prayed a mortgage of the reversion for the maintenance, but the court strongly inclined against it. Pierpoint v. Cheyney, Pre. Ch. 583; 1 P. Wms. 488.

Reversion never mortgaged to raise maintenance where the mother was able to keep the child. Ib.

—— Charged on Property.]—The court has jurisdiction to charge reversionary property of infants with money for their maintenance, even where some of the infants may not ultimately become entitled in possession. A security approved, with a provision for restoring the money by means of an insurance against the contingency. De Witte v. Palin, L. R. 14 Eq. 251; 26 L. T. 825; 20 W. R. 858.

Where an infant is contingently entitled and there is nothing in the instrument to warrant maintenance, the court can only direct it when the infant is one of a class entitled, with the consent of those entitled in remainder. Arbuckle, In re, 14 L. T. 538; 14 W. R. 535.

Where an only child was contingently entitled, and the parties entitled in remainder were infants:—Held, that no maintenance could be ordered; but a reference to chambers ordered, to effect an insurance on the chance of the infant dying under twenty-one, and thus provide maintenance out of the accumulations. Ib.

The court refused to declare that sums advanced by a father for the benefit of his infant son were a charge on property to which the son would become entitled only in the event of his attaining twenty-one. Tanner, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 1108; 51 L. T. 507.

Semble, the court has no jurisdiction to make such a charge, and the only proper form of order in such a case is that in Arbuckle, In re (supra). Ib.

—— Mortgage of Policy.]—Where an infant was contingently entitled on attaining twenty-one or marriage, the court sanctioned a scheme for the payment of past and future premiums on a policy against the death of the infant before twenty-one or marriage, and for the payment of past and future maintenance of the infant, such payments to be secured by a mortgage on the policy, and a charge upon the infant's contingent interest. Bruce, In re, 30 W. R. 922.

—— Past Maintenance.]—Sum directed to be raised for past and future maintenance of an infant, and to be a charge upon his estate, both present and future. Allen, In re, 14 Jur. 324.

—— Freehold Property.]—On an application by an infant for maintenance, the court has jurisdiction, without suit, to charge the expenses of his past maintenance and the costs of the application on the corpus of a freehold estate to which he is entitled in fee. Howarth, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 316; L. R. 8 Ch. 415; 28 L. T. 54; 21 W. R. 449.

b. Future and Contingent Interests.

i. Before Conveyancing Act, 1881.

General Rule.] — The principle is, that wherever children have a common interest in a fund, the income of the fund may be applied to their maintenance. Haley v. Bannister, 4 Madd. 280; 20 R. R. 299.

The case in which the court has given maintenance has been where the fund being given to the children with survivorship among them, their interests and the chance of taking the whole as survivor were equal, and no other person interested. Kebble, Ex parte, 11 Ves. 604; 8 R. R. 250.

Maintenance allowed to infants out of a fund in which they had only contingent interests. Prater v. Prater, 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 90.

Legacy, "when" and "as."]—Maintenance ordered where legacy is given to children "when" and "as" they attain twenty-one, with survivorship in case of any dying under that age, and if all die the legacy to cease. Lambert v. Parker, G. Cooper, 143; 14 R. R. 224.

Legacy to a child, at twenty-one. It shall have interest in meantime, especially where no maintenance is provided for it. Anon., 2 Vent. 346. S. P., Rennesey v. Parrot, 1 Ch. Ca. 60; Harvey v. Harvey, 2 P. Wms. 21.

Devise of Residue.]—Devise of residue of real and personal estate to children at twenty-one or marriage; all the children are entitled to maintenance during their minorities. Brown v. Temperley, 3 Russ. 263.

Term for Portions.]—By a settlement a term was limited to trustees for raising 3,000*l.* for daughters' portions, payable at eighteen or marriage. The estate was devised to S., one of the daughters being married and of the age of twenty:—Held, that she must have maintenance till the portion became due, and from thence interest at 5 per cent. till paid. Greenhill v. Waldoe, Pre. Ch. 367; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 31.

Interest as Maintenance.]—Legacy to child payable at future day. Maintenance allowed though no direction as to interest. Chambers v. Goldwin, 11 Ves. 2; 8 R. R. 61.

Devise to an infant at twenty-one, with accumulation in the meantime, with similar limitations, in case of his death under twenty-one, to his sisters. The father being dead and his wife married, maintenance was decreed, without an inquiry whether it was for the benefit of the infants. Greenwell v. Greenwell, 5 Ves. 194.

The extension of rule as to giving interest by way of maintenance is disapproved. See Ib., 199, a. note.

Direction for Accumulation.]—Maintenance allowed against a direction for accumulation, only where it is for the benefit of the infants, the chance of surviving being equal, and no other interest to be defeated. Errat v. Barlow, 14 Ves. 202; 9 R. R. 273.

After attaining Twenty-one.]—Interest on a contingent legacy or share of residue is only given for maintenance where the father would if living be obliged to maintain the child during infancy, and not where that obligation would not arise. Breeds, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 191; 1 Ch. D. 226; 24 W. R. 200.

Where a testator provided maintenance for his daughters until they should attain twenty-one, and bequeathed them a share of residue contingently on their attaining twenty-five:—Held, that maintenance could not be granted to daughters who had attained their majority. Ib.

Legacies to infants to be paid to them at their respective ages of twenty-three years, and if they should die before, their legacies to sink into the residue. These legacies do not carry interest, and no maintenance can be allowed. Deserambes v. Tomkins, 1 Cox, 133.

—— Increased Maintenance.]—Devise to pay annual maintenance till grandchildren attained twenty-five, and to accumulate the surplus income to form part of his residuary personal estate; and to divide the income amongst his grandchildren when they attained twenty-five, with benefit of survivorship on any of them dying under twenty-one without leaving a child that should attain twenty-one. A petition for an increase of maintenance was dismissed. Turner v. Turner, 4 Sim. 430.

Insurance Policy—Bonus.]—A life policy of assurance was settled on A., the husband, for life, remainder to the children at twenty-one, remainder in default as wife should appoint. Wife appointed to husband, and died leaving one infant child. After her death a bonus became payable on the policy. The court directed payment of the bonus to A., for maintenance of the child, on condition that A. gave up his life interest under the settlement. Hays, Ex parte, 3 De G. & Sm. 485; 18 L. J., Ch. 441; 13 Jur. 762.

Grandchildren — Limitation over.] — Maintenance not allowed upon legacies to grandchildren at twenty-one with interest, though the father was not of ability to maintain them, the legacies being given over in the event of death under twenty-one. Errington v. Chapman, 12 Ves. 20. And see Buckworth v. Buckworth, 1 Cox, 30.

Residuary bequest in favour of infant grandchildren, payable at twenty-one or marriage, with survivorship, the interest to accumulate, and in case of the death of all before the time of payment, over to their mother absolutely. There being several children, the court directed maintenance, taking the consent of the mother. Cavendish v. Mercer, 5 Ves. 195 ; 5 R. R. 25.

Consent—Of Next of Kin.]—Maintenance will not be given in respect of a contingent legacy, although there be no gift over, without the consent of the next of kin. Cannings v. Flower, 7 Sim. 523 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 8.

—— Of Remaindermen.]—Residuary bequest, payable at twenty-one or marriage, or to the issue of those dead, with survivorship and accumulation till the time of payment, and a limitation over, absolutely, in case of the death of all. The father, being unable to maintain his children, maintenance was directed by the court, taking the consent of the persons to whom the property was given over. Fendall v. Nash, 5 Ves. 197, n.

—— Of Legatee Over.]—Maintenance will not be allowed out of legacies to children given over in case of their death under twenty-one, without the consent of legatee over. Fairman v. Green, 10 Ves. 48.

Testator directed the interest of his residue to be paid to his wife for the maintenance of herself and her children, until the death of her father, when it was to be accumulated for the children, and the testator directed his residue and the accumulations to be transferred to his children when the youngest attained twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship on their dying under twenty-one, and without issue, and a limitation over. The court refused to allow maintenance out of the residue, although the legatees over consented. Kime v. Welfitt, 3 Sim. 533 ; 31 R. R. 211.

Income Exchanged for Annuity.]—A fund was limited to children to vest at twenty-one. The income of their prospective shares to be applied for their maintenance at the discretion of the trustees. The children become entitled to annuities from a society, during their respective minorities, on the condition of payment to the treasurer of all their property. The vice-chancellor appointed the mother guardian, and directed the income of the infant children's respective shares to be paid to her, with liberty to her to pay the same to the treasurer of the society. Osborne's Settlement, In re, 2 W. R. 85.

Property Held in Trust.]—Trustees may, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 26, apply for maintenance the income of property held on trust for the infant contingently on attaining twenty-one. Cotton's Trusts, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 201 ; 1 Ch. D. 232 ; 33 L. T. 720 ; 24 W. R. 243.

When a fund was bequeathed upon trust for all the children of A. who should attain twenty-one in equal shares, and if there should be but one such child, then for that child, and A. died leaving one infant child :—Held, that the income of the fund might be applied in the maintenance of the child. Ib.

—— Powers of Trustees.]—Though 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 26, enables trustees to apply for an infant's maintenance out of income to which the infant is contingently entitled, it does not enable them so to apply income to which the infant never can become entitled at all. George, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 118 ; 5 Ch. D. 837 ; 37 L. T. 204 ; 26 W. R. 65.

Interest of Legacy.]—Maintenance out of interest of legacy to grandchild when youngest should attain twenty-one, refused. Lomax v. Lomax, 11 Ves. 48 ; 8 R. R. 84.

—— Appointment of Trustees.]—Legacy to B., to be paid when he attains twenty years, and trustees for the infant appointed : bill filed for interest on the ground of the appointment of trustees, dismissed. Roberts v. Williams, 3 Jur. 973. And see Chambers, Ex parte, 1 Russ. & M. 557.

ii. Since Conveyancing Act, 1881.

Contingent Legacy.]—Trustees cannot, under s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, apply the income of an infant's contingent legacy for the benefit of the infant, unless the income will go along with the capital of the legacy if and when such capital vests. Judkin's Trusts, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 496 ; 25 Ch. D. 743 ; 50 L. T. 200 ; 32 W. R. 407.

Bequest of Residue — Property held in Trust.]—A testatrix bequeathed "the residue of my money" to an infant :—Held, that the residue being ascertained, the executor would hold the residue in trust for the infant within s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and would be entitled to apply the income for the infant's maintenance, as provided by that section. Smith, In re, Henderson-Roe v. Hitchins, 58 L. J., Ch. 860 ; 42 Ch. D. 302 ; 61 L. T. 363 ; 37 W. R. 705.

Apportionment—Two Funds.]—Property bequeathed upon trust to pay the income to R., an infant, during her life, with remainders over. R. attained twenty-one :—Held, that the accumulations of income during her minority belonged to her absolutely. Wells, In re, Wells v. Wells, 59 L. J., Ch. 113 ; 43 Ch. D. 281 ; 61 L. T. 806 ; 38 W. R. 327.

A fund bequeathed to R. for life if she attained twenty-one, and there was an express power to apply the income for maintenance. Another fund was bequeathed, by the same will, upon trust to pay the income to R. during her life :—Held, that the past maintenance of R. was primarily payable out of the former fund, that being most for her benefit. Ib.

"Contrary Intention"—Accumulations—Vested Life Interest.]—Property comprising a share of residue was devised in trust to pay the income to an infant for life, remainder to such of her children as should attain twenty-one, and in default then over. There was no express maintenance or accumulation clause :—Held, that the infant took a vested interest ; and that as this had been expressly given by the instrument the testator had expressed a "contrary intention" within s. 43, sub-s. 3, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 ; consequently that section did not apply, and she was entitled to the accumulations. Wells, In re, Wells v. Wells (supra), approved. Humphreys, In re, Humphreys v. Levett, 62 L. J., Ch. 498 ; [1893] 3 Ch. 1 ; 2 R. 436 ; 68 L. T. 729 ; 41 W. R. 519—C. A.

A testator gave a fund on trust for all the children of A. equally, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain twenty-one, or marry, with benefit of survivorship amongst them, and he directed his trustees to accumulate the income of the shares, and to pay the same as and when their presumptive shares should become payable under the previous trust :—Held, that the will did not express a "contrary intention" within the meaning of s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and that the trustees might at their discretion apply the income of the trust fund towards the maintenance of the infants. Thatcher's Trusts, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 1050 ; 26 Ch. D. 426 ; 32 W. R. 679.

Section 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, does not authorise the allowance of maintenance where, apart from the act, the infant, on attaining twenty-one, would only be entitled to the legacy without interest. Dickson, In re, Hill v. Grant, 54 L. J., Ch. 510 ; 29 Ch. D. 331 ; 52 L. T. 707 ; 33 W. R. 511—C. A.

Intermediate Income.]—W. by will gave his residuary estate in trust for his grandchildren—sons, at twenty-one, or daughters, at twenty-one or marriage, as tenants in common :—Held, that the income belonged to such of the grandchildren as had attained twenty-one at the time when the income accrued, to the exclusion of those who were then still infants ; that such infants would not be entitled to any back income on attaining twenty-one ; and that no maintenance could be allowed for such infants under s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. Dickson, In re (29 Ch. D. 331), applied. Jeffery, In re, Burt v. Arnold, 60 L. J., Ch. 470 ; [1891] 1 Ch. 671 ; 64 L. T. 622 ; 39 W. R. 234.

A testator specifically devised scheduled property, "whether real or personal," upon trust for his daughter for life, and after her decease for her children—sons at twenty-one, daughters at that age or marriage ; he then devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees, as to a moiety thereof, upon the trusts before declared concerning the specifically devised freeholds. The scheduled property comprised freeholds only. The daughter died leaving two infant children :—Held, that the rule in Genery v. Fitzgerald (Jacob, 468) applied under this will both to the scheduled and residuary gifts, and that the infants were contingently entitled to the income, since their mother's death, of the specifically devised freeholds, and of one moiety of the residuary estate ; consequently, s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, applied, and that the trustees had power to resort to the intermediate income for maintenance. Burton's Will, In re, Banks v. Heaven, 61 L. J., Ch. 702 ; [1892] 2 Ch. 38 ; 67 L. T. 221.

Infants contingently entitled to a share of residue can be allowed maintenance out of the income thereof until one of them attains a vested interest. Jeffrey, In re ([1891] 1 Ch. 675), and Burton's Will, In re ([1892] 2 Ch. 38), considered. Adams, In re, Adams v. Adams, 62 L. J., Ch. 266 ; [1893] 1 Ch. 329 ; 3 R. 222 ; 68 L. T. 376 ; 41 W. R. 329.

Where under a will members of a class who are infants are entitled to shares in property contingently upon attaining twenty-one, those members who by attaining that age have acquired a vested interest, take (as between them and the infant members) a vested interest in only aliquot shares of the capital corresponding to the total number of members of the class ; and are entitled only to shares of the income corresponding to their respective vested shares in the capital. Maintenance can therefore, under s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, be allowed to the infant members of the class out of the shares of income to which such infants respectively are contingently entitled. Burton's Will, In re, Banks v. Heaven (supra), approved : Jeffery, In re, Burt v. Arnold (supra), approved in Adams, In re, Adams v. Adams (supra), overruled. Holford, In re, Holford v. Holford, 63 L. J., Ch. 637 ; [1894] 3 Ch. 30 ; 7 R. 304 ; 70 L. T. 777 ; 42 W. R. 563—C. A.

Where under a will property is left to a class (capable of increase), contingently on the members attaining twenty-one, the accrued surplus income belongs to the adult members absolutely, and to the infant members contingently, and, therefore, maintenance can under s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, be allowed to the infant members out of the shares of income to which such infants are contingently entitled. Jeffery, In re, Burt v. Arnold (supra), reconsidered ; Holford, In re, Holford v. Holford (supra), followed. Jeffery, In re, Arnold v. Burt, 64 L. J., Ch. 830 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 577 ; 13 R. 857 ; 73 L. T. 332 ; 44 W. R. 61.

—— Fund set Apart.]—A testator bequeathed a sum of 4,000*l.* Victoria stock, in trust for such of his granddaughters as should survive him and attain twenty-one, in equal shares :—Held, following Medlock, In re (55 L. J., Ch. 738), that the legacy being segregated and vested in trustees for the object of the gift when the contingency happened, the granddaughters, on attaining twenty-one, would be entitled to the intermediate income, and therefore that s. 43, sub-s. 1, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, as interpreted by Dickson, In re (supra), applied, and the trustees had power to allow maintenance out of the income. Guthrie v. Walrond (22 Ch. D. 573), distinguished ; dictum of Jessel, M.R., in Lang v. Ovenden (16 Ch. D. 694), corrected and explained. Clements, In re, Clements v. Pearsall, 63 L. J., Ch. 326 ; [1894] 1 Ch. 665 ; 70 L. T. 682 ; 42 W. R. 374.

—— Tenant for Life and Remainderman.]—Where a fund consisting of leaseholds has been severed from the rest of a testator's estate for the benefit of a tenant for life and remaindermen, the income accruing between the death of the tenant for life and vesting in the remainderman goes to the remaindermen, contingently on their attaining vested interests in the corpus. Trustees may, therefore, under s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, allow maintenance out of such income to infant remaindermen whose interests will not vest until twenty-one. Furneaux v. Rucker (W. N. 79, 135) discussed and questioned ; Kidman v. Kidman (40 L. J., Ch. 359) ; Medlock, In re, Ruffle v. Medlock (55 L. J., Ch. 738), and Clements, In re, Clements v. Pearsall ([1894] 1 Ch. 665), followed and applied. Woodin, In re, Woodin v. Glass, 64 L. J., Ch. 501 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 309 ; 12 R. 302 ; 72 L. T. 740 ; 43 W. R. 615—C. A.

—— Gift by Parent to Child.]—The provisions of s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, as to maintenance, must be read into the will of a testator dying after the act. The rule that a legacy given by a parent to an infant, impliedly carries interest from the death, by way of maintenance, is not displaced by the fact that adult children are named with infant children in a several gift. The rule is equally applicable where there is a discretionary power in trustees to raise a part of the interest of the legatee and apply the same for his "advancement, preferment, or benefit." The discretionary power of maintenance conferred by s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, does not affect the rule. A general gift of residue in which adult and infant children share, is not, by reason of the same statutory provisions, a separate fund set apart for the maintenance of an infant, so as to render the rule inapplicable. Moody, In re, Woodroffe v. Moody, 64 L. J., Ch. 174; [1895] 1 Ch. 101; 13 R. 13; 72 L. T. 190; 43 W. R. 462.

c. Where Several Funds.

Benefit of Infant.]—Where two several funds by distinct persons are given for infant's maintenance, his interest alone must determine which fund is first applicable. Foljambe v. Willoughby, 2 Sim. & S. 165; 25 R. R. 178.

Where there are two funds applicable to maintenance, that which is most beneficial to the infant will be primarily liable. Lucas v. King, 8 L. T. 623; 11 W. R. 818.

The absence of a direction to accumulate the income of one of the funds is not sufficient to show an intention to prefer the one to the other. Ib. And see Wells, In re, supra, col. 1435.

—— Direction to Accumulate.]—A female infant was entitled on attaining twenty-one or marriage to a portion out of estates of which her brother was tenant in tail, and to be maintained out of the rents in the meantime; and she was also entitled on the happening of the same events to a sum of stock, and to be maintained out of the dividends in the meantime: subject to which the dividends were to be accumulated:—Held, that she must be maintained out of the rents, that arrangement being most beneficial to her. Lygon v. Coventry (Lord), 14 Sim. 41.

A testator bequeathed to his son a legacy contingently on his attaining twenty-one. He also bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate on trust till his son should attain fifteen, for the maintenance of all his children, and subject thereto for accumulation at compound interest: the aggregate fund to be in trust for all his children contingently on their attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the infant was entitled to maintenance between attaining fifteen and twenty-one; and, the court selecting that mode which was most for the benefit of the infant, interest was declared to be payable on the legacy. Martin v. Martin, L. R. 1 Eq. 369; 14 W. R. 421.

3. Amount of.

a. In General.

General Rule.]—The rule is, that entire costs of maintenance shall not exceed the sum-total of interest of the capital of infant's fortune. Carmichael v. Wilson, 3 Moll. 80.

Mother Guardian.]—Order made without a reference, appointing the mother guardian of infant, and for the payment to her for maintenance of the interest on 1,000*l.* to which he was entitled. Allsop, In re, C. P. Cooper, 44; 7 L. J., Ch. 194.

Elder Brother.]—The court, in case of an elder brother, will direct the master to make a larger provision for him, that he may maintain the younger. Lanoy v. Athol (Duke), 2 Atk. 447. S. P., Petre v. Petre, 3 Atk. 511.

Illegitimate Brother.]—Liberal maintenance made for an infant in regard to an illegitimate brother unprovided for. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 1 J. & W. 647.

Child Unborn.]—A special direction to the master to consider the birth of a child unprovided for, refused. Burnet v. Burnet, 1 Bro. C. C. 179. And see Dick. 602.

Parents Destitute.]—An increased maintenance out of the property of infants, for supporting their parents, who were in a state of destitution. Allen v. Coster, 1 Beav. 202; 9 L. J., Ch. 131.

Liberal allowance for maintenance where a guardian or father is in distressed circumstances. Roach v. Garvan, 1 Ves. sen. 160.

Suitable to Rank.]—Order made for liberal maintenance of a female infant, whose father was living, with a view to her being brought up in a manner suitable to her fortune. Williams, Ex parte, 2 Coll. C. C. 740.

Where the mother is the sole guardian of the heir to large estates the sum allowed the mother for the upkeep of establishment and education of the heir ought to be such sum as prudent guardians would allow to her "as mother." To decide what is a reasonable sum all the circumstances of each case must be considered; the governing consideration being what is for the interest of the heir. Barnes v. Ross, [1896] A. C. 625.

Large allowance for maintenance ordered under circumstances, but with reluctance. Petre, Ex parte, 7 Ves. 403.

Order made 450*l.* a year for maintenance, where infant's property exceeded 1,500*l.* a year. Christie, In re, 9 Sim. 643; 10 L. J., Ch. 79.

By Arrangement.]—The children of testator being respectively entitled to pecuniary legacies, in bank, and successively to the testator's house and stock-in-trade and equally to the residue, an offer of the executrix, the mother, to maintain the children without the fund in court upon the terms of being released from accounting for the profits of the business, which she continued to carry on from the death of the testator, on the consent of the pr. ami. and approval of the master, was decreed accordingly. Drake v. Fortune, 1 Moll. 201. And see Anderton v. Yates, 5 De G. & Sm. 202.

Small Fund—Dividends.]—Order made that part of a small sum of stock bequeathed to an infant should be sold to pay a debt incurred for necessaries, and that the residue of the stock should be transferred into court, and the dividends paid to his mother towards his maintenance Swift, Ex parte, 1 Russ. & M. 575.

Increased Amount.]—The court ordered a present allowance, and made a prospective provision for an increased allowance on entering the university, till twenty-one, a further order of the court to be applied for by the guardians. Nunn v. Harvey, 2 De G. & Sm. 301.

—— Income Tax.]—Where a certain sum was allowed to a father for maintenance, the court, on the father's petition for an additional sum on account of the deduction of the income tax, refused to make an order to that effect. Duffield v. Elwes, 6 Jur. 1027.

—— Master's Report Varied.]—Where the master on reference reported that an infant was entitled as the heir-at-law to freehold estates, and that 100*l.* per annum would be a proper allowance for his maintenance, the court increased the allowance to 150*l.* per annum. Heron's Minors, In re, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 589.

Discretion of Trustees.]—Trustees were by deed authorised, if they thought fit, to apply the income of shares to which children were presumptively entitled towards the maintenance of the children, notwithstanding the father of the children might be of sufficient ability to maintain them:—Held, that the court would not control the discretion of the trustees. Brophy v. Bellamy, 43 L. J., Ch. 183; L. R. 8 Ch. 798; 29 L. T. 380.

—— Unlimited Duration.]—A testator by his will, after giving annuities, directed his trustees to accumulate the surplus income until the death of all his daughters, when the period of distribution was fixed; and the will contained a power of maintenance which was unlimited in duration of time, and expressed to be exercisable during the lifetime of the daughters. There was another trust for accumulation of surplus income not applied in maintenance:—Held, that the power of maintenance was unlimited; that there was not sufficient evidence of an intention to cut down the terms of the power of maintenance; and that the grandchildren were therefore entitled to have the income applied towards their maintenance. Smeed, In re, Archer v. Prall, 54 L. T. 929.

—— Past Maintenance.]—A testator gave a legacy to three children, or the survivor, who should attain twenty-one; but if all died under twenty-one there was a gift over. The will contained a direction to the trustees to apply such parts as they should think fit of the income of the legacy for the maintenance of the legatees:—Held, that the court had power to control the discretion of the trustees; and the court, in opposition to the trustees, directed that the whole income should be paid to the father for their maintenance, together with an equal amount for past maintenance. Hodges, In re, Davey v. Ward, 47 L. J., Ch. 335; 7 Ch. D. 754; 26 W. R. 390.

Allowance Exceeded.]—If a guardian expends more in maintenance than the sum allowed, the court will not make any reference as to such extra expenditure, unless a special case is made. Rainsford v. Freeman, 1 Cox, 417.

—— Unnecessary Expenses.]—Charges by trustees for money laid out in luxuries under colour of maintenance, and for money unnecessarily expended in pulling down and rebuilding a house, disallowed. Bridge v. Brown, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 181.

b. Where Express Trust.

Where Infants Absolutely Entitled.]—Increase of maintenance beyond that prescribed by the will, ordered, the infants being entitled to the fund absolutely among them. Aynsworth v. Pratchett, 13 Ves. 321.

What Amount Necessary.]—A direction to apply so much interest as might be necessary towards the maintenance of the testator's grandchildren, upon the decease of their respective mothers, the residue to accumulate, was confined to so much as should be actually necessary at the death of their mother. Rawlins v. Goldfrap, 5 Ves. 440.

Annuity.]—Testator bequeathed an annuity to his granddaughter, towards her maintenance, in such manner as his trustees should in their absolute discretion think fit, whether her father should be able to maintain her or not. The trustees made a very small payment on account of the annuity, and no provision for maintenance of the infant, who had been provided for by her father. The court declared that the father should receive the whole annuity, he undertaking to maintain her. Stephens v. Lawrie, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 87; 12 L. J., Ch. 71.

Definite Sum.] — Bequest for grandson at twenty-five with gift over and direction to apply a sum not exceeding 200*l.* per annum for his maintenance:—Held, that the presumption that the infant was entitled to interest on the fund was rebutted, and, the testator having fixed a definite sum for maintenance, the court would not exceed it. May v. Potter, 25 W. R. 507.

Testator gave his residuary estate to an infant, and directed 60*l.* a year to be allowed for his maintenance. The residue was of large amount, and the court from time to time considerably increased the maintenance. Josselyn v. Josselyn, 9 Sim. 63.

Discretion of Trustees.] — Where trustees having a discretion to apply what part they thought fit of an income of 800*l.* in the maintenance of an infant, had not exercised that discretion, and an allowance of 300*l.* was made by the party in possession of the fund, and this had been considerably exceeded by the plaintiffs in maintaining the infant, it was referred to the master, to inquire what was proper to be allowed to the plaintiffs for the maintenance of the infant. Stopford v. Canterbury (Lord), 11 Sim. 82; 4 Jur. 842.

Where the testator directed a certain provision for A. until sixteen, and then left it to his trustees to settle him in business, and provide for his maintenance out of the testator's property; on his attaining sixteen, the court referred it to the master to inquire what sums were to be allowed. Kilvington v. Gray, 10 Sim. 293.

Power to Appoint Sum—Interest on Portion.]—Infant entitled under a term to portion on twenty-one or marriage; and the estates were charged with the payment of such yearly sum, for her maintenance, not exceeding what the interest of her portion would amount to at such rate (not exceeding 5*l.* per cent.) as her father should appoint; and in default of appointment, then of such yearly sum, not exceeding the amount of interest aforesaid, as the trustees of the term should deem sufficient. The father died without having made any appointment:—

Held, that the amount of her maintenance must be settled by the master. Lygon v. Coventry (Lord), 14 Sim. 41.

Freeman's Son.]—A freeman of London died intestate, leaving an infant son, who became entitled to his orphanage share of the personal estate, and also to other property. The infant was maintained by his mother:—Held, that the mother was merely entitled to be paid what she had expended, and that the amount was to be paid out of the orphanage share, that arrangement being for the infant's benefit. Bruin v. Knott, 12 Sim. 456; 1 Ph. 572; 14 L. J., Ch. 440; 9 Jur. 979.

Allowance beyond Provision in Will.]—Devise in trust to pay annual sums for the maintenance of grandchildren till they had attained twenty-five, and to accumulate the surplus income to form part of his residuary personal estate, and to divide the income of his estates amongst his grandchildren when they attained twenty-five, with benefit of survivorship. A petition for an increase of the maintenance was dismissed, the disposition of the property not being such as that the grandchildren must, of necessity, take the whole. Turner v. Turner, 4 Sim. 430.

—— Trust for Accumulation.]—Residue devised upon trust to pay two sums of 100*l.* yearly for maintenance of a grandson and granddaughter till twenty-five or till twenty-one or marriage, the residue of the income to be accumulated till the death of the widow, and then a sum to be paid to the grandson at twenty-five, and another sum to the granddaughter at twenty-one or marriage, and if she died before, the sum to fall into the residue. The court increased the allowances for the maintenance by 150*l.* and 120*l.* per annum respectively, to be paid out of the income and the accumulations thereof. But it was ordered that the trustees should hold the interests of the infants as a security for recouping to any person entitled thereto such sums of money as the increased sums of maintenance would have amounted to if accumulated as directed by the will. Colgan, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 180; 19 Ch. D. 305; 46 L. T. 152; 30 W. R. 266.

Income insufficient—Charge on Property.]—Where an infant entitled under a will to maintenance, was allowed 100*l.* a year by the master, but the income was scarcely sufficient to pay other prior charges thereon; it was ordered that the trustees and executors should be at liberty, out of any funds in their hands, to pay the 100*l.* a year; and if the same should be insufficient, that what the guardians should pay for maintenance should form a charge upon his interest in the property. Fentiman v. Fentiman, 13 Sim. 171.

Settled Estates—Residence of Minor.]—Where a testator directs the payment of a sum of money, sufficient for the mere maintenance of a minor entitled to the settled estates, and manifests a clear intention that such minor shall reside at the principal mansion, such a sum will be directed to be paid out of the rents of the settled estates as will suffice to keep up the mansion as a residence for the minor. Griggs v. Gibson, Maynard, Ex parte, 21 W. R. 818.

c. Ability of Parent.

i. In General.

General Rule.]—"Maintenance" not equivalent to "interest" for the purpose of vesting a legacy; no maintenance shall be given when the parent is of ability to support the children. Pulsford v. Hunter, 3 Bro. C. C. 416.

Where a father is sufficiently competent, the court will give no direction with regard to an infant's maintenance. Jackson v. Jackson, 1 Atk. 515.

A parent must maintain his child, unless totally incapable, or from having many children he is very necessitous. Butler v. Butler, 3 Atk. 60.

Insolvency.]—To entitle the father of an infant legatee to maintenance, it is not necessary that he should be insolvent, but that he should not be in circumstances to maintain his child suitably to his expectation. Buckworth v. Buckworth, 1 Cox, 80.

—— Consent of Persons entitled over.]—Residuary bequest in favour of infant grandchildren, with survivorship, and accumulation, and a limitation over. The father, in consequence of bankruptcy, being unable to maintain his children, maintenance was directed by the court, taking the consent of the persons to whom the property was given over. Fendall v. Nash, 5 Ves. 197, n. S. P., Cavendish v. Mercer, 5 Ves. 195.

Legacy to Grandchildren.]—Maintenance not allowed upon legacies to grandchildren at twenty-one with interest, though the father was not of ability to maintain them, the legacies with the interest being given over. Errington v. Chapman, 12 Ves. 20.

Increased Allowance.]—When a sum has been allowed for maintenance on the ground of the father's inability to maintain them, the court will not grant a reference for an additional allowance without affidavit showing that the former allowance had become insufficient. Gorton v. Vause, 4 Jur. 4.

Father with some means.]—Where property of the value of 10,000*l.* per annum was to be accumulated, and to be laid out in purchase of lands for father for life and his sons in tail, with subsequent limitations over:—Held, that as the father was possessed of a moderate income, insufficient for the maintenance of his sons, to fit them for their positions, a sum of 2,700*l.* per annum should be allowed him for the benefit of the infants. Havelock v. Havelock, Allan, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 778; 7 Ch. D. 807; 44 L. T. 168; 29 W. R. 859.

Maintenance, under the circumstances, given to a father, who had 6,000*l.* a-year of his own, and although no report of debts had been made. Jervoise v. Silk, G. Cooper, 52; 14 R. R. 215.

Order made for a liberal allowance for the maintenance of a female infant, whose father was living, with a view to her being brought up in a manner suitable to her fortune and expectations. Williams, Ex parte, 2 Coll. C. C. 740.

Where three children were entitled to a sum of 40,000*l.* equally, at twenty-one, and their father's income did not exceed 500*l.* a-year, maintenance was allowed. Barry v. Barry, 1 Moll. 210.

Legacy to Infant — Apprentice.] — A father cannot apply a legacy left by a relation to his child, for his maintenance ; nor can he put him out apprentice with the money arising from the legacy. Darley v. Darley, 3 Atk. 399. And see id. 60, n.

Small Property.] — The interest of small legacies ordered to be paid to the mother for maintenance, upon her affidavit that the father was abroad in embarrassed circumstances. Walker v. Shore, 15 Ves. 122 ; 10 R. R. 41.

Dividends to which infants were entitled ordered, without a reference, to be paid to their father for their maintenance, the parties being poor and the property of small amount. Payne v. Low, 1 Russ. & M. 223.

Common Establishment.] — A daughter was entitled to one-fifth of some property, and her father to the remainder. She resided with, and was maintained by him, and he received the whole of the rents ; after his death, she claimed against his estate an account of one-fifth of the rents for twenty years. The court concluded that the common establishment had been maintained out of the mixed fund, and rejected the claim. Trinder v. Smith, 23 Beav. 554.

Second Marriage.] — Mother married to a second husband not obliged to maintain the children by the first, but shall have an allowance from the interest of their fortunes. Billingsley v. Critchet, 1 Bro. C. C. 268.

Mother's separate Estate.]—Where father is not of ability court will allow maintenance for children, though mother has a competent separate estate. Haley v. Bannister, 4 Madd. 275 ; 20 R. R. 299.

After the death of the father :—Held, that maintenance was to be determined irrespective of the means of the mother to support them out of her own fortune. Douglas v. Andrews, 12 Beav. 310 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 69 ; 14 Jur. 73.

Father not to Benefit.]—The court will not give a direct benefit out of an infant's income to his father. Stables, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 620.

A scheme by which an infant (whose father was living) was to be articled to a solicitor, and to live with an uncle residing in the same place, was approved of by the court ; and the uncle was appointed guardian to the infant, and to have an allowance out of his income. An allowance to the father, who lived at a distance, and was in very narrow circumstances, was refused. Ib.

ii. Where Express Trust.

Reference as to Ability.]—Where a legacy is given to infants at twenty-one, with a direction for maintenance out of the income during their minorities, and an ultimate limitation over the court, upon a petition for maintenance refused to dispense with the usual reference as to the father's ability. Lucknow v. Brown, 12 Jur. 1017.

Trust by will for all the children of A., when and as they shall severally attain sixteen, with direction for their maintenance ; maintenance was directed without regard to the father's ability. Hoste v. Pratt, 3 Ves. 730.

From what Time.]—Where the parent is reported not of ability, the sums allowed shall be only from the time of the report, not of the decree. Hughes v. Hughes, 1 Bro. C. C. 387.

Marriage Settlement.]—A father, if of ability, is not entitled to maintenance out of marriage settlement funds, which contained a power to apply the income for maintenance, unless it is clear that maintenance was to be allowed without reference to the ability of the father. Thompson v. Griffin, Cr. & Ph. 317 ; 5 Jur. 90.

—— Appointment by Wife.]—By a settlement, power was given to the wife to appoint a fund to her children, and it empowered the trustees to apply the income for maintenance, notwithstanding the husband might be of ability. The wife appointed the fund equally, and directed the income, during their minorities, to be paid to her husband for their maintenance. The children had other means of maintenance :—Held, that the court would apply a proper sum for the maintenance, and not necessarily the whole ; and a reference to chambers was directed to inquire how much ought to be allowed. White v. Grane, 18 Beav. 571 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 863 ; 2 W. R. 320, 328.

—— Discretion of Trustees.]—Trustees were authorised, if they thought fit, to apply the income of shares to which children were presumptively entitled towards maintenance, notwithstanding the father might be of ability to maintain them :—Held, that the court would not control the discretion of the trustees. Brophy v. Bellamy, 43 L. J., Ch. 183 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 798 ; 29 L. T. 380.

Personal estate settled, with a direction that after the wife's death the trustees should apply the income at their discretion for maintenance : —Held, that after the wife's death the husband, notwithstanding he was of ability, was entitled to require the whole or a sufficient part of the presumptive income to be applied for maintenance. Stocken v. Stocken, 4 Myl. & Cr. 95. Affirming 4 Sim. 152. And see 2 Myl. & K. 489 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 305 ; 2 Jur. 693.

—— On Second Marriage.] — Where the woman's fortune (on a second marriage) was settled to the use of herself for life, remainder to the children, making a provision for maintenance out of the interest of the fund, the court ordered an allowance to be made. Mundy v. Howe (Earl), 4 Bro. C. C. 223.

—— Trust or Power.]—By an ante-nuptial settlement, it was provided that until the capital should be transferable to any child, the trustees should receive the dividends upon trust, to apply the whole as they should think fit, for maintenance of such child :—Held, that this was a discretionary trust for maintenance, and not simply a power, and that the father was entitled to an allowance for past and future maintenance of his child, without reference to his ability. Ransome v. Burgess, 36 L. J., Ch. 84 ; L. R. 3 Eq. 773 ; 15 W. R. 189.

—— Discretion not Exercised.]—By a marriage settlement it was declared that the trustees should, after the death of the wife, apply the whole or such part as they should think fit of the income of the expectant share of any child for the maintenance of such child. The trustees paid the whole income to the husband without exercising any discretion as to its application to maintenance :—Held, that there was a discretionary trust equivalent to a power ; and as the trustees had not exercised any discretion, the estate of the husband must repay the whole income received. Ransome v. Burgess (L. R. 3 Eq. 773) disapproved. Mundy v. Howe (Earl) (4 Bro. C. C. 224) commented on. Wilson v. Turner, 52 L. J., Ch. 270 ; 22 Ch. D. 521 ; 48 L. T. 370 ; 31 W. R. 438.

Ante-nuptial Settlement.]—If, under a marriage contract, a fund has been settled upon trust for the children, at twenty-one, with a proviso that, till their shares become payable, the interest shall be applied towards their maintenance, the father is entitled to receive such interest for that purpose, without reference to his own ability. Meacher v. Young, 2 Myl. & K. 490.

—— Right to be Recouped.]—The doctrine, that where there is a fund subject to a trust for the maintenance of children, and the children are maintained by their father without any resort to the fund, the father is entitled to be recouped out of the accumulated income, only applies where the trust for maintenance is in an ante-nuptial settlement, which has a basis of contract to support it. Kerrison's Trusts, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 637 ; L. R. 12 Eq. 422 ; 25 L. T. 57 ; 19 W. R. 967.

Discretionary Trust to Father.]—Devise to M. for life of property in trust to apply the same at his discretion towards the maintenance of his son D., the surplus to be accumulated, and to be applied for the benefit of D., or paid over to him as M. should think fit, and after the death of M., devise of the property and all accumulations not applied or paid over to D., to D. absolutely. M. who apart from this property was of ability to maintain D., received the rents of the property and maintained D. suitably :—Held, that M. was under the will entitled (notwithstanding his own ability) to apply so much of the income of the trust funds as he should think proper towards the maintenance and benefit of his son D. Malcomson v. Malcomson, 17 L. R. Ir. 69—C. A.

Infants' Shares not Determinable.]—By a marriage settlement trustees were directed after the death of both parents to apply as much as they should think fit of the income of each child's share for its maintenance, and accumulate the surplus. The shares could not be determined during the life of the father :—Held, that if the father was not of ability to maintain his children, there might be a reference in order that maintenance might be provided for them out of the trust fund. Kekewich v. Langston, 11 Sim. 291.

Son-in-law.]—Bequest to son-in-law in trust for the maintenance of his children by the testator's daughter ;—Held, that the son-in-law was entitled to apply the interest of the share for maintenance, notwithstanding he might be of ability. Hawkins v. Watts, 7 Sim. 199.

Power to Appoint for Maintenance.]—Two sums were vested in trustees on trusts for husband, wife, and children, with a joint power to husband and wife, or the survivor, to appoint the whole or any part of their dividends for maintenance. And it was declared that the trustees might apply the income, or a part, for maintenance as they thought proper :—Held, that the husband (who survived) was entitled to apply the income of the trust funds for the maintenance without reference to his ability. Newton v. Curzon, 16 L. T. 696.

Breach of Trust.]—Where trustees advance to a father the interest of his infant son's fortune, the court may, in a proper case, hold it a due application of such interest towards the maintenance of the child, though the father may have ample means of his own, yet if the money was paid by the trustees, and received by the father, as an advance for his own purposes, and was secured by a deed by the father to indemnify the trustees against the consequences of their breach of trust, the court will enforce repayment to the child of the sums advanced by the trustees. Culbertson v. Wood, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 23 ; 19 W. R. 260.

4. Past Maintenance.

a. In General.

General Rule.]—No allowance to a parent for maintaining an infant for the time past. Hill v. Chapman, 2 Bro. C. C. 231. S. P., Simon v. Barber, Taml. 22.

—— Ability of Father.] — Nor where the father had not been of ability, and although the will had expressly given the produce to the trustees for maintenance. Andrews v. Partington, 2 Cox, 223 ; 3 Bro. C. C. 60.

In Special Case.]—The court will not direct an inquiry as to the propriety of an allowance to the father for past maintenance unless a special case be made. Bond, Ex parte, 2 Myl. & K. 439 ; 4 L. J., Ch. 84.

Maintenance allowed for time past. Sisson v. Shaw, 9 Ves. 285 ; 7 R. R. 190. S. P., Reeves v. Brymer, 6 Ves. 425 ; Sherwood v. Smith, id. 454.

Debts incurred by Father.] — Maintenance allowed for the time past, the father being liable to debts he was obliged to contract in supporting minor and no fund to reimburse him. Darlington, Ex parte, 1 Ball & B. 240 ; 12 R. R. 21.

A father having sold property and borrowed money to enable him to maintain his child, a legatee, whose legacy was held to have vested, was allowed out of the legacy past maintenance to the extent of the sums so raised. Parsons v. Peters, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 150 ; 11 L. T. 501 ; 13 W. R. 214.

—— Father Abroad.]—Where an infant entitled to 290*l.* per annum had been maintained by his father, who had incurred a large debt for the purpose, and was unable any longer to maintain his son :—Held, that the father having resided out of the country, and being unable to apply to the court before, the court would grant a sum for past maintenance. Carmichael v. Hughes, 20 L. J., Ch. 396.

Income exceeded.]—Trustees directed to receive and pay the income of a fund for the maintenance of the children, and to pay and divide the fund and all accumulations among the children at twenty-one. There was no express direction to accumulate. The father maintained the children at a larger expense than the income of the fund:—Held, that he was entitled to the accumulations of income for the past time, and the future income during the infancy of his children. Birch v. Sumner, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 712.

Grandchildren.] — Maintenance decreed to grandchildren for time past, though no direction given in will. Collis v. Blackburn, 9 Ves. 470.

—— Annuity.]—Annuity bequeathed to granddaughter towards her maintenance as his trustees should in their absolute discretion think fit. The trustees made a very small payment on account of the annuity, and made no provision for maintenance. The court declared that the father who had maintained the infant should receive the whole annuity for the time past till further notice; he undertaking to maintain her. Stephens v. Lawrie, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 87; 12 L. J., Ch. 71.

Trustees' Discretion.]—Where trustees having a discretion to apply what part they thought fit of an income of 800*l.* in the maintenance of an infant, had not exercised that discretion, and the persons who brought up the infant expended in her maintenance considerable sums, it was referred to the master, to inquire what was proper to be allowed for the maintenance of the infant from her becoming entitled to the fund. Stopford v. Canterbury (Lord), 11 Sim. 82; 4 Jur. 842.

Maintenance allowed for the time past under particular circumstances, a power to the trustees to apply dividends for maintenance, and by the death of the trustees, or their not acting, their discretion not having been exercised, an inquiry was directed whether it would have been proper in the trustees to apply any and what part of the dividends. Maberly v. Turton, 14 Ves. 499.

Charge on Infant's Estate.]—Sum directed to be raised for past and future maintenance of an infant, and to be a charge upon his estate, both present and future. Allen, In re, 14 Jur. 324. And see Howarth, In re, supra, col. 1433.

Rents—Costs of Suit by Guardian.]—Where a father not of ability to maintain his daughter, had, as her guardian, received the rents of her property, but had maintained her, and had spent a considerable sum in a suit relating to her property, which ended beneficially for her, but of which her estate had to bear the costs:—Held, that he was entitled to retain the rents, by way of allowance for his expenditure on her behalf. Wright v. Vanderplank, 8 De G. M. & G. 133; 2 K. & J. 1; 25 L. J., Ch. 753; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 599; 27 L. T. 91; 4 W. R. 410.

Order for Maintenance—Death of Trustee.]—By an order of the court, trustees of a will were directed to pay the income of property to which an infant was entitled to her mother for maintenance. One trustee died, and the mother married again; but the whole income was still paid to her. It was shown that the daughter had been well educated, and that her social position had been improved by her mother's marriage, and that the income, so far as not expended on herself personally, had been applied towards the expenses of the stepfather's establishment, of which she had the benefit:—Held, that the allowance of the whole income for maintenance would, under the circumstances, have been sanctioned by the court if applied to, and that the whole income ought, therefore, to be treated as having been properly applied, and that the order for maintenance had come to an end only on the marriage of the mother. Smith v. Brown, 48 L. J., Ch. 694; 10 Ch. D. 377; 40 L. T. 374; 27 W. R. 588—C. A.

Trust in part Valid—Discretion of Trustees.]—W. by will gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees upon trust to apply the income for the maintenance, education, and benefit of the children of A. until they respectively attained twenty-three and to accumulate the residue, and upon certain further trusts, as to the capital, in favour of the children of A., which by an order were declared to be void for remoteness. By the same order the trustees were ordered to accumulate the surplus income until further order. A. survived the testator, and had two children, the elder of whom attained twenty-three on March 10, 1892. The trustees accumulated the whole of the income until 1895:—Held, that the gift of income for maintenance was separable from the gift of capital, and was valid; and that the trustees had still a discretion to apply all or any part of the income which accrued before March 10, 1892, for the past maintenance of both children, and similarly might apply all or any part of the income from that date until the younger child should attain twenty-three for his maintenance. Wise, In re, Jackson v. Parrott, 65 L. J., Ch. 281; [1896] 1 Ch. 281; 73 L. T. 743; 44 W. R. 310. And see Coster v. Coster, infra, col. 1454.

b. Of Particular Classes.

i. Grandchildren.

Legacy.] — Maintenance out of interest of legacy to grandchild, when youngest should attain twenty-one, refused. Lomax v. Lomax, 11 Ves. 48; 8 R. R. 84.

The court will not allow maintenance to a grandchild legatee out of a fund not vested. Buckworth v. Buckworth, 1 Cox, 30.

—— Surrender of Copyholds.]—Defective surrender of copyhold cannot be supplied for grandchildren. Perry v. Whitehead, 6 Ves. 544.

No interest given by way of maintenance upon legacy to grandchild. Id. 546. S. P., Elton v. Elton, 3 Atk. 508.

—— Father not of Ability.]—Maintenance not allowed upon legacies to grandchildren at twenty-one with interest, though the father was not of ability to maintain them, the legacies with the interest being given over. Errington v. Chapman. 12 Ves. 20. And see Buckworth v. Buckworth, 1 Cox, 30.

Accumulations.] — Devise to grandson of twenty-one, with accumulation in the meantime, with similar limitations over to his sisters. The father being dead and the widow married, maintenance was decreed, without an inquiry. Greenwell v. Greenwell, 5 Ves. 194. (See note 50, id. 199 a.)

Not Directed by Will.]—Maintenance decreed to grandchildren, though no direction for it in will. Collis v. Blackburn, 9 Ves. 470.

Gift over—Bankruptcy of Father.]—Bequest to grandchildren at twenty-one or marriage with survivorship and accumulation till the time of payment, and a limitation over absolutely. The father being bankrupt, maintenance was directed by the court, taking the consent of the persons to whom the property was given over. Fendall v. Nash, 5 Ves. 197, n.

—— Father's Income Inadequate.]—Bequest to grandchildren at twenty-one or marriage with survivorship, the interest to accumulate and gift over to the mother. The father's income, though considerable, bearing no proportion to the fortune bequeathed, and there being several children, the court directed maintenance, taking the consent of the mother. Cavendish v. Mercer, 5 Ves. 195, n.; 5 R. R. 27.

ii. Illegitimate Children.

Surrender.]—The court will not supply a surrender for a natural child; but, if it has a legacy from the father, payable at twenty-one, will allow maintenance. Crickett v. Dolby, 3 Ves. 12.

Father Lunatic.]—An allowance will be made out of a lunatic's estate for his illegitimate children, but not for their mother. Haycock, Ex parte, 5 Russ. 154; 29 R. R. 16.

Brother Illegitimate.]—Liberal allowance of maintenance made for an infant in regard to an illegitimate brother unprovided for. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 1 J. & W. 647.

iii. Infant Out of Jurisdiction.

Special Order.]—Special order for allowance of maintenance to an infant resident with her father out of his jurisdiction. De Weever v. Rochport, 6 Beav. 391. And see Morrison, In re, infra, col. 1452.

On Medical Grounds.]—It appearing that an infant ward of the court had been sent abroad, in consequence of the advice of medical men, the court granted a reference for the infant's maintenance out of the jurisdiction, but limited the allowance to be made to one year. Wyndham v. Ennismore, 1 Keen, 467.

Father Absconding.]—The court has authority to order maintenance for infants out of the jurisdiction, and where an infant had been taken by his father, who had absconded, and would not suffer the infant to return, the court gave liberty to the guardian to apply annually for an allowance for the infant's maintenance on producing certificates showing the proper application of the money. Stephens v. James, 1 Myl. & K. 627. And see Lockwood v. Fenton, infra, col. 1453.

5. To Whom Paid.

To Father—Mother's Discretion Controlled.]—Where a fund was given to trustees for infants to pay the income to the mother to be applied at her discretion:—Held, that where the mother had not exercised a sound discretion the court would order the income to be paid to the father. Roper's Trusts, In re, 11 Ch. D. 272; 40 L. T. 97; 27 W. R. 408.

—— Dividends.]—Accrued and future dividends ordered to be paid to the father, he undertaking to apply the dividends to their maintenance, the court being satisfied that such order would be for the benefit of the minors. Birch's Trustees, In re, 15 L. R. Ir. 380.

—— Consols in Name of Infant Beneficiary.]—Under 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 32, where an infant was beneficially entitled to consols and to maintenance thereout, an order was made for payment of the dividends to the father upon a petition by the father and the infant, by the father as her next friend. Ramon v. Ramon, 39 L. T. 552; 27 W. R. 260.

The court has jurisdiction under the 1 Will. 4 c. 65, s. 32, upon the petition of the father, where there is no guardian, to direct that dividends belonging to the infant shall be paid to the father for maintenance. Naish, In re, 9 L. J., Ch. 252.

Where stock was invested in the name of an infant, and the bank declined to pay the dividends for want of a sufficient receipt, upon petition of infant's father, although the minor was not a ward of court, and no guardian was appointed and no cause was depending, the court ordered the governor of the bank to pay the dividends to the father. Murphy, In re, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 24.

To Trustees—Accumulations.]—Consols were standing in the names of a trustee and an infant absolutely entitled under a will. The court ordered the proper officer of the Bank of England, during the minority of the infant, to invest the dividends due and to accrue due. The bank, refusing to act on the order, the court made an order directing the dividends to be paid to the present trustees of the will, for the benefit of the infant. Kemp, In re, 59 L. T. 209; 36 W. R. 729.

To Solicitor—Small Legacy.]—The whole of a small legacy, and accumulations, paid out to the solicitor of an infant who had no other property upon his undertaking to apply it in paying for past maintenance, and for a prospective outfit, and after deducting the costs to pay any balance to the infant at majority. Welch, In re, 23 L. J., Ch. 344; 2 W. R. 310.

To Guardian.]—An allowance of maintenance to a guardian must be in regard to what the infant then had, and not to what falls in afterwards. Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. Wms. 368.

—— Infant out of Jurisdiction.]—An infant entitled to a fund in court was resident abroad with a guardian appointed by a foreign court. The vice-chancellor ordered the dividends to be paid to her solicitor, he undertaking to remit them to the guardian. Morrison, In re, 16 Sim. 42; 11 Jur. 984.

The court has authority to order maintenance for infants out of the jurisdiction. Where an infant had been taken away by his father, who had absconded, and would not suffer the infant to return, the court allowed the guardian to apply annually for an allowance for the infant on producing certificates showing the proper application of the money. Stephens v. James, 1 Myl. & K. 627.

Where the mother after a second marriage was living apart from her husband at New York and refused to allow an infant to be brought to this country. On petition by a maternal uncle of the infant the court appointed the mother and uncle the guardians, and refused to make any allowance for maintenance. Lockwood v. Fenton, 1 Sm. & G. 73; 17 Jur. 127.

—— Testamentary Guardian—Marriage.]—The court on the marriage of a female testamentary guardian, to whom an allowance for maintenance has been made, inquires into the altered state of circumstances. Jones v. Powell, 9 Beav. 345.

—— Emigration.]—Part of the principal in court, to which infants were entitled, advanced towards enabling the infants to emigrate with their guardian. Clarke, In re, 17 Jur. 362.

—— Small Sum.]—A very small sum of stock being in court to the account of several infants, the court made an order that the dividends should be paid to their guardian until the youngest should attain twenty-one, or until further order. Butterfield, In re, 19 L. J., Ch. 373; 15 Jur. 96.

—— Stepmother.]—A., on the death of her husband, entered into possession of the property he left, and out of its rents, and by carrying on his trade, maintained herself and his children, three being his children by a former marriage. On a bill the court directed a reference to the master, who by his report approved of the widow and her co-executor as the guardians of all the children, and found that the whole income ought to be allowed for their maintenance. The court directed that the receiver should pay all the income of the property to the widow for the maintenance of the children. Anderton v. Yates, 5 De G. & Sm. 202.

6. PRACTICE.

No Cause Depending.]—Maintenance allowed, though no cause in court. Kent, Ex parte, 3 Bro. C. C. 80.

The court, upon ex parte applications, may allow maintenance for an infant where no cause is depending. Whitfield, Ex parte, 2 Atk. 315.

Order on Petition.]—The court will allow maintenance upon a petition without bill, where the infant's income does not exceed 100*l.* a year. Lakin, Ex parte, 4 Russ. 307.

Maintenance will not be allowed without a bill filed. to an infant entitled to real estate of a yearly value exceeding 100*l.* Molesworth, In re, 4 Russ. 308, n.

Reference for maintenance and appointment of guardian ordered on petition without suit; property 200*l.* per annum. Myerscough, Ex parte, 1 J. & W. 151.

Order as to maintenance out of freehold estate made upon petition without suit. Starkie, Ex parte, 3 Sim. 339; 30 R. R. 170.

—— Contingent Interests.]—Maintenance allowed in the case of children and grandchildren; though the interests were contingent. The court, however, refused to make the order on petition, and directed a bill to be filed. Fairman v. Green, 10 Ves. 45.

Bonus on Policy.]—A bonus on a policy settled on trusts, under which an infant was entitled contingently, directed on petition without suit to be anticipated and applied for maintenance. Hays, In re, 3 De G. & Sm. 485.

Petition—By whom Presented.]—Petition as to maintenance by whom to be presented. Burble v. Russell, 4 Jur. 859.

—— Appearance.]—In a petition for a guardian and maintenance, the personal attendance of two infants dispensed with on the ground of illness. Dawson v. Dawson, 1 Jur. 37.

Reference—Small Property.]—Dividends to which infants were entitled ordered, without a reference, to be paid to their father, the parties being poor and the property of small amount. Payne v. Low, 1 Russ. & M. 223.

—— Apprentice Fee.]—Infant apprenticed and fee paid without reference, father alleging he thought it proper. Mendes da Costa v. De Paz, Dick. 168.

—— Special Direction—Unborn Child.]—A special direction to the master in settling an infant's allowance, to consider the birth of a child unprovided for, refused. Burnet v. Burnet, 1 Bro. C. C. 179. And see Dick. 602.

—— Costs.]—Reference for maintenance without suit when first introduced; court will order costs on reference for maintenance without suit. Thomas, Ex parte, Amb. 146.

—— Receiver.]—Where infants' mother was dead, and the father, a man of irregular habits, had intermarried with his servant, the court referred it to the master to approve of a receiver of the minors' estate, and also to report as to proper maintenance, and whether it would be proper to appoint guardians. Cormicks, In re, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 264.

Past Maintenance — Residuary Legatee.]—Where it appeared that an infant residuary legatee, a married woman, had been deserted by her husband, and that there was likely to be a large residue, inquiries were directed to ascertain the probable amount of the petitioner's fortune, and what would be a proper allowance for past and future maintenance. Coster v. Coster, 1 Keen, 199.

Where a party had maintained a minor for seven years, reference to inquire by whom the minor had been maintained confined to six years. Forestal v. Doyle, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 520.

Report—Exceptions.]—Exceptions will not lie to a master's report of maintenance; and a title set up against that of the infant cannot be taken notice of, but must be established elsewhere. Nicholls, Ex parte, 1 Bro. C. C. 577.

Party in Contempt.]—Applications for maintenance of wards refused, when the party applying is in contempt. Campbell v. Campbell, 1 Jur. 540.

Education—Change of School.]—A. gave a legacy to an infant, the income to be applied for its maintenance, under the superintendence of B., who should also have the control of the infant's education. The father and mother resided abroad, and B. sent the infant to school. On the death of B., the father desired to place the infant at another school:—Held, that the opposition of the schoolmistress to a petition was improper; and a petition presented by her for the future maintenance of the infant was dismissed with costs. Golding v. Castle, 14 Jur. 1080.

G. PROCEEDINGS BY AND AGAINST INFANTS.

1. In General.

In Formâ Pauperis.]—An infant may sue in formâ pauperis by his next friend. Bryant v. Wagner, 3 Jur. 460.

Inquiry whether Action for Infant's Benefit.]—The court of appeal will not interfere with the discretion of the court below as to an inquiry whether a suit is for an infant plaintiff's benefit. Pensotti v. Pensotti, 20 L. T. 348; 22 W. R. 461.

When a will is disputed by a guardian ad litem on behalf of infants, the court of probate has power to inquire whether the suit is for their benefit. Percival v. Cross, 52 L. J., P. 16; 7 P. D. 234; 47 L. T. 353; 31 W. R. 124; 46 J. P. 792.

Compromise of Actions.] — In sanctioning arrangements between parties the court acts upon the statement of counsel that the compromise is expedient, but it does not by such sanction thereby bind infants. Norman v. Strains, 50 L. J., P. 39; 6 P. D. 219: 45 L. T. 191; 29 W. R. 744.

A compromise on behalf of infants is to be obtained upon petition, supported by an affidavit of a solicitor that counsel's opinion has been given that the compromise is for the benefit of the infants. Gray v. Paul, 46 L. J., Ch. 818; 25 W. R. 874.

The court has no power to compromise a claim in which infants are interested against the wish of the next friend or guardian ad litem of the infants, acting under the advice of counsel. Birchall, In re, Wilson v. Birchall, 16 Ch. D. 41; 44 L. T. 113; 29 W. R. 27.

A party to a suit, who, knowing that other parties are infants, agrees that a certain course should be taken, cannot afterwards object that his consent does not bind him because the other parties were infants. Pisani v. Att.-Gen. (Gibraltar), L. R. 5 P. C. 517; 30 L. T. 729; 22 W. R. 900.

Discharge of Infant.]—The court refused on motion to discharge an infant, who had sued without prochein amy or guardian, and was in execution for the costs. Finley v. Jowle, 13 East, 6.

Infant cannot be kept in custody after guardian assigned him. Perkins v. Hamond, Dick. 287.

The court would not discharge an infant, in an action of slander, from execution for damages and costs, although the insolvent court had refused to relieve him, because, on account of his infancy, he was unable to make the assignment of property required by 7. Geo. 4, c. 57. Defries v. Davies, 1 Scott, 594; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 692; 3 D. P. C. 629; 1 Hodges, 103; 4 L. J., C. P. 191.

An infant was non-suited, and there was judgment against him for costs. He sued on a writ of error, which was not proceeded with. After the return day of the writ had expired, he was taken in execution on the original judgment:—Held, that he was not entitled to be discharged out of custody. Dow v. Clark, 1 C. & M. 860; 2 D. P. C. 302; 3 Tyr. 866; 2 L. J., Ex. 271.

Partition—Sale out of Court.]—Where some of the parties beneficially interested are not sui juris, and the trustees have no power of sale under their trust deed, there is no jurisdiction under the Partition Act, 1868, s. 8, to order a sale out of court. Strugnell v. Strugnell, 53 L. J., Ch. 1167; 27 Ch. D. 258; 51 L. T. 512; 33 W. R. 30.

To Recover Realty.]—When an infant is entitled both at law and in equity to real estate as against another in wrongful possession, he is entitled to recover in equity on a bill stating these facts and asking a declaration of title and account, and may join adult remaindermen as co-plaintiffs. Howard v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 43 L. J., Ch. 495; L. R. 17 Eq. 378; 29 L. T. 862; 22 W. R. 290.

Personal Injuries—Action against Trustees.]—An infant having been injured by an accident, her claims were compromised for a sum of money, which was paid over to trustees of a settlement, the trusts of which gave the income only to her for life. When she came of age she repudiated this arrangement, and sued the trustees for money received to her use:—Held, that the contract entered into by the trustees was to hold the money on the trusts of the settlement, and that they were not liable to her in this form of action. Schofield v. Robinson, 24 L. T. 591; 19 W. R. 958.

—— Negligence.]—Where the jury found that there was negligence in a person taking care of an infant:—Held, that the child was so identified with the person who was negligent that an action in the child's name could not be maintained against the company. Waite v. N. E. Ry. El., Bl. & El. 728; 28 L. J., Q. B. 258; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 936; 7 W. R. 311—Ex. Ch.

—— Expenses for Cure.]—An infant suing for a personal injury cannot sue for expenses paid by his parents for his cure. Collins v. Lefevre, 1 F. & F. 436.

Contributory Negligence.]—Contributory negligence by an infant has the same effect in disentitling him to maintain an action as in the case of an adult. Abbott v. Macfie, 2 H. & C. 744; 33 L. J., Ex. 177; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 682; 12 W. R. 315.

Contributory negligence does not disentitle an infant to recover for an injury sustained otherwise than where such injury is occasioned entirely by the negligence of the infant. Gardner v. Grace, 1 F. & F. 359.

The defendant having placed a crushing machine in a public market for exhibition, a child was injured by putting his fingers between the cog-wheels while another child was turning the handle:—Held, that the defendant was not liable for negligence in leaving the machine unguarded where it was. Mangan v. Atterton, 4 H. & C. 388 ; 35 L. J., Ex. 161 ; L. R. 1 Ex. 239 ; 14 W. R. 771.

A child three years and a-half old strayed upon a railway, and had its leg cut off by a train :—Held, that in the absence of any evidence, to show that the child got there through neglect or default on the part of the company, the company was not responsible. Singleton v. Eastern Counties Ry., 7 C. B. (N.S.) 287.

Receiving Order against Firm—Infant Partner.]—Where an act of bankruptcy has been committed by a partnership firm of which one partner is an infant, a receiving order cannot be made against the firm generally, but it may be made against the members of the firm "other than" the infant partner. Lovell v. Beauchamp, 63 L. J., Q. B. 802 ; [1894] A. C. 607 ; 11 R. 60 ; 71 L. T. 587 ; 43 W. R. 129—H. L. (E.)

Debtor's Summons issued by.] — An infant creditor may issue a debtor's summons in his own name. Brocklebank, Ex parte, Brocklebank, In re, 46 L. J., Bk. 113 ; 6 Ch. D. 358 ; 37 L. T. 282 ; 25 W. R. 859—C. A.

Fraud of Guardian.]—Infant has remedy against guardian for fraud in conduct of suit. Richmond v. Taylor, Dick. 38.

Parent Suing for Injuries to Child—Loss of Service.]—In an action for beating the son of the plaintiff, stating him as the servant of the father, per quod servitium amisit, it is not necessary to show that the son did any material business for the father ; it is sufficient that he lives in his house, and is part of his family. Jones v. Brown, 1 Esp. 217 ; Peake, 233.

The relation of parent and child, though the latter lives with and is under the control of its father, does not necessarily constitute the relation of master and servant. Therefore, where a father brought an action for an injury to a child two years and a-half old, per quod servitium amisit : —Held, that as the child was incapable of performing acts of service, the action was not maintainable. Hall v. Hollander, 7 D. & R. 133 ; 4 B. & C. 660 ; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 39.

2. Service.

Infant out of Jurisdiction.]—Service of a subpœna on the father of a minor defendant, if within the jurisdiction, is sufficient, although the minor resides out of jurisdiction. Kirwan v. Kirwan, 1 Hog. 264.

Service of subpœna on a minor in France, substituted on his father in Guernsey ; where it appeared that the minor could not be personally served. Loveday v. D'Esterre, 1 Jones, 561.

The court has jurisdiction over the custody of infants being natural-born English subjects, although resident abroad. Hope v. Hope, 4 De G. M. & G. 328 ; 2 Eq. R. 1047 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 682 ; 2 W. R. 443.

Service on mother in France, where children were, of order to deliver up the children. S. C., 2 W. R. 698.

Secreting Infant.]—An order for substituted service on the father of an infant granted, on an affidavit, stating the refusal of father to say where his child was, the age of the child, and that the usual residence of the child was with his father. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 11 L. J., Ch. 109 ; 6 Jur. 313.

An infant having been taken out of the jurisdiction to avoid service, the court refused to appoint the senior six-clerk in court to appear and put in his answer. Lane v. Hardwicke, 5 Beav. 222. And see Hancock v. Eaton, iq. n.

Substituted service of a subpœna to appear ordered in the case of an infant. Ib.

Father secreting infant to prevent his being served with subpœna, ordered to discover where infant was. Hockly v. Lukin, Dick. 353.

Where a mother secretes her children who are infants, service of a subpœna on her is sufficient. Smith v. Marshall, 2 Atk. 70.

On Mother.]—Service on mother of infant good. Baker v. Holmes, Dick. 18. S. P., Garnum v. Marshall, Dick. 77. And see preceding case.

Step-Father.]—Notice of an application to appoint guardian ad litem served at the house of the mother and her second husband, with whom the infants were residing :—Held, sufficient. Hitch v. Wells, 8 Beav. 576.

Father-in-Law.]—Service of subpœna upon the father-in-law of an infant good service. Thompson v. Jones, 8 Ves. 141.

On Guardian.]—Service of subpœna to hear judgment on infant not good ; guardian ad litem must be served. Freeman v. Carnock, Dick. 439. S. P., Taylor v. Atwood, 2 P. Wms. 643.

Undergraduate—Principal of College.]—Service of a copy of the bill upon the principal of the college of which the infant was an undergraduate member :—Held, sufficient, the plaintiff being unable to discover the residence of the parent. Christie v. Cameron, 25 L. J., Ch. 488 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 635 ; 4 W. R. 589.

After Infant attains Majority.]—An infant having a day to show cause against a decree of foreclosure attained twenty-one and left the kingdom before he was served, to avoid his creditors ; application to serve his clerk in court with the subpœna was granted. Elcock v. Glegg, Dick. 764.

Service of subpœna to hear judgment on father of defendant, good, although he had attained his age in the interim. Lloyd v. Trimlestown (Lord), 2 Moll. 329.

What Sufficient.] — Four minor defendants resided with their father, a co-defendant, when the process-server went to the defendant's house to serve him with subpœnas for his children ; he was denied, though in the house at the time ; the process-server then gave copies to the servant :—Held, that was good service on the minors. Crofton v. Carr, 1 Hog. 356.

Memorandum of.]—A memorandum of service of notice of the decree upon infants ordered to be entered. Chalmers v. Laurie, 10 Hare (App.) xxiv., xxvii.

3. Appearance.

In Person.]—If an infant appears in person not by guardian or prochein amy, it is error in fact. Castledine v. Mundy, 1 N. & M. 635 ; 4 B. & Ad. 90 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 154.

By Attorney.]—Where there has been judgment of nonsuit in an action brought against an infant, it is no ground of error that he appeared by attorney. Bird v. Pegg, 5 B. & Ald. 418.

If an infant assigns, by attorney, for error coram vobis, that he has improperly appeared in the action by attorney instead of guardian, it is a ground of error: still the court will set the assignment aside, and allow the plaintiff in error to assign by guardian. Beven v. Cheshire, 3 D. P. C. 70.

After error in fact, brought by a defendant assigning infancy and appearance by attorney on the record, the court ordered all the proceedings subsequent to the appearance to be set aside, and the defendant to appear by guardian. Carr v. Cooper, 1 B. & S. 230; 4 L. T. 323; 9 W. R. 611.

An appearance entered by a plaintiff for an infant by an attorney is irregular, and the subsequent proceedings may be set aside without costs even after a writ of inquiry executed. Nunn v. Curtis, 4 D. P. C. 729.

An infant cannot appear by attorney, for he must appear by his guardian. Dwyer v. O'Brien, 1 Ridgw. 38, n.

—— Administratrix.]—If a defendant is sued as administratrix during minority, and appears by attorney, such appearance is irregular, as she should have appeared by guardian. Hindmarsh v. Chandler, 1 Moore, 250; 7 Taunt. 488.

Who may Enter.]—A solicitor must be taken, in the absence of proof to the contrary, to have authority from his client, though an infant, to enter an appearance for him; and after appearance entered for an infant, a guardian ad litem may be appointed, although he has not been served with the bill. Lloyd v. Rossmore, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 488.

—— Liability of Solicitor for Costs.]—Where a writ is served on an infant, and an appearance entered for him by a solicitor without knowledge of his infancy and bonâ fide:—Held, that although the appearance will be set aside as irregular, the solicitor is not personally liable for the costs. Wade v. Keefe, 22 L. R. Ir. 154.

Judgment in Default.] — Where a plaintiff signs judgment for default of appearance, not knowing that the defendant is an infant, it is a matter for the discretion of the court whether such judgment should be set aside. Furnival v. Brooke, 49 L. T. 134.

The 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76 has not abolished the necessity of appointing a guardian to an infant defendant before the plaintiff can sign judgment by default. Jarman v. Lucas, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 474; 33 L. J., C. P. 108; 12 W. R. 202.

No Appearance Entered.]—Where the defendant is an infant, the plaintiff ought to apply to him to name his guardian, and in default he should apply to the court to oblige the defendant to do so. Shipman v. Stevens, 2 Wils. 50.

—— Minor Residing out of Jurisdiction—Official Solicitor Guardian ad litem.]—The defendant in a probate action was a minor resident out of the jurisdiction. Notice of the writ had been served upon her, and upon her guardian nominated by the foreign court, but her guardian declined to enter an appearance. The court, holding that the practice was governed by Ord. XIII. r. 1, nominated the official solicitor of the court, the defendant's guardian ad litem, and ordered that his costs should be part of the costs of the plaintiff, the executor propounding the will. White v. Duvernay, 60 L. J., P. 89; [1891] P. 290.

4. Proceedings before Decree or Order.

a. Pleadings and Motions.

Mistake in Pleading.]—Where a bill filed on behalf of an infant does not sufficiently assert the infant's rights, the court will order a new bill to be filed. Wace v. Bickerton, 3 De G. & Sm. 751; 19 L. J., Ch. 254; 14 Jur. 784.

Court will act for benefit of infant without regard to prayer of petition. De Manneville v. De Manneville, 10 Ves. 59; 7 R. R. 340.

Although the prayer of a bill may be badly framed, the court will not allow the interest of an infant to be prejudiced. Walker v. Taylor, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 681.

—— Supplemental Bill.]—A common administration decree having been made, an infant interested in the estate some years afterwards was allowed to file a supplemental bill charging a trustee with a breach of trust discovered since the date of the decree. Hoghton, In re, Hoghton v. Fiddey, 43 L. J., Ch. 758; L. R. 18 Eq. 573; 22 W. R. 854.

Plea of Infancy.]—The withdrawal by a defendant of a plea of infancy, whether true or false, is a sufficient consideration for an agreement by the plaintiff to accept a smaller sum. Cooper v. Parker, 15 C. B. 822; 3 C. L. R. 710; 24 L. J., C. P. 68; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 281; 3 W. R. 245—Ex. Ch.

—— Money Paid In.]—If money is paid into court when there is a plea of infancy, the defendant may still avail himself of his infancy. Hitchcock v. Tyson, 2 Esp. 481, n.; 5 R. R. 748, n.

—— How Pleaded.] — To an action on a bill of exchange against the acceptor, he pleaded that he accepted the bill while an infant, it being without date at acceptance; that the plaintiff afterwards altered the bill by writing a date thereon; and that there never was any licence or ratification by the defendant to such alteration after he attained his majority:—Held, that the plea was not bad for duplicity. Harrison v. Cotgreave, 4 C. B. 562; 5 D. & L. 169; 16 L. J., C. P. 198.

—— Joint or Several.]—In an action against two on joint promises, they pleaded severally, both pleaded non-assumpsit, and one infancy. The plaintiff, in answer, admitted the infancy, and entered a nolle prosequi as to the defendant pleading it, but went to trial against the other:—Held, that he could not recover, his admission on the record being conclusive evidence that there was no joint promise. Boyle v. Webster, 17 Q. B. 950; 21 L. J., Q. B. 202.

Warranty.]—Infancy is a good defence to an action on the warranty of a horse. Howlett v. Haswell, 4 Camp. 118. S. P., Green v. Greenbank, 2 Marsh. 485.

Proof of Infancy.]—The proof of a plea of infancy lies upon the defendant. Jewne v. Ward, 2 Stark. 328. S. P., Hartley v. Wharton, 3 P. & D. 529; 11 A. & E. 934; 9 L. J., Q. B. 209; 4 Jur. 576.

—— Evidence.]—Family discussion as to birthday, and acts done on the reputed day, are evidence for the jury as to the age of an infant. Reg. v. Hayes, 2 Cox, C. C. 226.

Action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill of exchange. Proof, that the acceptance was his writing, that he came of age one day before the maturity of the bill, and resided in the same town as the drawer and indorser, is evidence, from which the jury might infer that the bill was accepted during minority. Roberts v. Bethell, 12 C. B. 778; 22 L. J., C. P. 69; 16 Jur. 1087; 1 W. R. 80.

Replication.] — A replication, on equitable grounds, to a plea of infancy, that the defendant fraudulently contracted the debt by means of a false and fraudulent representation that he was of age, is bad. De Roo v. Foster, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 272. S. P., Bartlett v. Wells, 1 B. & S. 836; 31 L. J., Q. B. 57; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 762; 5 L. T. 607; 10 W. R. 229.

Interrogatories.] — An infant cannot be ordered to answer interrogatories. Mayor v. Collins, 59 L. J., Q. B. 199; 24 Q. B. D. 261; 62 L. T. 326; 38 W. R. 349.

—— Divorce Proceedings.] — Whether in a divorce suit any special protection is granted to infants in matters of discovery, quære. Redfern v. Redfern, 90 L. T. J. 120—C. A. Affirming on other grounds 54 J. P. 792.

Default in Pleading.]—The court ordered that the action should be set down on notice of trial as against the infant defendant. National Provincial Bank v. Evans, 51 L. J., Ch. 97; 30 W. R. 177.

In an action for sale in lieu of partition no defence was put in, and the plaintiffs moved for judgment on affidavits which verified the statement of claim:—Held, that notice of trial need not be given. There is nothing in the rules of court or in National Provincial Bank v. Evans (supra) to the contrary. Fitzwater, In re, Fitzwater v. Waterhouse, 52 L. J., Ch. 83.

The correct course where infants are parties, and their defence is withdrawn and judgment is moved for, is to prove the statement of claim by affidavit. Gardner v. Tapling, 33 W. R. 473. S. P., Wallis v. Wallis, 13 L. R. Ir. 258.

—— Partition.]—On a motion for judgment in default of pleading by the plaintiffs in a partition action, some of the defendants being infants, it is not necessary to verify the statement of claim by affidavits. Ripley v. Sawyer, 55 L. J., Ch. 407; 31 Ch. D. 494; 54 L. T. 294; 34 W. R. 270.

Motion for Judgment.] — Upon motion for judgment in an action for sale in lieu of partition, where all persons interested (some being infants) asked that an inquiry as to title might be dispensed with, and for an immediate sale out of court, the court required the allegations in the statement of claim to be verified by affidavit, although they were admitted in the defence. Willis v. Willis, 61 L. T. 610; 38 W. R. 7. And see Ellis v. Robbins, 50 L. J., Ch. 512.

Staying Proceedings—Administration Action.] —Where some of the defendants in an administration action offered to satisfy the whole of the plaintiff's claim and the costs of the action, the court refused to stay the proceedings unless the rights of an infant defendant interested in the suit were also provided for. Clegg v. Clegg, 17 L. R. Ir. 118.

b. Parol to Demur and Day to Show Cause.

In General.]—A minor is bound by a decree. Lightburne v. Swift, 2 Ball & B. 213.

Infants have been obliged to answer in equity, where the parol should have demurred at law. Hale v. Hide, Tothill, 108.

—— Tenant in Tail.]—Tenant in tail coming into esse before decree is as much bound by all complete proceedings as he would be after decree. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 3 Madd. 436.

Consent Order.]—Infants are bound by a decree taken by consent, although no reference to a master whether it was to their benefit. Wall v. Bushby, 1 Bro. C. C. 484.

An order was made, which was expressed to be by consent of one of the respondents, who was treated as an adult though in fact she was under age, and the order was enrolled. On attaining her majority, the respondent filed her bill to set aside the order. It appearing that another infant in the same interest as the plaintiff had been a party, on whose behalf the court had ascertained that the order was one which ought to be made, the court refused to set aside the order. Fudelle v. Bernard, 19 W. R. 555.

Where a consent order was a right order to be made, if the infant had not consented, it is immaterial whether he ought to be bound by the consent or not, as he was allowed, on coming of age, to make a new defence. Malone v. Malone, 8 Cl. & F. 179; West, 637; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 536. S. C., nom. Malone v. O'Connor, 2 Dr. & Wal. 491, 536.

Quære, whether, on the authorities, an infant defendant, in a case such as this, is entitled, after coming of age, to put in a new answer and make a new defence. Ib.

Fraud or Mistake — Personal Estate.] — An infant, unless there is new matter or fraud, or collusion, is bound by a decree made for his benefit; and with respect to personal estate, unless for such causes the parol never demurs. So, where there is a decree for the benefit of an infant, and he dies, his executor shall never dispute the decree. Sheffield v. Bucks (Duke), 1 Atk. 631.

—— Compromise.]—Where a compromise has been entered into by the court on behalf of an infant, with a full knowledge of the facts, the infant is bound, even though it turn out that the court was mistaken; but if, by suppression or misstatement of facts intentionally made, the court has been led to an erroneous conclusion, it will set aside the compromise as against the innocent party. Brooke v. Mostyn (Lord), 10 Jur. (N.S.) 554. Affirmed 11 L. T. 392; 13 W. R. 115.

Infant Born after Decree.]—When an infant, interested in an action, is born after decree, an order may be obtained binding the infant by all proceedings up to the time of his birth; and then a summons may be taken out, calling on the infant to show cause why he should not be bound by the proceedings subsequent. Scruby v. Payne, 34 L. T. 845.

Right, when to be Exercised.]—An infant is not bound by the decree of the court of equity, but must have a reasonable time after he comes of age to show cause against it. Effingham (Lady) v. Napier, 4 Bro. P. C. 340.

An infant could not pray the parol to demur in any other stage of the proceeding than at the time of pleading. Derisley v. Custance, 4 Term Rep. 75.

An infant aggrieved by a decree not bound to stay till he is of age, but may apply as soon as he thinks fit to reverse it. Richmond v. Tayleur, 1 P. Wms. 737.

Where a declaration was made binding the infant's inheritance but reserving a question of construction, the court refused to give the infant a day to show cause against the decree until the hearing on the equity reserved, when it would appear whether the infant would be required to execute a conveyance or not. Walsh v. Trevannion, 16 Sim. 180; 12 Jur. 547.

—— Foreclosure.] — In a foreclosure suit against an infant, though the infant has six months after he comes of age to show cause, &c., he can only show an error in the decree. Mallack v. Galton, 3 P. Wms. 352.

Devisee—Specialty Creditor.]—An infant devisee, sued by a specialty creditor of the devisor, could not pray the parol to demur; such privilege of an heir who was in by descent not being extended to a devisee by 3 Will. & M. c. 14. Plaskett v. Beeby, 4 East, 485; 1 Smith, 264.

Testator devised an estate to his heir-at-law charged with two legacies, and afterwards died indebted on specialty, leaving his heir an infant; in this case the parol shall not demur. Mould v. Williamson, 2 Cox, 386.

Where lands are devised to trustees for payment of debts, and the heir is an infant, he has no day to show cause; but if the lands are not devised to a particular person, it is otherwise. Blatch v. Wilder, 1 Atk. 421.

Heir-at-Law.]—Bill for sale of real estate for payment of debts. The heir-at-law being an infant, the parol demurred. The court will appoint a receiver as in other cases. Sweet v. Partridge, 1 Cox, 433; Dick. 696.

An estate descending to an infant heir subject to lien or equitable charge:—Held, that the parol does not demur in a suit instituted by other creditors. Brookfield v. Bradley, Jacob, 632.

To a bill for sale of real estates by simple contract creditors of a trader against his heir, the parol may demur, semble. Lechmere v. Brasier, 2 J. & W. 287; 22 R. R. 130.

Where an infant in his answer to a creditor's bill, insisted that the parol ought to demur during the minority; it was ordered accordingly, although his counsel would have waived it as prejudicial to him. Searth v. Cotton, Forrest. 198.

Sale — Marshalling Assets.] — Assets marshalled, but no sale decreed until the infant devisee attains twenty-one. Powell v. Robins, 7 Ves. 209. But see id. 211, n.

—— Charges by Will.]—By the decree in a suit to raise charges created by will, certain lands, vested in a trustee in trust for minors, were directed to be sold. The cestuis qui trustent were parties to the suit, and a day was given to show cause. Kirby v. O'Hea, 2 Jones, 635.

Decree for sale against devisee and infant heir and that plaintiff should be let into possession, and hold against the infant, who should convey, when of age, unless cause shown six months after. Sikes v. Lister, 5 Vin. Abr. 541, pl. 28.

Accounts.]—The court will decree the defendant though an infant to pay money charged by will, and to account for profits of moiety of lands devised, but the defendant must have a day to show cause when she comes of age. Gundry v. Baynard, 2 Vern. 479.

Bond.]—One gives her son lands in lieu of lands entailed, and by will gives the entailed lands to her daughter, and takes a bond from her son to permit her daughter to enjoy the entailed land. The son dies, leaving an infant son, who, being in possession of the land in recompense, brings an ejectment of the entailed lands. By reason of the infancy of the grandson, the bond could not be sued. The daughter is decreed to be quieted in possession of the entailed lands until six months after the infant comes of age, and then the infant may show cause. Thomas v. Gyles, 2 Vern. 232.

Legal Estate in Trustees.]—Where legal estate is in trustees there is no occasion to give the infant a day to show cause. Thornton v. Blackbourne, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 303. S. P., Bingham v. Clanmorris (Lord) 2 Moll. 393.

Enlarging Time to show Cause.]—The court enlarged the time for a defendant to show cause after he came of age, till the plaintiffs in the first cause had put in an answer to a bill of discovery he filed against them after he came of age. Trefusis v. Cotton, Moseley, 203.

It is a good cause why a decree should not be made absolute against an infant after he comes of age that he has put in a new answer. Id. 313.

Amended Answer.]—Decree omitting to give an infant six months to show cause against it is erroneous. Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 551; 12 R. R. 32.

An infant defendant entitled to amend his answer after decree, and going into a new defence. Id. 444.

If an infant is plaintiff in the original cause, and defendant in the cross-cause, and has six months after he comes of age to show cause against the decree, he may amend his answer, or put in a new one, but cannot put in a new bill or amend his former. Anon., Moseley, 66.

Upon a decree against an infant, unless cause within six months after he comes of age, the infant may answer anew. Napier v. Effingham (Lady), 2 P. Wms. 401. S. P., Fountain v. Caine, 1 P. Wms. 504.

Amending Decree.]—The court refused to amend a decree by striking out the day to show cause, which had been given to a minor defendant, the first tenant in tail of the lands sold. Mahon v. Dawson, 2 Dr. & War. 286, n.

Semble, the court will not amend a decree by inserting therein for a minor defendant a day to show cause. Tilsm v. Lawder, 2 Dr. & War. 285; 1 Con. & L. 392.

Infant Plaintiff.]—An infant is bound by a decree in a cause where he is plaintiff, and after coming of age he is not allowed, by a new bill, to dispute anything that was done during his minority in regard to maintenance. Gregory v. Molesworth, 3 Atk. 626.

Infancy not Pleaded.]—In a case in which the defence of an infant had not been properly raised and proved, a decree was made for the plaintiff, without prejudice to any bill to be filed by the infant within six months to establish his rights. Lane v. Hardwicke, 9 Beav. 148.

Appeal.]—If an appeal is dismissed on account of the neglect of the guardians of an infant to bring it to a decision, the infant is entitled to renew it when he attains his majority. Orphan Board (President) v. Van Reenen, 1 Knapp, 85.

Infant's Inheritance.]—An infant's inheritance never bound by acts of the court. Taylor v. Phillips, 2 Ves. sen. 23.

—— Decree for Sale.]—Though the usual practice is for the parol to demur till the infant come of age, yet where it is for his interest that the estate should be sold, Lord Hardwicke decreed a sale; but declared he did not mean to break in upon the rule of the parol demurring. Uvedale v. Uvedale, 3 Atk. 117.

Special Occupant.]—Lands are given to A. and his heirs for three lives; A. dies; his heir does not take by descent so as to have his age, or to make the parol demur, but takes as special occupant. Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. Wms. 368.

Conveyance—Partition.]—The rebeing, on bill for partition, infant cestuis que trustent, conveyance respited till they come of age. Att.-Gen. v. Hamilton, 1 Madd. 214; 16 R. R. 208.

Partition between an adult and the infant; the latter having time till of age to show cause. Court orders the conveyance from the adult to be respited till that time. Tuckfield v. Buller, Amb. 197.

Partition decreed of lands conveyed to trustees as to a moiety for an infant, but the trustees not to convey till the infant is of age, that he might join in confirming the partition. Brook (Lord) v. Hertford (Lord), 2 P. Wms. 518.

Enrolment of Decree.]—The costs of an infant defendant were ordered to be paid out of the estate on the understanding that no further litigation should take place. He attained his majority shortly before the five years, within which the decree might be enrolled, and two years afterwards applied for leave to enrol the decree, which was refused. Monypenny v. Dering, 4 De G. & J. 175; 28 L. J., Ch. 503; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 661; 7 W. R. 439.

Enrolment of decree by one of the defendants five months after the decree, during the infancy and absence of the chief plaintiff from the country:—Held, not to have been done with undue haste, the infant having been properly represented according to the practice of the court. Hyslop v. Jones, 3 Moore, P. C. 15.

Foreclosure—Equitable Mortgage.]—In an action by an equitable mortgagee for foreclosure:—Held, on motion for judgment, that the infant heir must be ordered to convey when he attained twenty-one, and that he must have a day to show cause. Price v. Carver (3 My. & Cr. 157) followed. Mellor v. Porter, 53 L. J., Ch. 178; 25 Ch. D. 158; 50 L. T. 49; 32 W. R. 271.

Judgment for foreclosure was made absolute against an infant without giving time to show cause, the mortgagee offering to pay the infant's costs as between solicitor and client, and the guardian being of opinion that it was for the benefit of the infant that the order should be made, and the mortgage debt greatly exceeded the value of the property. Younge v. Cocker, 32 W. R. 359.

Decree on Bill pro confesso.]—Decree on bill pro confesso is absolute, and no day given to show cause against it. But where defendant is served, and does not appear, he has a day to show cause. London v. Ready, 1 Sim. & S. 44; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 15.

Death of Party.]—Proceedings having been taken after a suit had become defective by the death of the defendant, a first tenant for life:—Held, that an infant, the second tenant for life (who had attended the proceedings under the decree), could not be bound by an order under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52. Powell v. Phillips, 24 L. T. 128; 19 W. R. 562.

5. Order or Decree.

Relief not Prayed by Bill.]—Infant may have decree according to his case, though not prayed by bill. Stapleton v. Stapleton, 1 Atk. 6.

Access.]—Semble, an order for access to an infant under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, may be made ex parte if necessary. Taylor, In re, 11 Sim. 178; 9 L. J., Ch. 399; 4 Jur. 983.

Leave to Marry.]—The form of an order given to a male infant to marry after reference to the master. Plymouth (Earl) v. Lewis, Dick. 801.

Conveyance.]—The master was ordered to settle a conveyance. An infant was interested:—Held, that the words "if the parties disagree" might be inserted in the order. Richardson v. Ward, 11 Beav. 378.

Infants not Parties—Settlement.]—By a post-nuptial settlement, lands were settled, subject to successive life estates for husband and wife, upon the children of the marriage. The husband and wife executed a second settlement of the lands settled. Afterwards both husband and wife purported to mortgage the lands in fee. In a suit for foreclosure, an order was made declaring the mortgage well charged on the lands. The children were at the date of the order infants, and were not parties nor represented by guardians:—Held, that the order was not binding on the children. Bell's Estate, In re, 11 L. R. Ir. 512.

Order against Infant Trustee to Account.]—In an action against trustees of a settlement, held that the proper form of decree was to order the account against the adult trustees in the usual form, directing an inquiry whether all or any, and what parts, of the trust property had come to the hands of R. an infant trustee, and what had been his dealings and transactions in respect of the same, and as to the dates of, and circumstances attending, such receipts, dealings, and transactions. Garnes, In re, Garnes v. Applin, 55 L. J., Ch. 303; 31 Ch. D. 147; 54 L. T. 141; 34 W. R. 127—C. A.

6. Guardian ad Litem.

a. In General.

Benefit of Infant.]—When a will is disputed by a guardian ad litem, the court of probate has power to inquire whether the suit is for the infant's benefit. Percival v. Cross, 52 L. J., P. 16; 7 P. D. 234; 47 L. T. 353; 31 W. R. 124; 46 J. P. 792.

Appointment of.]—N. filed a bill to which there were infant defendants, and subsequently moved to take his bill off the file. No guardian ad litem had been appointed:—Held, that a guardian ad litem must first be appointed. N—— v. N——, 31 L. T. 79; 22 W. R. 819.

—— Bankruptcy Court.]—When it is desired to bring an infant before the court, the proper course is to apply for the appointment of a guardian ad litem. Where on an appeal from a county court, the divisional court in bankruptcy directs such appeal to stand over in order that infants may be made parties, an application for the appointment for a guardian ad litem should be made to the county court. Trustee, Ex parte, Lowndes, In re, 3 Morrell, 216.

Consent to Evidence.]—A guardian ad litem may consent, without the leave of the court, to evidence being taken by affidavit instead of viva voce. Fryer v. Wiseman, 45 L. J., Ch. 199; 33 L. T. 779; 24 W. R. 205. S. P., Knatchbull v. Fowle, 1 Ch. D. 604; 24 W. R. 629.

Interrogatories.]—A guardian ad litem is not a party to the action within the meaning of Ord. XXXI. r. 1, and therefore cannot be compelled to answer interrogatories. Ingram v. Little, 11 Q. B. D. 251; 31 W. R. 858.

Liability for Costs.]—Where a party becomes the guardian on record of an infant, he is liable to the payment of the attorney's bill, though he did not interfere in the conduct of the action. Marnell v. Pickmore, 2 Esp. 473.

The guardian ad litem of an infant defendant raising an unsuccessful defence, will not be ordered to pay the costs unless it is a case of gross misconduct on his part. Morgan v. Morgan, 5 N. R. 427; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 223; 12 L. T. 199.

Where, upon an application of a plaintiff, the solicitor of the suitors' fund, who also acted for other defendants appearing in formâ pauperis, was appointed guardian ad litem of an infant defendant, and the plaintiff was ordered to pay the infant's costs, the court refused to apportion the costs between the several defendants, and allowed the solicitor of the suitors' fund the infant's full costs. Frazer v. Thompson, 1 Giff. 337; 29 L. J., Ch. 402.

The court has no jurisdiction to order payment out of the suitors' fund of the costs incurred by the solicitor of the suitors' fund as guardian ad litem. Fraser v. Thompson, 4 De G. & J. 659.

—— Foreclosure.]—Foreclosure action against devisees, some of whom were infants. On the application of the plaintiff, the solicitor of the suitors' fund was appointed the guardian of the infant defendants. A decree was made for foreclosure and sale:—Held, that the plaintiff was liable to pay the costs incurred by the solicitor of the suitor's fund. Harris v. Hamlyn, 3 De G. & Sm. 470; 18 L. J., Ch. 403; 14 Jur. 55; S. P., Newbury v. Martin, 15 Jur. 166.

—— Partition.]—To a bill for a partition an infant defendant, tenant in tail of an undivided share, did not appear; and, on the application of the plaintiff, the solicitor to the suitors' fee fund was appointed guardian ad litem. The court directed the plaintiff to pay the infant's costs, and charged them on his share. Robinson v. Aston, 9 Jur. 224.

Appearance by Mother as Guardian.]—The mother of an infant defendant appeared as his guardian, though not really so, but the court refused to set aside the appearance. Humphrey v. Brewer, Vern. & S. 306.

Person of Full Age with Guardian.]—On the application of the plaintiffs, a six-clerk was appointed guardian ad litem for a defendant, stated to be an infant, but in reality of full age. A decree was made, and the accounts taken on that footing:—Held, that the proceedings were not binding on him, and the plaintiffs were ordered to pay the costs of the six-clerk. Green v. Badley, 7 Beav. 271.

Commission—Answer to Supplemental Bill.]—Infant defendants being out of the kingdom a guardian ad litem was appointed by commission to put in their answer. Supplemental bill was filed to which same infants were defendants. Ordered that same guardian might put in their answer to the supplemental bill. Lushington v. Sewell, 6 Madd. 28.

b. Appointment, Practice on.

By Motion.]—Habeas corpus to bring up an infant arrested for necessaries, to have guardian assigned him, must be by motion, not petition. Horne v. Lanoy, Dick. 170.

Order made appointing guardian for infant defendant on the motion of plaintiff. Williams v. Wynn, 10 Ves. 159.

Infant Abroad.]—An infant defendant abroad cannot have a guardian assigned to put in his answer on motion, but a commission must go. Tappen v. Norman, 11 Ves. 563.

Infant defendant abroad, his father assigned his guardian for putting in his answer on motion without a commission. Jongsma v. Pfiel, 9 Ves. 357.

Guardian ad litem to an infant defendant resident out of the jurisdiction appointed on motion, and affidavits of fitness and no adverse interest. Smith v. Palmer, 3 Beav. 10.

Guardian to be Named.]—A motion for leave to answer by guardian must name the guardian. Brassington v. Brassington, 2 Anstr. 369.

On Filing Bill.]—The court appointed a guardian of the plaintiff (an infant), on filing the bill, before the defendant had appeared. Pendleton v. Mackrory, Dick. 736.

Title of Order of Course.]—An order of course for the appointment of a guardian ad litem to an infant served with a petition intituled "in matters" and not in a cause. Barrington, In re, 27 Beav. 272.

Special Case.]—Application for the appointment of a guardian to concur in a special case, to be made in court. Thornhill v. Copleston, 10 Hare (App.) lii.

The appointment of a guardian ad litem in a special case should be asked for by motion. Goodfellow, In re, 1 Eq. Rep. 191; 1 W. R. 446.

After Petition Presented.]—Under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, the appointment of a guardian to infant petitioners should be made after the petition has been presented. Hargreave's Settled Estates, In re, 28 L. J., Ch. 197; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 60; 7 W. R. 156.

c. In what Cases Appointed.

Infant out of Jurisdiction.]—Appointment of guardian ad litem to infant defendant abroad. Fowler v. Ward, 6 Jur. 403. S. P., Copley v. Smithson, 5 De G. & Sm. 583.

—— Supplemental Bill.]—A guardian appointed to put in answer for an infant, sole defendant to a supplemental bill, and out of the jurisdiction. Kyan v. Galli, 12 L. J., Ch. 72.

Investment of Trust Funds.]—Where an infant appears upon a petition for the investment of trust funds in which he is interested, the special appointment of a guardian ad litem is necessary. Cleveland (Duke), Harte Estate, In re, 1 Dr. & Sm. 46; 29 L.J., Ch. 530; 8 W. R. 336.

On Petitions.]—A guardian ad litem must be appointed to infants who are served with petitions, intituled "in matters," and not in causes. Barrington, In re, 27 Beav. 272.

Upon a petition for payment out of court of a fund in which infants are interested:—Held, that a guardian ad litem must be appointed. Ward's Will, In re, 2 Giff. 122; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 441; 2 L. T. 82.

Real estate had descended to an infant heir of a trustee. On a petition for the appointment of new trustees and a vesting order, the court made the order subject to the appointment of a guardian ad litem to be dated prior to the order. Cooper, In re, 9 W. R. 531.

After Attachment.]—After attachment against infant for want of answer, the proper course is a messenger to bring him into court to have a guardian assigned him. Eyles v. Le Gros, 9 Ves. 12. S. P., Carr v. Aylmer, Vern. & S. 301; Wilson v. Bott, 1 Price, 62.

Married Woman an Infant.]—The answer of a married woman who is an infant cannot be taken, either separately or jointly with her husband, until she has had a guardian assigned. Colman, v. Northcote, 2 Hare, 147; 12 L. J., Ch. 255; 7 Jur. 528.

To Consent.]—N. filed a bill to which there were infant defendants, and subsequently moved to take his bill off the file. No guardian ad litem of the infants had then been appointed:—Held, that a guardian ad litem for the infants must first be appointed in order to consent. N—— v. N——, 31 L. T. 79; 22 W. R. 819.

d. Commission and Appearance of Infant.

General Rule.]—Upon an application to appoint a guardian ad litem to an infant his appearance in court will not be dispensed with unless under special circumstances. Baynton v. Hooper, 10 Beav. 168.

Motion to appoint a guardian ad litem to infant defendants without their appearance or a commission refused. Mower v. Orr, 6 Hare, 417; 18 L. J., Ch. 50; 12 Jur. 997. S. P., Cowardine v. Wishlade, 21 L. J., Ch. 464; 16 Jur. 461.

Special Circumstances.]—Whether a guardian ad litem can be assigned to an infant without bringing him into court or by means of a commission, quære. Nixon v. Few, 7 Beav. 349.

Guardian ad litem appointed to infants under special circumstances without a commission or their appearing in court. Stillwell v. Blair, 13 Sim. 399. S. P., Drant v. Vause, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 524; 12 L. J., Ch. 439; 7 Jur. 637; and Storr v. Pannell, 1 W. R. 209.

—— Expense.]—Upon an application to the court to appoint a specified person to be guardian ad litem to an infant defendant, it appearing that the cost by appearance or commission would be 9*l.*, but that the costs of an appointment on motion would be only 3*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*, the court made the order. Benison v. Wortley, 5 De G. & Sm. 648; 17 Jur. 2.

Order for the assignment of a guardian ad litem to an infant defendant without a commission to save expense. Egremont v. Egremont, 2 De G. M. & G. 730; 9 Hare (App.) xxvii.; 22 L. J., Ch. 108; 17 Jur. 55; 1 W. R. 69. S. P., Fletcher v. Rogers, 10 Hare (App.) cxiii.; 1 W. R. 74.

Whether special circumstances are now necessary to dispense with a commission, quære. Ib.

—— Infant of Tender Age.]—On a motion for the appointment of a guardian of infant defendants, the appearance of one less than a month old was dispensed with on an affidavit of the birth, and a medical certificate that the infant could not be safely produced. Stuteley v. Harison, 3 De G. & Sm. 390; 18 L. J., Ch. 336; 13 Jur. 860.

—— Illness of Infant.]—The appearance of infants in court on the appointment of a guardian ad litem enables the court to ascertain that they are actually under the care of the guardian it appoints; but, upon a proper affidavit of the illness of an infant, the court appointed a guardian. Crabbe v. Mowbery, 5 De G. & S. 347. S. C., nom. Crabb v. Moxhay, 21 L. J., Ch. 504.

When Infant Secreted.]—A messenger ordered to bring an infant defendant into court to have a guardian assigned. The messenger's return stated that the infant was secreted by her mother. Infant out of Jurisdiction.]—Infant defendant residing abroad, his father, not interested in the suit, was assigned his guardian for putting in his answer without a commission. Jongsma v. Pfiel, 9 Ves. 357. Sed quære, see Tappen v. Norman, 11 Ves. 563.

Guardian ad litem to infant defendants, resident out of the jurisdiction, appointed without a commission. Barrett v. Buck, 8 Jur. 508.

The testamentary guardian of an infant trustee, residing out of the jurisdiction, appointed guardian ad litem, without either the appearance of the infant or a commission. Shuttleworth v. Shuttleworth, 2 Hare, 147.

Where an infant defendant was out of the jurisdiction the court dispensed with the production of the infant, but refused to appoint a person guardian ad litem who was not within the jurisdiction. Anon., 18 Jur. 770.

e. Notice of Application.

After Appearance.]—After an infant defendant had appeared, the plaintiff moved that S., a solicitor, might be appointed the infant's guardian to answer and defend:—Held, that, as the infant had appeared, the court might grant the motion on an affidavit stating that notice of the motion had been served on the solicitor who had entered the appearance. Cookson v. Lee, 15 Sim. 302.

—— To Principal of College.]—Notice of an application to appoint a guardian ad litem to an infant defendant to the principal of the college of which the infant was a resident undergraduate:—Held, sufficient, the plaintiff being unable to discover the residence of the infant's parent. Christie v. Cameron, 25 L. J., Ch. 488; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 635; 4 W. R. 589.

—— Affidavit of Service.]—Guardian ad litem of an infant defendant appointed, on the motion of the plaintiff, without affidavit of service of the writ of summons, where the infant had appeared to the claim. Wood v. Logsden, 9 Hare (App.) xxvi.; 22 L. J., Ch. 257; 1 W. R. 46.

Infant Abroad.]—Upon an application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem to an infant defendant resident abroad, and not substantially interested in the suit, the court dispensed with the notice of the application directed by Cons. Ord. 7, r. 3. Lambert v. Turner, 31 L. J., Ch. 494; 10 W. R. 335. And see O'Brien v. Maitland, 4 De G. F. & J. 331; 6 L. T. 38; 10 W. R. 275.

Infant not Served with Bill.]—Where the appearance has been entered by a solicitor the court will act upon it without service; and, therefore, after appearance entered for an infant a guardian ad litem may be appointed for him although he has not been served with the Lloyd v. Rossmore, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 488.

f. Affidavit.

Of Infancy.]—On an application for the appointment, without a commission, of a guardian ad litem to an infant abroad, an affidavit should be produced of the infancy of the party. Lingren v. Lingren, 7 Beav. 66.

To Show Interest of Guardian.]—On an application for the appointment of guardian of infant the affidavit must show in the proposed guardian some interest, connection, or authority over the person of the infant. Foster v. Cautley, 10 Hare (App.) xxiv.; 22 L. J., Ch. 639; 17 Jur. 370; 1 W. R. 275.

Title of—Special Case.]—An affidavit in support of an order to appoint a guardian to concur, in a special case, under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 5, ought to be intituled, "In the matter of the act," and "In the matter of the infant," and not "In the special case." Star v. Newbery, 20 Beav. 14. S. P., Maddison v. Shein, 6 L. T. 20.

g. Who Appointed.

Officer of Court.]—An infant defendant. Motion on producing an attachment against him for want of answer, that officer of court may be appointed guardian to put in an answer Ordered. Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Moll. 362.

—— Solicitor to Suitors' Fund.]—The plaintiff's solicitor ought not to be appointed guardian ad litem to a defendant. The solicitor to the suitors' fund ought, in general, to be appointed such guardian. Sheppard v. Harris, 15 L. J., Ch. 104; 10 Jur. 24. S. P., Topping v. Howard, 10 Jur. 629.

After the appearance by the infant voluntarily, the court made an order that a solicitor of the court, not towards the cause, should be appointed guardian. Cookson v. Lee, 15 Sim. 302. S. P., Thomas v. Gwyn, 13 L. J., Ch. 79.

To a bill for a partition, filed by the mortgagee of the life estate, an infant defendant, tenant in tail of an undivided share, did not appear; and, on the application of the plaintiff, the solicitor to the suitors' fee fund was appointed the infant's guardian ad litem. Robinson v. Aston, 9 Jur. 224.

The court nominates the solicitor for the infant, and usually appoints the solicitor of the suitors' fund. Thomas v. Thomas, 7 Beav. 47. S. P., Bentley v. Robinson, 9 Hare (App.), lxxvi.

On Coming of Age.]—Where there was an order of court appointing a solicitor for a number of minor plaintiffs, the court, on application of some of those who had come of age, varied the former order, and permitted them to appoint their own solicitors, respectively. Bennett v. Wheeler, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 16.

Not a Mere Stranger.]—Guardian ad litem not being a party to the cause, should not be a mere stranger. Foster v. Cautley, 10 Hare (App.) xxiv.; 22 L. J., Ch. 639; 17 Jur. 370; 1 W. R. 275.

How Selected.]—Selection of a party to be the guardian ad litem of an infant defendant. Anon., 9 Hare (App.) xxvii.

Person with Adverse Interest.]—The court will not permit as next friend or guardian ad litem persons whose interests are adverse to the infant's. But the adverse interest to disqualify must be clear and substantial. Langford v. Little, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 343.

—— Mother.]—Where the mother of infant defendants makes an adverse claim, although she has been appointed guardian ad litem, she must still make a special application, on an affidavit by her, that she has no conflicting interest. Leese v. Knight, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1006; 10 W. R. 711.

Married Woman.]—The court will not appoint a married woman guardian ad litem of an infant; but if her husband join, will appoint them both. Jones v. Geale, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 239.

Testamentary Guardian.]—Testamentary guardian assigned guardian for infant abroad, to answer and defend suit. Howard (Lord) v. Abergavenny (Lord), Dick. 31.

Infant out of Jurisdiction.]—The court refused to appoint an English guardian to an infant residing with his mother in America without associating the mother in the guardianship. Lockwood v. Fenton, 17 Jur. 127.

Guardian ad litem to an infant defendant resident out of the jurisdiction, appointed on motion, upon proof of respectability, and that she had no interest adverse to that of the infant. Smith v. Palmer, 3 Beav. 10.

Where an infant defendant was out of the jurisdiction, the court dispensed with the production of the infant before it, but refused to appoint a person guardian ad litem who was not within the jurisdiction. Anon., 18 Jur. 770.

7. Next Friend.

a. In General.

Office of.]—A prochein ami is not a party to the suit, but simply a person appointed by the court to look after the interests of the infant, and manage the suit for him. Sinclair v. Sinclair, 13 M. & W. 640; 14 L. J., Ex. 109. S. P., Melhuish v. Collier, 19 L. J., Q. B. 493; 14 Jur. 621.

In Formâ pauperis.]—An infant may sue in formâ pauperis by his next friend. Bryant v. Wagner, 3 Jur. 460.

An order for an infant to sue by a next friend in formâ pauperis discharged as irregular. Lindsay v. Tyrrell, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1014.

Death of Infant before Judgment.]—Where an infant, in an action of tort purely personal, sues by his next friend and dies after verdict, and before judgment, the next friend may sign judgment for the amount of the damages and taxed costs. Kramer v. Waymark, 4 H. & C. 427; 35 L. J., Ex. 148; L. R. 1 Ex. 241; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 395; 14 L. T. 368; 14 W. R. 659.

Acting without Authority.]—When a father as next friend commenced an action for crim. con., in his son's name, without his authority, and recovered a verdict:—Held, that no authority from the son was necessary to enable the father to sue as prochein ami, and that the son was bound by the judgment in the action. Morgan v. Thorn, 7 M. & W. 310; 9 D. P. C. 228; 10 L. J., Ex. 125; 5 Jur. 294.

Compromise by.]—The next friend, being appointed only for the conduct of the action, cannot bind the infant by a compromise, unless such compromise is for the benefit of the infant. Rhodes v. Swithenbank, 58 L. J., Q. B. 287; 22 Q. B. D. 577; 60 L. T. 856; 37 W. R. 457.

The court has no power to compromise a claim in which infants are interested against the wish of the next friend or guardian ad litem of the infants, acting under the advice of counsel. Birchall, In re, Wilson v. Birchall, 16 Ch. D. 41; 29 W. R. 27.

Receiver.]—Prochein ami of infant plaintiffs not permitted to act as receiver. Stone v. Wishart, 2 Madd. 64.

Liability of.]—Quære, whether the next friend of an infant, who omits to call for the payment of the trust moneys into court, may not be made answerable for any loss of interest which the infant may sustain thereby. Gresley v. Heathcote, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 107.

Deposition of.]—The deposition of the prochein ami of the plaintiff cannot be read for the plaintiff, he being liable to costs. Head v. Head, 3 Atk. 511.

The depositions of a wife of a prochein ami cannot be read, as the husband is liable to costs. Id. 547.

Evidence of, as against Infant.]—Where a minor sues by his guardian, a declaration made by the guardian is not evidence against him. Cowling v. Ely, 2 Stark. 366; 20 R. R. 699.

Co-plaintiff, as next friend, struck out, his evidence being necessary; but, as a general rule, giving security for the costs incurred. Witts v. Campbell, 12 Ves. 493.

Affidavit of Documents.]—The court refused to order the next friend to make an affidavit as to documents. Dyke v. Stephens, 55 L. J., Ch. 41; 30 Ch. D. 189; 53 L. T. 561; 33 W. R. 932.

Where plaintiffs were suing by their next friend, the court ordered the production of documents under the Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 44), on the oath of the next friend. Crowe v. Bank of Ireland, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 578; 19 W. R. 910.

Form of order in such a case. Ib.

Production of Documents.]—The next friend of an infant plaintiff is not a party to the action and no order can be made against him for production of documents under Ord. XXXI. r. 12. Corsellis, In re, Lawton v. Elves, 52 L. J., Ch. 399; 48 L. T. 425; 31 W. R. 414.

Service on.]—Notice of motion for an order appointing a new next friend, served on the next friend and defendant:—Held, regular. Furtado v. Furtado, 6 Jur. 227.

Every application on behalf of an infant must be made by a next friend. Furtado v. Furtado (supra) explained. Cox v. Wright, 2 N. R. 436.

Irregularity in Bill.]—Where a bill was filed on behalf of infants, and did not contain the address of the next friend :—Held, an irregularity, and the next friend was ordered to pay the costs, and give an undertaking to amend. Major v. Arnott, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 80 ; 4 W. R. 229.

When Cannot be Found.]—Where the prochein ami cannot be found at the address at which he is described, the proper course is to take out a summons for a stay of proceedings until his address is given by the plaintiff's attorney. Hayes v. Carr, 1 D. (N.S.) 522 ; 4 Scott (N.R.) 560 ; 11 L. J., C. P. 111.

Who may be Solicitor for.]—The solicitor of a next friend must not have interests adverse to the minor's, nor be professionally bound to support adverse interests. Subject to that restriction, a next friend may employ what solicitor he pleases. Langford v. Little, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 34.

Changing Solicitor.]—The attorney acting for an infant plaintiff suing by his next friend is the attorney of the next friend, and a rule to change him cannot be entered without the authority of the next friend. Almack v. Moore, 2 L. R. Ir. 90.

When the next friend of an infant dies, his nearest paternal relations are entitled to nominate the new next friend ; and he may obtain orders of course changing the solicitors and appointing himself next friend. Talbot v. Talbot, 43 L. J., Ch. 352 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 347 ; 22 W. R. 619.

In a suit by adults and infants, the next friend was charged by an order of the court. The adult plaintiffs obtained an order of course for changing the solicitor, on a petition representing the original next friend as next friend, and stating incorrectly that the order changing the next friend had not been drawn up :—Held, that the order so obtained was irregular. Piddock v. Boultbee, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 223 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 786.

A motion by the next friend of infants describing himself as such in the notice of motion, is irregular. The motion should be by the infants by their next friend. Ib.

Motives for Instituting Suit.]—A bill filed on behalf of an infant ordered to be taken off the file with costs to be paid by the next friend, he being a person of low circumstances, and of immoral character, and there being reason to suppose that he had instituted the suit from spite. Walker v. Else, 7 Sim. 234 ; 4 L. J., Ch. 54. And see infra, col. 1482.

Inquiry whether Suit is Beneficial.]—An administration suit having been instituted on behalf of infants by a next friend, the son of the solicitor for the plaintiffs, who was a stranger to, and had not before filing the bill communicated with the testator's family, the court directed inquiries whether the suit was for the benefit of the infants, and whether the next friend was a proper person to conduct it ; staying all proceedings in the meantime. Towsey v. Groves, 1 N. R. 226 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 225 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 194 ; 7 L. T. 778 ; 11 W. R. 252.

Where a bill has been filed on behalf of infants, under circumstances raising a strong suspicion against the motives of the next friend, the court will direct an inquiry whether the suit is for the benefit of the infants, and if so, whether such next friend is a proper person to conduct it. Nalder v. Hawkins, 2 Myl. & K. 243 ; Coop. t. Brough. 175.

—— Two Suits.]—Where two suits for the same purpose are instituted on behalf of an infant by different persons acting as his next friend, that one is to be preferred which appears most for his benefit on taking into account all the circumstances likely to influence the course of the proceedings. The priority of one of the suits to the other, or the fact that in the one the next friend is a relative, and in the other not, is to be disregarded, if it appear that the latter, or that in which the next friend is not a relative, is most likely to be prosecuted zealously for the benefit of the infant, and the court would restrain the further prosecution of a suit not for his benefit. Morrisson v. Bell, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 354.

Where two bills are filed by different next friends, the court will grant a motion to restrain proceedings in the cause in which a decree has been obtained. Nanney v. Wymer, 2 Jur. 962.

Upon the question as to which of two administration suits, relating to the same estate, should proceed, the court will prefer the mother as next friend, although in humble life, supposing she is respectable, although a decree has been made in the other suit. Harris v. Lightfoot, Harris v. Harris, 10 W. R. 31.

b. Death.

After Decree.]—Prochein ami plaintiff dying after decree, reference to master to appoint another directed on motion of defendant. Bracey v. Sandiford, 3 Madd. 468.

Right of Defendant.]—On death of prochein ami, and plaintiff refusing to name new prochein ami, defendant, after ten days' notice, to be at liberty to name one. Lancaster v. Thornton, Dick. 346 ; Amb. 398.

Where the next friend of an infant plaintiff dies, the proper order for the defendant to obtain is that the master may approve of a new next friend ; and four days' notice of the order must be given to the plaintiff's solicitor. Glover v. Webber, 12 Sim. 351.

Where a prochein ami dies, the court will order the bill to be dismissed within a given time unless a new prochein ami be named. Anon., 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 60.

Right of Solicitor.]—In an infant's suit, the next friend dying, the solicitor whom he had employed commonly obtains an order appointing a new next friend, and the order, in the absence of any peculiarity, is of course. Westby v. Westby, 2 C. P. Cooper, 211.

Where the mother of the infant employed a solicitor to prosecute a suit on his behalf, and the prochein ami dying, and the mother having discharged the solicitor, he named a new prochein ami without her sanction, the court ordered that on payment by the mother of the costs of the new-named prochein ami, he should be removed, and another appointed, the costs to be paid by solicitor. Lander v. Ingersoll, 4 Hare, 596.

By Whom Nominated.]—When the next friend of an infant plaintiff dies, his nearest paternal relations are entitled to nominate the new next friend ; and their nominee may obtain orders of course in the suit changing the solicitors on the record, and appointing himself next friend. Talbot v. Talbot, 43 L. J., Ch., 352; L. R. 17 Eq. 347 : 22 W. R. 619.

In such a case the order appointing the new next friend need not be supported by any affidavit as to his fitness. Ib.

Ex parte Motion.]—When the next friend of an infant plaintiff dies pending the action, a new next friend may be appointed on an ex parte motion in court. Daly v. Daly, 9 L. R., Ir. 383.

c. Appointment.

Father.]—The father, as being the natural guardian of the infant, ought, in the first instance, to be appointed prochein ami. Watson v. Fraser, 8 M. & W. 660; 9 D. P. C. 741; 10 L. J., Ex. 420; 5 Jur. 682.

An infant was admitted to sue by her father and next friend, on a petition signed for her by the father. Eades v. Booth, 8 Q. B. 718; 3 D. & L. 770; 15 L. J., Q. B. 263; 10 Jur. 311.

When an administration action had been commenced on behalf of infants the father was appointed next friend, in substitution for a stranger who had constituted himself next friend and commenced the action. Woolf v. Pemberton, 6 Ch. D. 19; 37 L. T. 328; 25 W. R. 873—C. A.

—— Though Insolvent.]—The court will allow a father, though an insolvent debtor, to prosecute an action as prochein ami, for his infant son, if it is clearly shown that no fitter person can be obtained. Duckett v. Satchwell, 1 D. & L. 980; 12 M. & W. 779; 13 L. J., Ex. 224; 8 Jur. 408.

—— Absconding.]—Where a suit was instituted by the father as next friend, who afterwards absconded, the court refused to appoint a next friend, but ordered that a person to be named by the wife should prosecute the suit. Greenaway v. Rotherham, 9 Sim. 88; 7 L. J., Ch. 98; 2 Jur. 45.

Married Woman.]—Sect. 1, sub-s. 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not abolish the rule that a married woman is incapable of filling the office of next friend, or guardian ad litem. Somerset (Duke), In re, Thynne v. St. Maur, 56 L. J., Ch. 733; 34 Ch. D. 465; 56 L. T. 145; 35 W. R. 273.

Some of the plaintiffs in a suit were infants, their sister, also a plaintiff, being their next friend. On her marriage the court directed a new next friend to be appointed, and the former next friend and her husband to be made defendants. Jones v. Jones, 17 W. R. 1003.

Administration—Executor.]—In administration under a decree made in a suit where an infant was plaintiff, it became necessary to take hostile proceedings in order to get in the assets:—Held, that in the absence of misconduct on the part of the executor, he was the proper person to have the conduct of the intended suit. Harrison v. Richards, 35 L. J., Ch. 677.

Solicitor's Clerk.]—The clerk of the solicitor to the defendant in the first suit was made the next friend of the infant in the second suit:—Held, that he was not necessarily an improper next friend. Ashley v. Allden, 16 Jur. 460.

Condition of.]—Circumstances of proposed prochein ami not to be inquired into, though suggested that he was indigent. Davenport v. Davenport, 1 Sim. & S. 101.

Any person may, as prochein ami, exhibit a bill in the name of an infant, without his leave. Andrews v. Cradock, Pre. Ch. 376; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 36.

A prochein ami need not be a relation, but he must be a person of substance, because liable to costs. Anon., 1 Atk. 570.

When a Stranger.]—Difficulties in dealing with suits filed by strangers on behalf of infants. On the one hand, you may encourage useless and expensive litigation; on the other, you may discourage interference very often necessary for their protection. Cross v. Cross, 8 Beav. 455.

What is an Adverse Interest.]—The court will not permit as next friend or guardian ad litem of an infant persons whose interests are adverse to the infant's. But the adverse interest to disqualify must be clear and substantial. Langford v. Little, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 343.

—— Defendant.]—A defendant may not be a next friend. Anon., 11 Jur. 258.

d. Removal.

On what Grounds.]—The court will not, upon petition of an infant party, direct an inquiry whether the cause has been properly conducted; but if the next friend or guardian does not do his duty he will be removed. Russell v. Sharpe, 1 J. & W. 482.

Where an administration suit was instituted on behalf of some infants, a nominee of their father being next friend, and the suit being conducted by the father, the court refused to dismiss the next friend, upon allegations of improper motives. Gravatt v. Tann, 15 W. R. 83.

The court will change a next friend upon his not proceeding with a cause; solicitor is not to attach without orders from his client; but where the client is next friend of an infant, and moves to discharge the attachment on that ground, the court will refer it to the master, to see whether it is for the interest of the infant that the next friend should be continued. Ward v. Ward, 3 Mer. 706.

For Misconduct.]—If the friend or guardian ad litem is acting improperly, the proper course is to remove him and appoint a new next friend. Birchall, In re, Wilson v. Birchall, 18 Ch. D. 41; 29 W. R. 27.

—— Refusal to Appeal.]—The next friend of infant plaintiffs has no power to deprive them of their right to appeal; and his refusal to appeal, though admittedly bonâ fide, is misconduct sufficient to justify his removal. Dupuy v. Welsford, 42 L. T. 730; 28 W. R. 762.

By the Court.]—On an application by the next friend the court refused the application, and ordered that the official solicitor should be named as the next friend in all future proceedings, and that the next friend should deliver up all documents to him. On appeal, this order was discharged, on the ground that such a course ought not to be taken without giving the next friend an opportunity of explaining his conduct.

Corsellis, In re, Lawton v. Elwes, 50 L. T. 703; 32 W. R. 965—C. A.

Insolvency.]—Where an uncertificated bankrupt was appointed prochein ami the court removed him, and ordered another to be appointed. Watson v. Fraser, 8 M. & W. 660; 9 D. P. C. 741; 10 L. J., Ex. 420; 5 Jur. 682.

Where an infant being plaintiff his nearest relative, who was insolvent, had been appointed prochein ami, the court removed him, it not appearing that no solvent person could be found to act. Lees v. Smith, 5 H. & N. 632; 29 L. J., Ex. 294; 2 L. T. 252; 8 W. R. 464.

For Adverse Interest.]—The court will remove a next friend if it appear that he has an interest in the suit adverse to the infant. Gee v. Gee, 9 L. T. 557; 12 W. R. 187.

The court will remove a next friend, and appoint a new one, where the former is so connected with a defendant having an interest adverse to that of the infants, as to make it probable that their interest will not be properly protected by him. Peyton v. Bond, 1 Sim. 390.

The court will not remove a next friend merely because he is nearly related to or connected with the defendant; but it must see that there is a probability that the infant's interest will be prejudiced, if the next friend is allowed to remain. Bedwin v. Asprey, 11 Sim. 530; 5 Jur. 362.

The name of a defendant, who was also the next friend of the plaintiff, and whose wife was a defendant, was struck out, and liberty was given to the wife to defend separately. Lewis v. Nobbs, 47 L. J., Ch. 662; 8 Ch. D. 591; 26 W. R. 631.

A suit was instituted to carry out articles for a settlement, the father being unable to perform his covenant. The bill being by the infant children by their next friend, a near relative of the defendant, a motion was made to remove him, and substitute the brother-in-law of the wife, on the ground of the present next friend's near connection with the defendant, that he was a stranger to the family, and that the defendant being one of the trustees of the articles, had, in fact, filed the bill, and had omitted to enforce the articles. Motion refused with costs. Pifford v. Beeby, 14 W. R. 948.

Doubts having arisen as to the proper custody of an infant, a suit was commenced in her name for the administration of her father's estate. A next friend was appointed, who was a friend of the defendants, the executors and trustees of the will, and accepted the office at their request:—Held, that his connection with the executors made him an improper person to act as next friend, and that he ought to be removed. Burgess, In re, Burgess v. Bottomley, 25 Ch. D. 243; 50 L. T. 168; 32 W. R. 511—C. A.

—— Liability to Account.]—A person being an accounting party in the suit, removed from acting as the next friend of infant plaintiffs. Hopkinson v. Roe, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 7.

The court will not remove a next friend merely on the ground that he is nearly related to the accounting party. Sandford v. Sandford, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 298; 8 L. T. 194; 11 W. R. 336.

Mere relationship to an accounting party is not a sufficient ground for removing a next friend. S—— v. S——, 1 N. R. 384.

Two Actions.]—A suit was instituted on behalf of an infant, and an administration decree pronounced in it. Before the decree was drawn up, another suit was also begun for the same purpose as the former. The next friend of the infant in the first suit was the clerk to the solicitors who acted for all parties; but no objection was made to him. On a motion in the second suit to change the next friend in the first, or for inquiries whether he was a fit and proper person to conduct it:—Held, that the motion must be refused, with costs. Lloyd v. Davies, Lloyd v. Banks, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1041; 10 L. T. 183; 3 N. R. 700.

Stranger Appointed by Father.]—A father authorised B. to act as next friend for his children, and by will appointed their mother the guardian:—Held, that the mother could remove the next friend and be substituted in his place. Hutchinson v. Norwood, 55 L. J., Ch. 375; 31 Ch. D. 237; 54 L. T. 15; 34 W. R. 214.

Where Person does not Consent to Act.]—The name of a person who had been made the next friend of an infant plaintiff, without his authority, was ordered to be struck out, but liberty was given for the co-plaintiff to amend by naming a new next friend. Ward v. Ward, 6 Beav. 251; 12 L. J., Ch. 332.

As to the liability of the next friend in such a case as regards the defendant. Ib.

Reference to Master.]—Prochein ami cannot remove himself from that situation without reference to master. Snelling v. Snelling, 4 Madd. 261.

—— Affidavit.]—On motion to substitute a new next friend of an infant plaintiff, the court must be satisfied, by affidavit, of the circumstances and respectability of the party proposed to be substituted, though all the other parties to the cause consent to the substitution. Harrison v. Harrison, 5 Beav. 130. And see Anon., 1 Ves. J. 409.

e. Costs, Charges, and Expenses.

Costs in General.]—A prochein ami need not be a relation, but must be a person of substance, because liable to costs. Anon., 1 Atk. 570.

—— Death of Infant.]—Had the infant proceeded in the cause, he would have been liable to the whole costs. Vide Mitf. Pl. 21, 124. In Morgan v. Compton (2 Fowl. Exch. Pr. 376), an infant dying before costs, ordered on a dismissal, were taxed, a motion that the next friend might pay them was denied. Ib.

Bill by an infant dismissed for want of prosecution, but, before the costs were taxed, the infant died; by the death of the prochein ami, the costs would have been lost, and so they are by the death of the infant. S. C., Bunb. 332.

Appointment of Another.]—The next friend of an infant cannot move that another may be substituted for him; for the court will not then allow him, by withdrawing, to escape costs to which he may be liable. Melling v. Melling, 4 Madd. 261.

On Petition.]—The petition of an infant is the petition of his next friend, and the next friend ordered to pay costs. Jones v. Lewis, 1 De G. & Sm. 245. S. P., Wheelers, In re, 2 Moll. 251.

Petition by prochein ami that the infant, being now come of age, might repay him the costs expended in the suit: ordered to show cause. Brown v. Jones, 2 Fowl. Exch. Pr. 375.

Where Suit beneficial to Infant.]—The next friend allowed costs, though the bill had been dismissed, the master having reported the suit for the infant's benefit. Tuner or Tanner v. Ivie, 2 Ves. sen. 466; Dick. 168.

Two suits were instituted by different persons as next friends. The master, on reference, reported that the second ought to be alone prosecuted. After decree in the second, the next friend in the first suit applied for his costs:—Held, that the determination of the master did not imply that the first suit was improper, and that the party was therefore entitled to his costs. Crowther v. Flood, 5 L. J., Ch. 352.

The next friend ordered to pay the costs, the chief clerk having found that the action for administration was not for the benefit of the infants. Thomas v. Elsum, 46 L. J., Ch. 793.

Where in an administration suit the decree, after the usual accounts and inquiries, added an inquiry "what benefit had accrued to the plaintiff from the institution of the suit," such inquiry was struck out. Clayton v. Clarke, 3 De G. F. & J. 682; 30 L. J., Ch. 657; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 562; 4 L. T. 489; 9 W. R. 718.

A next friend was refused his costs of the last-mentioned inquiry, and of the suit, until the decree; but he was allowed his costs of the suit after the decree; and no costs were allowed on the appeal. Ib.

Motion for Receiver.]—Motion on infant's behalf to restrain defendant's executor receiving more of personal estate, and rents and profits of real estate, and for receiver; prochein ami ordered to pay costs of motion refused. Buckley v. Buckeridge, Amb. 395.

Ne Exeat Regno.]—Writ of ne exeat regno, when the answer came in, was discharged, with costs against the prochein ami; but upon the admissions in the answer, the defendant was ordered to give security to abide the decree. Roddam v. Hetherington, 5 Ves. 91.

Leaseholds — Infant attaining Majority.]—Three minors, by their next friend, filed a bill for a renewal of a lease. Pending the cause, the eldest plaintiff attained twenty-one, and entered a rule to proceed in his own name, and the second attained twenty-one. Afterwards there was a final decree that the defendant should execute the renewal, but that the plaintiffs should pay his costs. For those costs the next friend was arrested for non-payment; and a receiver was appointed, over the lands comprised in the lease:—Held, that although the plaintiffs, who had attained the age of twenty-one, and adopted the proceedings, were severally liable for the whole costs, the next friend was also liable; that the separate proceeding against him was quite regular. Purcell v. Woodley, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 376.

Administration Action.]—A widow entered into possession of the real and personal property of her husband, and by carrying on his trade, maintained herself and his infant children. Shortly after the husband's death a bill was filed by the maternal grandfather, as next friend, for accounts, and the appointment of guardians and of a receiver. The master by his report approved of the widow and her co-executor as the guardians, and found that the whole income ought to be allowed for their maintenance. The court on petition confirmed this report, and the costs of all the proceedings were ordered to be paid by the next friend. Anderton v. Yates, 5 De G. & Sm. 202.

Master in Chancery.]—Lord Manners held, that a master in chancery, if prochein ami, is liable personally for costs when decreed to defendant. Frizell v. Hodgens, 2 Moll. 456.

Improper Conduct.]—Nothing short of a dishonest intention will be sufficient to fix a prochein ami personally with costs; no degree of mistake nor misapprehension will be sufficient. Whittaker v. Marlar, 1 Cox, 285.

Infant, on coming of age, may dismiss bill filed for him, but cannot make prochein ami pay costs, unless he prove suit improperly instituted. Anon., 4 Madd. 461.

Where a suit appeared to have been improperly instituted in the names of two infants, one on attaining full age allowed to have her name struck out, with costs to be paid by the next friend; and afterwards, the other infant applying, the suit dismissed with costs in like manner. Guy v. Guy, 2 Beav. 460; 9 L. J., Ch. 289; 4 Jur. 313.

Bill dismissed with costs, upon facts which, though not known when the bill was filed, might have been with reasonable diligence. The next friend not allowed the costs out of the infant's estate. Pearce v. Pearce, 9 Ves. 548.

In a clear case the court, being of opinion that a suit had been commenced by the next friend to promote his own views, and not for the benefit of the infants, summarily dismissed it, with costs to be paid by the next friend. Sale v. Sale, 1 Beav. 586.

The master reported that a suit, instituted on behalf of infants, was improperly instituted, and ought not to be prosecuted; it was dismissed, with costs to be paid by the next friend. Fox v. Swerkrop, 1 Beav. 583.

A bill ordered to be taken off the file with costs, to be paid by the next friend, he being a person of low circumstances, and of immoral character, and suspected of having instituted the suit from spite. Walker v. Else, 7 Sim. 234; 4 L. J., Ch. 54.

—— Two Suits.]—Two suits were instituted but it was found that it was most for the infant's benefit to prosecute the second. There being some impropriety of conduct on the part of the solicitor, who instituted the first suit and nominated his brother as next friend, the first bill was dismissed without costs. Startin v. Bartholomew, 6 Beav. 143; 12 L. J., Ch. 179.

—— No Inquiries Made.]—A next friend having filed a bill for administration without being a friend of the family, and without making sufficient inquiries:—Held, that she must pay her own costs, although the suit resulted in the appointment of a new trustee. Edgley v. Adams, 31 L. T. 15.

Final Order.]—When at the hearing costs are ordered to be paid by a next friend, without any reservation of the question how they are ultimately to be borne, the order is final against him personally, and cannot be re-opened on further consideration. Caley v. Caley, 25 W. R. 528.

Solicitor's Clerk.]—Where an administration action was commenced by the managing clerk of infant's solicitor and the result of the accounts was to show that the suit was not for their benefit:—Held, that the next friend was entitled to his costs. Gravatt v. Tann, 38 L. J., Ch. 459; L. R. 7 Eq. 436.

Employment of Solicitor.]—An infant suing by his next friend is entitled to the costs of an attorney employed to conduct such action, although the only notice to the defendant of an attorney being employed was the address of the next friend being at the office of such attorney, as stated on the back of the declaration:—"E. B., next friend, at C.'s, 8, Symond's-inn, Chancery-lane." Bryant v. Wilson, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 722; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 362; 6 W. R. 292.

Charge on Infant's Interest for.]—Where an action had been brought by an infant tenant in tail, by his next friend, for the benefit of the entailed estate, which was approved by the court, the court sanctioned a charge upon the infant's interest in the property for raising a sum to pay the costs of the action. Jones, In re, 48 L. T. 188; 31 W. R. 399.

What Allowed.]—Semble, if the prochein ami is to a certainty to have all that exceeds the taxed costs, that leads him to be very careless; the inquiry could be only what was properly expended. Osborne v. Denne, 7 Ves. 424.

Next friend is entitled to fair expenses beyond taxed costs, under the head of just allowances. Fearns v. Young, 10 Ves. 184.

An application being made for costs as between attorney and client, the court said that the question is, whether charges, not coming strictly under the head of costs, cannot be given under just allowances; for, as the infant himself cannot incur charges and expenses, if the next friend is to be at the whole expense beyond the costs, persons will deliberate before they accept that office. Ib.

The next friend of infants conducting a suit on their behalf to a successful issue is entitled to his costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred before suit with reference to the institution thereof. Palmer v. Jones, 22 W. R. 909.

The costs of the next friend, to the time the infant attained twenty-one, allowed as between solicitor and client, but no costs allowed of proceedings subsequently taken, without the authority of the plaintiff. Brown v. Weatherhead, 4 Hare, 122; 9 Jur. 787.

Reversion.]—When the costs of infants suing by their next friend are directed to be paid out of a fund in court to which the infants are entitled in reversion, party and party costs only will be immediately paid; the next friend having liberty to apply for the difference between those costs and costs as between solicitor and client when the fund comes into possession. Damant v. Hennell, 33 Ch. D. 224; 55 L. T. 182; 34 W. R. 774.

f. Security for Costs.

General Rule.]—The old rule in chancery as to a next friend giving security for costs, and the old rule at common law, are abrogated by the Judicature Rules; and under Rule 8 of Order XVI., the court has a judicial discretion to direct security for costs to be given at any time. Martano v. Mann, 49 L. J., Ch. 510; 14 Ch. D. 419.

Next friend of infant cannot be compelled to give security for costs. St. John v. Besborough (Earl), 1 Hog. 41.

When Required—Infant Pauper.]—An infant lessor in ejectment is a pauper, the court will require him to find some person to be security for the defendant's costs. Doe d. Roberts v. Roberts, 6 D. P. C. 556. S. P., Anon., 1 Wils. 130.

—— Undertaken by Guardian.]—The court refused to compel an infant to give security for costs, upon its being shewn that the guardian had undertaken for them. Anon., Cowp. 128. S. P., Yarworth v. Mitchell, 2 D. & R. 423; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 112; 25 R. R. 555.

When an infant sues, the court will oblige the prochein ami, or guardian, or attorney, to give security for the costs. Doe d. Selby v. Alston, 1 Term Rep. 493.

Poverty.]—The court will not compel the next friend of an infant, on the ground of poverty, to give security for costs. Fellows v. Barrett, 1 Keen, 119.

A feme covert and infants, as co-plaintiffs, by the same next friend, filed a bill:—Held, that though poverty is not a sufficient objection to the next friend, yet that the feme covert and the infants having the same next friend, the proceedings must either be stayed as to all the parties, or not at all. Drinan v. Mannix, 2 Con. & L. 87; 3 Dr. & War. 154; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 190.

The form of the order, in such a case, is, that the proceedings be stayed until the next friend of the feme covert be changed, or security for costs be given. Ib.

The court refused a motion that a next friend might give security for costs, or a new one be appointed, on the ground that the one in this case was a privileged person, except on affidavit that the next friend is in mean and doubtful circumstances. Anon., Moseley, 86.

Motion after answer, that a prochein ami might give security for costs, or another be named, on the ground that he was in indigent circumstances, refused. Squirrel v. Squirrel, 2 P. Wms. 297, n.; Dick. 765.

Insolvency.]—Prochein ami becoming insolvent, and receiving groats after answer filed; motion, that he might be removed and another appointed, refused, but leave given to apply to stay proceedings until he be changed, or security given for costs. Pennington v. Alvin, 1 Sim. & S. 264; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 202.

The next friend was insolvent, and had been indemnified from the costs of the suit, and a motion that the proceedings might be stayed until the next friend was changed, or had given security for costs, was refused. Murrell v. Clapham, 8 Sim. 74.

Where an infant sues by guardian who is sworn to be in insolvent circumstances, the court will require him to give security for costs. Mann v. Berthen, 4 M. & P. 215.

Misdescription.]—Where the next friend described himself as a "clerk," and it appeared that he was a letter carrier in the General Post-office. A motion to compel the next friend to give security for costs on the ground of misdescription, refused with costs. Watts v. Kelly, 6 W. R. 206.

Change of Address.]—Proceedings stayed till security given for costs by next friend, he having changed residence ex necessitate. Greening v. Bell, 2 Jur. 794.

Next Friend Absconding.]—On affidavit that one named next friend had absconded, and was not worth anything, it was ordered that he should give security for costs, all proceedings stayed in the meantime. Wale v. Salter, Moseley, 47.

Substitution of Another.]—Motion by a plaintiff, that the name of a co-plaintiff, as a next friend, might be struck out, and a new next friend substituted, on the ground that the evidence of the next friend was necessary, granted, on the terms that the next friend should give security for the costs incurred in his time. Witts v. Campbell, 12 Ves. 493.

Prochein ami withdrawing himself, ordered, on substitution of new one, to give security for costs already incurred. Davenport v. Davenport, 1 Sim. & S. 101.

Ne exeat regno.]—Writ of ne exeat regno was discharged with costs against the prochein ami, but upon the admissions in the answer the defendant was ordered to give security to abide the decree. Roddam v. Hetherington, 5 Ves. 91.

8. Costs.

Answer.]—Where a bill was filed to recover the amount of a judgment debt out of the real and personal estate of the conusor:—Held, that the defendant, who was a minor, and the heiress-at-law of the conusor, was not entitled, as against the plaintiff, to the costs of putting in an answer. Downes v. Hogan, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 112.

Misjoinder of Parties.]—Extra costs occasioned by an infant being made a defendant, who ought to have been made a plaintiff, not allowed. Hosking v. Nicholls, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 478; 11 L. J., Ch. 230; 6 Jur. 386.

Want of Diligence.]—Bill by infant dismissed with costs upon facts, which, though not known when the bill was filed, might have been with reasonable diligence; the next friend not allowed the costs out of the infant's estate. Pearce v. Pearce, 9 Ves. 548.

Contempt—Messenger.]—Infant cannot be detained in custody after guardian assigned him. Perkins v. Hamond, Dick. 287.

Infant defendant pays no costs of contempt. Ib.

Plaintiff always pays messenger against infant. Ib.

After Majority.]—An infant by prochein ami brings a bill, and never stirs in it after he comes of age, and the bill is dismissed. The infant and prochein ami are both liable to pay costs. Turner v. Turner, 2 P. Wms. 297; Select Ca. Ch. 49; 2 Str. 708.

Out of what Fund.]—Where infants are absolutely entitled to a trust-fund, and the court has directed the whole income to be applied for their maintenance, the court will order the costs to be raised out of the corpus. Burnand, Ex parte, 8 Jur. 558.

Infants entitled to share in a residue, having filed a bill for an account, the accounts proving correct, the costs ordered to be paid out of the plaintiff's share alone. Mackenzie v. Taylor, 7 Beav. 467.

Costs of unsuccessful defence of an infant charged not upon general fund but upon his own share. Orford (Earl) v. Churchill, 3 V. & B. 59.

—— Legacy.]—If an infant sues for a legacy, costs must be paid out of the assets, and not out of the legacy. Anon., Moseley, 5.

—— Tenant for Life.]—Decree against an infant that the costs should be paid out of the trust-money, reversed, because the money was to be laid out in land, whereof the infant was only tenant for life. Peller v. Husband, 6 Vin. Abr. 365, pl. 10.

Special Counsel.]—The court will authorise the retainer of special counsel, if the master shall think it necessary to defend an ejectment on the title to an infant's estate. Browne v. Richards, 1 Hog. 346.

Issue.]—A bill was filed on behalf of an infant, with the sanction of the master, to set aside deeds executed by a lunatic. An issue having been directed, the jury found in favour of the deeds. The bill was dismissed with costs of suit and of the issue. Frank v. Mainwaring, 4 Beav. 37.

Solicitor—Undertaking to Pay.]—A continued employment of attorney by infant client, after coming of age, may amount to an undertaking to pay a prior bill of costs. Guy v. Burgess, 1 Smith, 117.

Where a petition on behalf of an infant is presented by a solicitor who is a stranger to the infant, even although the master should find that the petition is a proper one and for the benefit of the infant, the court will not award out of the infant's estate to the petitioner any costs, except costs out of pocket. Goode, In re, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 256.

And where such a petition was presented by a solicitor, and the master found that the petition was a proper one, and for the benefit of the infant, as the petitioner had not previously ascertained that none of the relatives of the infants would present such a petition, the court refused to grant out of the minor's estate even costs out of pocket to petitioner. Ib.

By the decree in a suit on behalf of infants, the money recovered was brought into court, for the benefit of the infants, defendant to pay the costs. He having absconded, a motion by the solicitor for the plaintiff, in which he was joined by prochein ami, was granted, that the solicitor might be paid his costs out of the money in court. Staines v. Maddox, Moseley, 319.

—— Lien—Repudiation by Infant.]—Where an infant plaintiff, on coming of age, repudiated the suit:—Held, that a defendant who had brought deeds into court was entitled to have them returned, and that the solicitor of the next friend of the infant had no lien on them for his costs. Dunn v. Dunn, 7 De G. M. & G. 25; 3 W. R. 199.

And see cases, supra, col. 1480.

H. GUARDIAN.

1. APPOINTMENT.

a. In General.

General Rule.]—A guardian may be appointed, though no cause is depending. Birchell, Ex parte, 3 Atk. 813.

—— Testamentary Guardian.] — The court interferes where there is a testamentary guardian who has all the remedies a father has. But there must be a suit instituted relative to the infant's estate to give the court jurisdiction. Butler v. Freeman, Amb. 303.

Upon Petition.]—Order for the appointment of a person to act as guardian (the father being living), and for a reference as to maintenance, but not for a receiver, upon a petition, without any suit instituted. Mountfort, Ex parte, 15 Ves. 445.

By Spiritual Court.]—The spiritual court may appoint a guardian to an infant until fourteen, if he has only personal estate, but not if he has realty. Carlisle (Bishop) v. Wells, 2 Lev. 162. S. P., Loury v. Reymes, 2 Lev. 217.

Discretion of Court.]—A father has no absolute right to have a guardian appointed of his infant child, but the court has a discretion whether it will make such an appointment. Lyons, In re, 22 L. T. 770; 18 W. R. 238.

Religion of Children—Indication of Father's Intention.] — W., a Roman Catholic, shortly before his marriage wrote to Miss D.'s mother, stating that as to guardianship, on no consideration would he "permit anyone to step between [his intended wife] and her children," but "would by will leave her sole and undivided authority." A child, C., was born, and with W.'s sanction, baptised as a Roman Catholic. W. having died intestate in 1879:—Held, that upon the facts his children should be committed to the guardianship of their mother. Walsh, In re, 13 L. R. Ir. 269—L. C. See also Scanlan, In re, infra, col. 1510.

Infant entitled to Property.] — Where an infant is entitled to property independent of the father, it seems a jurisdiction arises to the lord chancellor to appoint a guardian of the person. Stewart, In re, Wall. Lyn. 115.

Ill-treatment by Father.] — Order for a guardian and maintenance for infants upon ill-treatment by their father. Whitfield v. Hales, 12 Ves. 492.

Wards of Court.]—The court has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for infant wards of court, excluding the father. Wellesley v. Wellesley, 2 Bligh (N.S.) 124; 1 Dow (N.S.) 152.

Evidence that the father was living in a state of adultery, and had encouraged his children in swearing, &c., was considered a fit case to exercise such power. Ib.

To Consent to Marriage.]—Guardian appointed to consent to marriage of infant without property. Woolscombe, In re, 1 Madd. 213. See 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, ss. 16, 17 (ante, col. 1387), and 2 P. Wms. 120, note (z).

By Infant.]—Infant at seventeen appointing guardian by deed does not preclude jurisdiction of chancellor to grant one. Curtis v. Rippon, 4 Madd. 462.

Guardian out of the Jurisdiction.]—Where the mother of infants, whose father died intestate, was permanently resident in England, the court, with her consent, made an order, under the 49 & 50 Vict. c. 27, s. 6, substituting a paternal uncle as guardian. Form of procedure in such cases. Lemons, In re, 19 L. R., Ir. 575—L. C.

Two infants having been sent to England for education by their father, resident in India, the court appointed a guardian during the father's absence abroad, notwithstanding that their mother was residing in this country. Thomas, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 1075.

Palatinate Court—Jurisdiction.]—On a petition in the palatinate court of Lancaster the mother and another person were appointed guardians, and an allowance for maintenance was fixed, and was afterwards varied by the court. The mother, as next friend, obtained in the high court a judgment for administration of the testator's estate, and then took out a summons in the action for the appointment of guardians and an allowance for maintenance. On summons before the vice-chancellor of the palatinate court the mother gave an undertaking not to proceed with the summons in the high court. She afterwards appealed to the high court:—Held, that, although the high court had jurisdiction to appoint guardians, notwithstanding the previous orders made by the palatine court, such jurisdiction ought not to be exercised unless some special ground was shown, and that the proceedings in the palatine court ought not to be stayed. Alison, In re, Johnson, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 755; 8 Ch. D. 1; 38 L. T. 304; 26 W. R. 450—C. A.

Held, also, that as the vice-chancellor of the county palatine had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain proceedings in the high court, he ought not to have taken an undertaking to discontinue them, and the undertaking was accordingly discharged. Ib.

Guardian appointed by Foreign Court.]—The order of a foreign court appointing a guardian of an infant, the child of a British subject, will be recognised in the court with the respect due by the comity of nations to the order of a foreign court, but it does not confer on the appointee the character of guardian in this country. Dawson, In re, 2 Sm. & G. 199; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 36; 2 W. R. 314. See 2 W. R. 366.

Where infant residing in France had a guardian appointed by the French courts:—Held, that the English court would not interfere with the decision of the French court by appointing an English guardian. Bourgoise, In re, 41 Ch. D. 310; 60 L. T. 553; 37 W. R. 563—C. A.

Infants, the subjects of a foreign state, were sent to this country by their guardian, appointed by the foreign court, for education. Part of the property of the infants was in this country, and a bill was filed and an order obtained ex parte, for the appointment of guardians here:—Held, that the court ought not to interfere with the guardian's rights over the children, but that the appointment of the guardians here should be continued without prejudice to those rights. Nugent v. Vetsera, 35 L. J., Ch. 777; L. R. 2 Eq. 704; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 781; 15 L. T. 33; 14 W. R. 960.

Property out of Jurisdiction.]—The court has jurisdiction to appoint guardians to an infant although his domicil and all his property are situated in Scotland, and the infant being made a ward of court by the mere filing of the bill, the court is bound to appoint guardians. Johnstone v. Beattie, 10 Cl. & F. 42; 7 Jur. 1023. Affirming 1 Ph. 17; 10 L. J., Ch. 300.

British Subject born Abroad.]—If an infant be born abroad whose paternal grandfather was a natural-born British subject, the court has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian of such infant, although the infant is resident abroad, and has no property in this country. Willoughby, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1122; 30 Ch. D. 324; 53 L. T. 926; 33 W. R. 850—C. A.

Deed of Appointment—Guardian Attesting Witness.]—A deed appointing a guardian of the person and estate of an infant is well executed within 12 Car. 2, c. 24, although the guardian is an attesting witness to the deed. Morgan v. Hatchell, 19 Beav. 96; 3 Eq. R. 121; 24 L. J., Ch. 135; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 125; 3 W. R. 126.

b. How Appointed.

i. By the Court.

In General.]—Where a petition is presented by infants for the appointment of a guardian it should be by a next friend. Russell's Estate, In re, 20 L. J., Ch. 384; 15 Jur. 981.

On Reference.]—Reference to the master to inquire whether the plaintiff's late father had appointed a guardian, and if not, that the master should approve of a proper person to be guardian. Bettesworth v. Bettesworth, Dick. 729.

When a father, by his will, names guardians for his natural child, the court will not appoint them guardians without reference to the master. Ward v. St. Paul, 2 Bro. C. C. 583. But see Peckham v. Peckham, 2 Cox, 46.

Amount of Property.]—Order made on petition without suit for a reference to approve of a guardian for an infant, having 150*l.* a year. Angell, Ex parte, 13 Sim. 258.

Guardian appointed without a reference, property being but 15*l.* per annum. Jones, In re, 1 Russ. 478.

Order appointing a guardian without a reference only where the property is excessively small; refused where it amounted to 1,500*l.* Wheeler, Ex parte, 16 Ves. 267.

Guardian appointed to an infant entitled to freehold property worth 80*l.* a year without a reference. Jackson, Ex parte, 6 Sim. 212.

The fortune of an infant being 1,000*l.* only, order made under affidavit, without reference, appointing guardian. Allsop, In re, C. P. Cooper, 44; 7 L. J. Ch. 194.

Guardian not to be appointed without a reference, when the infant's property amounts to 150*l.* per annum. Janion, Ex parte, 1 J. & W. 395.

Will not Executed.]—Where a person is appointed guardian, under a will not duly executed for that purpose, the court will appoint him without a reference. Hull v. Storer, 1 Y. & C. 556. S. C., nom. Hall v. Stork, 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 97.

Where Contest.]—Although the court will sometimes appoint a guardian to an infant without a reference, it will in no case dispense with a reference where the guardianship is contested. Beattie v. Johnstone, 1 Ph. 17; 10 L. J., Ch. 300; 5 Jur. 671. And see S. C., nom. Johnstone v. Beattie, 10 Cl. & F. 42; 7 Jur. 1023.

Appointment by Infant.]—The court will refer it to the master to approve of the guardian, although the infant of the age of fourteen, entitled to real estate, has appointed one by deed. Coham v. Coham, 13 Sim. 639; 8 Jur. 26.

Attendance of Guardian.] — Guardian appointed and his presence in court dispensed with, on affidavit of his inability to attend from illness. Hill v. Smith, 1 Madd. 290.

Cost of.]—The cost of appointing a guardian where the infants appear in court is 2*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*, and by commission, if executed in one place, 3*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.*, and in two places, 4*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* It is therefore desirable to adhere to the ancient practice of the court. Carwardine v. Wishlade, 21 L. J., Ch. 464; 16 Jur. 461.

Payment of Dividends to.]—Semble, that 1 Will. 4, c. 56, s. 32, does not authorise the appointment of a guardian, and a direction for payment of dividends upon the same petition, but two petitions are proper. Pongerard, In re, 1 De G. & Sm. 426; 11 Jur. 744.

Bill—Amount of Property.]—In infancy, if the estate is large, a bill must be filed to appoint a guardian, as the accounts can be better taken than on petition. Corbett v. Tottenham, 2 Moll. 319.

Where property of a minor is small, a guardian may be appointed, and maintenance allowed on petition; when trustees are called on to allow a maintenance, a bill must be filed. S. C., 1 Ball & B. 60.

Petition.]—If surviving testamentary guardian declines charge, whether it can be referred to master to appoint, &c., upon petition only without bill, quære. Champney, Ex parte, Dick. 350.

Where a testamentary guardian has not acted, the mode of proceeding in order to have a guardian appointed is by petition; it is not necessary to file a bill. Secus, if after acting he has misconducted himself. O'Keefe v. Casey, 1 Sch. & Lef. 106.

Guardian may be appointed and maintenance allowed upon petition without suit. Salter, Ex parte, 3 Bro. C. C. 500; Dick. 769.

The costs of the petition are to be allowed to the guardian in his accounts. Ib.

Guardian appointed merely on petition, but not without a reference. Watkins, Ex parte, 2 Ves. sen. 470.

At Hearing.]—Directions for appointing a guardian, though usually by petition, may be given at the hearing of the cause. Bradshaw v. ——, 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 79.

ii. By Will.

In Ireland.]—Appointment to be guardian of the estate of infant children does not constitute him a testamentary guardian under 15 Car. 2, Ir., c. 19, s. 6. Norbury (Lord), In re, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 134.

Recommendation by Testator.]—A father having by will appointed a guardian to his children, with a recommendation that they should be placed under the care of two relatives:—Held, that the court was bound to give effect to the recommendation, but not further than might be consistent with preserving to the guardian the general superintendence and control over the children and their fortunes. Knott v. Cottee, 2 Ph. 192.

Unattested Will—Codicil.]—Appointment of guardians by an unattested will, made good by a codicil and three witnesses on the same paper, referring to the will as annexed, and confirming it. De Bathe v. Fingal (Lord), 16 Ves. 167.

Declaration by Testator.]—A declaration of a father upon his death-bed, that he expected A. would take care to see his children educated in the Protestant religion, is a sufficient appointment of guardian of the infant. Teynham v. Lennard, 4 Bro. P. C. 302.

Testator directed the trustees of his will to engage a proper person for the purpose of taking the management and care of his children during their minorities; and he requested his late wife's sister, if she should be alive at his decease, to take such management and care on herself:—Held, an appointment of the wife's sister to be guardian. Miller v. Harris, 14 Sim. 540; 9 Jur. 388.

A testator, by will, expressed his urgest wish and desire that their aunt E. should have the charge and care of his infant children; and also that she might receive a sufficient allowance to enable her to make and keep a house for their residence, and that they might be attended to in illness by E. The testator stated his wish that, in case of E.'s ceasing from any cause to have such charge and care of the children, that they should not be taken charge of, or reside with, any other relative whatever. He appointed L. his executor and legal guardian of his children. Notwithstanding the direction, the chief clerk certified that it was not for the benefit of the children that E. should have their charge and management; and the court refused to vary the certificate. Hartley v. Smith, 6 L. T. 681, 734; 10 W. R. 750.

Children Unborn.]—Testator married, but not having children, gave the guardianship of all his children, born or to be born, to his wife and brother, or the survivor. The guardianship extends to all the children, by that or a future marriage. Ilchester (Earl), Ex parte, 7 Ves. 348; 6 R. R. 138.

By Jew.]—Jew may devise the guardianship of his children under 12 Car. 2, c. 24. Bedford Charity, In re, 2 Swanst. 538.

Revocation.]—Where, by will, the testator appointed his widow and two others guardians of his children, and by a codicil, "left their care, charge, and education" to his widow:—Held, that the appointment was not revoked by the codicil. Hare v. Hare, 5 Beav. 629; 12 L. J., Ch. 344; 7 Jur. 336.

Testamentary appointment of a guardian is not revoked by subsequent testamentary appointment, not executed according to statute, and not directly importing a revocation. Ilchester (Earl), Ex parte, supra.

A testator gave the guardianship of his children to his wife and his four trustees, and suitable sums were to be applied out of the estate for their maintenance. He, by a codicil, revoked the appointment of three of his "trustees and executors," and appointed two other persons to act as such "trustees and executors":—Held, that this revocation did not extend to the guardianship. Park, In re, 14 Sim. 89; 13 L. J., Ch. 369; 8 Jur. 372.

Nomination by Surviving Guardian.]—A testator, by will, appointed certain persons to be guardians of his daughter, and in case of the death of either of such persons he authorised the survivor to nominate another person as guardian:—Held, that the 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 8, sanctions his giving authority to a surviving guardian to nominate a person in the place of one who has died. Parnell, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 35; L. R. 2 P. 379; 26 L. T. 744; 20 W. R. 494.

c. Who may appoint.

i. In General.

Right of Father.]—A father has no absolute right to have a guardian appointed of his infant child, but the court has a discretion whether it will make such an appointment. Lyons, In re, 22 L. T. 770; 18 W. R. 238.

Grandfather.]—Grandfather cannot appoint guardians of his grandson, but may give his estate to him on that condition, and the father submitting is bound by it. Blake v. Leigh, Amb. 306.

Infant Tenant in Socage.]—If no testamentary guardian or mother, infant, having socage land, may choose guardian at twelve, if female; fourteen, if male; done on circuit if no reasonable objection. Anon., 2 Ves. sen. 375.

Lunatic of Age.]—Father or uncle devises the custody of a lunatic son or nephew who is above twenty-one; this void. Ludlow, Ex parte, 2 P. Wms. 638.

Mother.]—A mother cannot appoint a testamentary guardian. Villareal v. Mellish, 2 Swanst. 536. S. P., Hunt, In re, 3 Con. & L. 373.

Stranger.]—There is no decided case that guardians can be appointed for a child by a stranger during the life of the parent, but the law will take care that the child shall be educated according to his expectations. Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. C. C. 500.

ii. In case of Illegitimate Children.

In General.]—A testator cannot by will lawfully appoint anyone to be guardian of his illegitimate children. Sleeman v. Wilson, L. R. 13 Eq. 36.

Reputed Father.]—A natural child can have no guardian except by the appointment of the court; but the reputed father, having named his executor the guardian, the lord chancellor made the appointment without a reference. Barry v. Barry, 1 Moll. 210.

Persons nominated by a testator to be guardians of his natural children, appointed without a reference. Chatteris v. Young, 1 J. & W. 106; 20 R. R. 342. S. P., Ward v. St. Paul, 2 Bro. C. C. 583; Peckham v. Peckham, 2 Cox, 46.

By the Court.]—Where a person was reported by a master to be a fit guardian to a natural child, such guardian was not allowed, but the child was placed with the father. Ord v. Blackett, 9 Mod. 116.

—— Mother Living.]—The mother of natural children being alive, another person appointed guardian, with directions for intercourse between the infants and their mother. Courtois v. Vincent, Jacob, 628.

Mother.]—The mother of an illegitimate child has no power to appoint a guardian for it under 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 8. Glover, Ex parte, 4 D. P. C. 291; 1 H. & W. 508.

d. Who may be Appointed.

i. In General.

Father.]—A female infant was entitled to property producing 90*l.* a year, and on petition the court, being satisfied as to the condition in life and circumstances of the father, and he and two sufficient persons undertaking to account, made an order appointing the father guardian of her estate without a reference. Bond, Ex parte, 16 L. J., Ch. 147; 11 Jur. 114.

Father-in-law.]—A. and B., infants, intermarry; A.'s father is living; but B.'s mother, her testamentary guardian, is dead. The court will appoint A.'s father to be B.'s guardian, without a reference. Quarrill v. Binmore, 8 Jur. 1113.

Father's Executor.]—The court of exchequer refused to appoint certain persons to be gudarians without reference, although one of the persons was the executor of the father. Whitelock v. Finch, 3 Y. & C. 724.

Uncle—Executor.]—An uncle who was entitled to executorship to testator, and to inheritance after son, not admitted as guardian to testator's son. Selby v. Selby, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 488.

Uncle and aunt appointed guardians of the person of an infant on petition without suit or reference, no allowance being asked. Neale, In re, 15 Beav. 250.

Mother.]—The court will not appoint a mother to be the guardian without having some information as to the family of the father. Cook, In re, 20 L. J., Ch. 392; 15 Jur. 836.

A mother and her co-executor appointed guardians of her own children and those by a previous wife. Anderton v. Yates, 5 De G. & Sm. 202.

Where the father of an infant devises the guardianship to the mother, the court has no power to control this will, unless upon proof made of misbehaviour. Dillon v. Mount-Cashell (Lady), 4 Bro. P. C. 306.

Order made without a reference, appointing the mother guardian of her infant son, and for the payment to her for his maintenance of the interest on 1,000*l.*, to which he was entitled. Allsop, In re, C. P. Cooper, 44; 7 L. J., Ch. 194.

Married Woman.]—A married woman appointed guardian of an illegitimate child, and payment ordered to her upon her separate receipt. Wallis v. Campbell, 13 Ves. 517.

The appointment of a married woman, sole guardian of infants, is open to objection. Kaye, In re, L. R. 1 Ch. 387; 12 Jur. (N. S.) 350; 14 L. T., 388; 14 W. R. 597.

The court will not ordinarily interfere with the discretion of the judge; but where a married woman had been appointed sole guardian, and the appointment was in other respects open to objection, the court appointed two other persons guardians in her place. Ib.

Solicitor—Testamentary Guardians Refusing Trust.]—Two out of three testamentary guardians declined to accept the trust. They are not entitled, after the death of their co-guardian, to be appointed guardians by the court. But testamentary guardians will be preferred to the person nominated in the will of the mother (the third guardian). The solicitor for any of the persons who exercise a control over the minor's estate will not be appointed the guardian of their persons. Johnstons, In re, 3 Jo. & Lat. 222.

Dissenter—Second Marriage of Mother.]—Exceptions allowed to the answer on a bill, in stating that the husband of the guardian was not a fit person to have the management of the minors, "being a man of small fortune, increasing family, and also a sectary." Corbett v. Tottenham, 1 Ball & B. 59.

A mother having children by a second marriage, is not thereby rendered incompetent to be guardian to the children of her first marriage. A person is not incapacitated to act as guardian by being a dissenter. Id. 61.

Creditor.]—A., indebted to B. by deed, grants the guardianship of his child to B., and covenants not to revoke it, and dies; equity will not set aside the deed unless the debt be paid or the trust abused. Lecone v. Sheires, 1 Vern. 442.

Settlor.]—A settlement being made on an infant (whose father was dead), on condition of her being under the care of the settlor, it was referred to the master to consider whether he should be appointed guardian, taking the settlement into consideration. Fagnani v. Selwyn, Jacob, 268, n.

Master of the Court.]—The practice of appointing one of the masters of the court guardian of the fortune of infants, although proper in the absence of all suitable persons, is mischievous as a general course. In substance it is appointing the receiver guardian. Sullivans, In re, 1 Moll. 225.

Clerk.]—The court may assign one of the six clerks to be guardian to an infant. Offley v. Jenney, Nels. Ch. Rep. 44. Anon., 2 Ch. Ca. 163.

Person Out of Jurisdiction.]—Persons residing out of the jurisdiction not to be appointed guardians by the court. Logan v. Fairlie, 1 Jacob, 193; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 152; 23 R. R. 28.

Guardians were appointed in Ireland to infants brought up, educated, and domiciled there. Their fortunes were in court in England. The court adopted the proceedings in Ireland, appointed the same persons guardians, notwithstanding they resided out of the jurisdiction. Daniel v. Newton, 8 Beav. 485.

A father domiciled in and having only property in Scotland, having by will appointed tutors of his daughter, who was afterwards brought into England, and while so residing a bill was filed, making the infant a ward of court:—Held, first, That Scotch testamentary tutors were not testamentary guardians in England; secondly, that the lord chancellor had power to appoint guardians, although her property was in Scotland; thirdly, that being a ward, the court was bound to appoint guardians, and that the Scotch tutors, although they had the management of the property, had none over the person nor were they entitled to be appointed in England; and lastly, that persons out of the jurisdiction, if otherwise qualified, might be appointed guardians, jointly with any other residing permanently within it. Johnstone v. Beattie, 10 Cl. & F. 42; 7 Jur. 1023. Affirming 1 Ph. 17; 10 L. J., Ch. 300.

Order of Foreign Court.]—The order of a foreign court appointing a guardian of an infant the child of a British subject will be recognised in this court with the respect due by the comity of nations, but it does not constitute the appointee a guardian in this country. Dawson, In re, 2 Sm. & G. 199; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 36; 2 W. R. 311. And see supra, cols. 1488, 1489.

Roman Catholic Ecclesiastics.] — Roman Catholic Ecclesiastics are not incapacitated to be testamentary guardians, and may, where the present custody of such wards is illegal, claim a writ of habeas corpus. Byrnes, In re, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 199; 21 W. R. 622.

In Case of Illegitimate Children.]—See cases, ante, col. 1493.

2. REMOVAL, DISCHARGE, AND DEATH.

Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886.]—The court has jurisdiction to interfere with and to remove a guardian of a child who has no property, on proof of misconduct of the guardian towards the child, or on proof that it is for the welfare of the child that the guardian should be removed. McGrath, In re (Infants), 62 L. J., Ch. 208; [1893] 1 Ch. 143; 2 R. 137; 67 L. T. 636; 41 W. R. 97—C. A.

But the duty of the court towards a penniless child under the care of a legal guardian who is able and willing to maintain the child is to leave the child alone. The welfare of the child—religious, moral, and social, as well as physical and pecuniary—is the paramount consideration for the court. Ib.

At Common Law.]—Guardians at common law may be removed or compelled to give security, if there appears any danger of their abusing the person or estate of their ward; and of this there are many instances. Hanbury v. Walker, 3 Ch. Rep. 58. Foster v. Denny, 2 Ch. Ca. 237. And see Styles, 456; Hardr. 96; 1 Sid. 424; 3 Salk. 177.

Testamentary Guardian.]—Court cannot remove a testamentary guardian, but will appoint proper person to superintend education, &c., of infant. Ingham v. Bickerdike, 6 Madd. 275.

On Application of Infant.]—On application of infant, and by consent of his relations and guardians, other persons appointed to have the care of him till further order. Spencer v. Chesterfield, Amb. 146.

Controlling Conduct.]—Orders may be made to regulate conduct of guardian, without his being thereby discharged. Roach v. Garvan, 1 Ves. sen. 160.

Practice — Petition.] — Proper application to change guardian is by petition. Ilchester (Earl), Ex parte, 7 Ves. 348; 6 R. R. 138.

It is not the rule of the court to remove a testamentary guardian for misconduct, on petition. There must be a bill filed; but if the guardian consents, when there is no charge against him, it may be done on petition. Swift, In re, 2 Moll. 330.

For Misbehaviour.]—When the father of an infant devises the guardianship to the mother, the court has no power to control this will, unless upon complaint, and proof made of misbehaviour in the mother. Dillon v. Mount-Cashell (Lady), 4 Bro. P. C. 306.

Guardians appointed by will, according to the statute of 12 Car. 2, c. 24, have no more power than guardians in socage, and are but trustees; on whose misbehaviour, or giving occasion of suspicion, the court will interpose. Beaufort v. Berty, 1 P. Wms. 703.

This court will interpose if guardians give occasion to suspect their behaviour. Ib.

Change of Religion.]—A mother, a testamentary guardian, who brings up her child in a religion different from that in which her husband died, will be removed. Hunt, In re, 2 Con. & L. 373.

Residence Abroad.]—Testator's guardian residing abroad not removed on that ground. Lewis, In re, 2 Moll. 485.

Discharge of.]—The court has jurisdiction to discharge a testamentary guardian of infant ward of court, on his own application. Gray (an Infant), In re, 27 L. R., Ir. 609.

Death.]—One of three persons who had been jointly appointed guardians of an infant, having died, the vice-chancellor, without a reference, appointed the two survivors guardians of the infant. Hall v. Jones, 2 Sim. 41.

—— Survivorship.]—A guardianship devised to three, without saying "and to the survivors or survivor of them," yet the survivor shall have it. Eyre v. Shaftesbury (Countess), 2 P. Wms. 102.

If two persons are appointed by the court guardians until further order, the guardianship is at an end on the death of one, and there must be a new application. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 1 Russ. 528; 25 R. R. 127.

3. Marriage of Guardian or Ward.

Female Guardian.]—Where a female guardian appointed by the court marries, although she be the mother of the infant, it is of course to make a new reference, but the same person may again propose herself. Gornall, Ex parte, 1 Beav. 347; 8 L. J., Ch. 283; 3 Jur. 500.

Where a female appointed guardian marries, it is of course to appoint a new one. Anon., 8 Sim. 346.

Guardian will not be appointed after a marriage, nor discharged because of a marriage; but without discharging guardian, orders regulating their conduct may be made. Roach v. Garvan, 1 Ves. sen. 160.

Jewess Marrying Christian.]—V., the widow of a Jew, having abjured Judaism, and married a Christian, the court ordered that the children of the first marriage should be delivered to their mother, the right of the mother to be guardian continuing, notwithstanding her second marriage. Villareal v. Mellish, 2 Swanst. 533.

Effect of Marriage of Ward.]—Guardianship is not discharged by marriage of ward, or till twenty-one. Roach v. Garvan, supra. S. P., Mendes v. Mendes, 3 Atk. 625; 1 Ves. sen. 91.

Prevention of.]—This court will assist the testamentary guardian to prevent an improper marriage of the infant heir. Raymond's (Lord) case, Forrest. 58.

Consent to, how Controlled.]—Under what circumstances the court will control the consent of a guardian to the marriage of an infant ward, and will refuse to confirm a master's report, approving of proposals for a settlement. Gordon (Lord) v. Irwin (Vicountess), 4 Bro. P. C. 355.

To Son of Guardian.]—One of the guardians of an infant of nine years marries her to his own son who has no estate; the court ordered the guardian to produce the girl, and then committed her to the other guardian, ordering an information to be brought against the guardian who married the ward, but held this did not amount to a contempt. Goodall v. Harris, 2 P. Wms. 561.

Approval — Of Guardian Abroad.]—Application to approve of an infant's marriage under 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, s. 12, testamentary guardian being abroad. Blake v. Blake, Dick. 459.

—— By Petition.]—Petition that a guardian may be assigned to consent to a marriage (unless to carry on a suit to protect an interest), must be pursuant to that statute 26 Geo. 2, c. 33. Beecher, Ex parte, 1 Bro. C. C. 556.

4. Duties and Powers.

a. In General.

Office not Assignable.] — Guardianship of infant is not assignable. Reynolds v. Teynham (Lady), 9 Mod. 49.

Testamentary guardianship is not assignable. Mellish v. De Costa, 2 Atk. 14.

Protecting Wards.]—Observations as to the duty of guardians to watch over their wards. Kay v. Johnston, 21 Beav. 536.

Elopement of Ward.]—Guardians of a female under age are justified in stopping an elopement, and in detaining her clothes if she has eloped; and a carrier by whom she has sent them may deliver them up to the guardians. Barker v. Taylor, 1 Car. & P. 101; 28 R. R. 767.

Powers of Testamentary Guardians.]—Guardians appointed by will under 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 8, have the same powers as guardians in socage. Gilbert v. Schwenck, 14 M. & W. 488; 14 L. J., Ex. 317; 9 Jur. 693.

Joint testamentary guardians are like trustees, and one can maintain an action for trespass against his companion, alleging that the infant was his servant, and that the defendant forcibly took him out of his possession, per quod servitium amisit. Ib.

Under Merchant Shipping Act, 1854.]—The guardian of a registered infant owner of a ship has no power under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 99, to sell or mortgage the ship on behalf of the infant. Michael v. Fripp, L. R. 7 Eq. 95; 19 L. T. 257; 17 W. R. 23.

Infant taken out of Jurisdiction.]—An infant allowed to be taken out of the jurisdiction for his benefit, upon the guardian entering into a recognizance. Medley, In re, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 339.

Form of recognizance in such case. Ib.

Attainter.]—Guardians are recommended by will to act with the advice of J. S., and J. S. is attainted, this superintendency devolves upon the Great Seal. Beaufort v. Berty, 1 P. Wms. 703.

Recognizance by Guardian.]— Recognizance by a guardian in the matter of a minor, is not a debt due to the crown. Usher, Ex parte, 1 Ball & B. 199.

Arbitration.]—A submission to arbitration by a guardian, on behalf of his ward, binds the guardian only. Harley, In re, 1 Hay. & J. 160.

Practice — Answer.] — Guardian of infant defendant being co-defendant need only sign joint answer once. Anon., 2 J. & W. 553.

Nothing in answer of guardian can be read against the ward. Leigh v. Ward, 2 Vent. 72.

—— Evidence.]—Where a guardian has been guilty of ill practice in the prosecution of a suit, though it was not the act of the infant herself, yet that malpractice may be given in evidence. Baker v. Hart, 3 Atk. 544 ; 1 Ves. sen. 28.

—— Administration.]—When suit is instituted for administration of infant's estate, court has jurisdiction over the infant ; and, on petition of guardians, may order him to be delivered up to them. Wright v. Naylor, 5 Madd. 77.

Appointment by Deed—Setting aside Deed.]—A. indebted to B. by deed, grants the guardianship of his child to B., and covenants not to revoke it, and dies ; equity will not set aside the deed, unless the debt be paid, or the trust abused. Lecone v. Sheires, 1 Vern. 442. And see Morgan v. Hatchell, supra, col. 1489.

Abducting Ward.]—A testator, by his will expressly excluded his wife from the guardianship of his children, and he appointed his executors to be their guardians. After the testator's death, his widow forcibly removed one of the daughters from a school, and took the child abroad. She then filed a bill as next friend, against the executors, for an account of the testator's estate. The court directed the account to be taken, but referred it to the master to inquire into the alleged misconduct of the mother, and ordered all proceedings under the decree to be stayed until the report was made. Arnott v. Bleasdale, 4 Sim. 387.

b. Dealing with Property.

In General—Testamentary Guardian.]—When there is a testamentary guardian, the law (14 & 15 Car. 2, c. 192) authorises him to manage the estate of the infant, and the court will not interfere with, or remove him, unless it be absolutely necessary so to do. Goode, In re, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 256.

—— Receiver.]—The appointment of a testamentary guardian does not, under the statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, constitute any objection to the appointment of a receiver of the estate of the infant. Gardner v. Blane, 1 Hare, 381.

—— Is a Trustee.]—A testamentary guardian is a trustee of such property as comes to his hands in that character. Sleeman v. Wilson, L. R. 13 Eq. 36.

Changing Estate of Infant.]—Guardians may change the nature of an infant's estate where it is manifestly for the infant's interest. Inwood v. Twyne, Amb. 419.

Taking Possession of Infant's Estate.]—A person entering upon the estate of an infant will be fixed with a fiduciary position as to the infant—first, whenever he is the natural guardian of the infant ; secondly, when he is so connected with the infant as to impose upon him a duty to protect, or at least not to prejudice the infant's rights ; or, thirdly, where he takes possession with knowledge or express notice of the infant's rights. Quinton v. Frith, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 396.

A person accepting a conveyance of an infant's lands, with express notice of the infant's rights, will be deemed to be the bailiff of the infant during his infancy. Ib.

Unauthorised Acts.]—Act of guardian without authority, if beneficial to the infant, protected. Milner v. Harewood (Lord), 18 Ves. 273.

Purchase of Land.]—Lands purchased by guardian for infant during minority considered as personalty. Gibson v. Scudamore, Dick. 45.

Cutting Timber.]—Where guardian of an infant, tenant in tail, cuts down timber, the money for it shall be personal estate of the infant ; but, if the infant has the fee, it shall be considered as real estate. Tullit v. Tullit, Amb. 370 ; Dick. 322.

Guardian for an infant, who had a contingent estate, cannot cut timber of his own authority, though it may be a probable benefit. Such an act is not waste. Knight v. Duplessis, 2 Ves. sen. 360.

Changing Cultivation.]—It is waste by guardian turning ancient pasture into arable, however beneficial. Clark v. Thorp, 2 Ves. sen. 232.

Lease for Lives—Renewal.]—Guardian of an infant entitled to a lease for three lives, upon the decease of one of the three lives took a new lease for three new lives. The infant died. The lease shall go to the heirs of the infant ex parte paterna, for the new lease is to be considered as a new acquisition, and to vest in the infant as a purchaser. Pierson v. Shore, 1 Atk. 480.

A feme purchases a church lease to her and her heirs for three lives, and dies leaving an infant daughter. Two of the lives die. The infant's guardian renews the lease. This is a new acquisition, and shall go to the heirs on the part of the father. Mason v. Day, Pre. Ch. 319 ; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 77.

Receipt by Guardian—Payment out of Court of Ward's Funds.]—A testamentary guardian is not entitled as such to obtain payment out of court of funds, the property of his infant ward, which have been paid into court under the Legacy Duty Act :—Semble, that in ordinary cases, a testamentary guardian is entitled to give a receipt for funds coming to his ward. Creswell, In re, 45 L. T. 468 ; 30 W. R. 244.

Payment of Legacy to Guardian.]—Payment to the father as guardian of a legacy given to a child, ill ; though the testator by parol directed it. Dagley v. Tolferry, 1 P. Wms. 285. S. C., sub nom. Dawley v. Belfry, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 300. See 1 Ves. J. 249 n.

Where an infant is entitled to a vested legacy, payment thereof during his minority by the executor to the testamentary guardian is valid, although the period directed by the testator for payment is the attainment of twenty-one years or marriage. M'Creight v. M'Creight, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 314.

—— Foreign Law.]—A fund devolving upon an infant according to the law of Prussia was paid to the father as guardian, upon evidence that by the law of Prussia he was entitled to receive the fund. Brown, In re, 12 L. T. 488.

Payment to Agent of Guardian.]—A., as agent for W., the guardian of J. (an infant), lent a sum of money, the property of the infant, to trustees, upon these terms :—"One day, after date, we . . . . promise to pay to W., as curator for J., the sum of 2,000*l.*, value received in money borrowed of him." A. held the note, and as factor received the interest from time to time; and ultimately received back the 2,000*l.*, and delivered up the note to the trustees. A. died insolvent:—Held, against the trustees, that their payment to A. was not a good discharge of their liability to W. and the infant. Clyde River Trustees v. Duncan, 17 Jur. 701.

Distinction between this case and Whitlock v. Waltham (1 Salk. 157). Ib.

—— Redemption of Land Tax.]—The testamentary guardian of an infant sold part of his estates for the redemption of the land tax. The vendee paid the purchase money to the agent of the vendor, who was also agent for the vendee, and the conveyance was executed, but the agent did not pay the money into the bank as required by the Act 38 Geo. 3, c. 60. The purchaser entered and continued in possession for many years. Nearly twenty years after attaining his age, the heir-at-law brought an ejectment against the purchaser. On a bill filed by the purchaser for confirmation of title the court dismissed the bill without costs. Hicks v. Morant, 3 Y. & J. 286. Affirmed, 2 Dow & Cl. 414; 5 Bligh (N.S.) 643.

Portion—Right of Action.]—Testator directed his trustees to sell and convert, and out of proceeds when invested to pay a portion to the plaintiff at twenty-one or marriage. H., her guardian, received more than the principal of the portion, and, after action brought against him for the principal, allowed the residuary legatee, X., to take possession. The plaintiff filed a bill, making X. a party:—Held, that the payment to her guardian H. did not bind the plaintiff. O'Neill v. Hamill, Beat. 618.

Payment off of Mortgage.]—A guardian, during the infant's minority, may, without the direction of the court, pay off a mortgage. and the interest of any other real incumbrance. Palmes v. Danby, Pre. Ch. 137.

What incumbrances on infant's estate guardian may pay off without direction of court. S. C., 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 261.

Mother, as guardian of an infant, out of his personal estate pays off a mortgage upon his land, and the infant dies, and the lands descend to a remote heir. The mother shall not have back the money. Audley v. Audley, 2 Vern. 193.

—— Money Borrowed.]—A guardian borrows money of A. to pay off an incumbrance on the infant's estate, and promises to give A. a security for his money, but dies defore it was done. The court would not decree him a satisfaction of his debt out of the infant's estate. Hooper v. Eyles, 2 Vern. 480.

Debt of Ancestor.]—Guardian not compellable to apply the profits of the lands descended on the infant heir, to pay off the bond debt of the ancestor. Waters v. Ebrall, 2 Vern. 606.

Arrears of Rent.]—If a guardian takes a bond for the arrears of rent, he makes it his own debt. Wale v. Buckle, 2 Ch. Rep. 97.

Lease.]—Lease made by guardian of infant and executed by infant, ordered to be fully recognised by infant after his coming of age, or infant to refund consideration. Evroy v. Nicholas, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 488.

A testamentary guardian may grant a lease of the infant's lands, during the term of his minority. Shaw v. Shaw, Vern. & S. 607.

The guardian authorised by the court, under 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 17, to grant leases of the infant's estate for terms of years exceeding the minority, when beneficial to the infant, and approved by the court. Anstey v. Hobson, 1 Sm. & G. 505.

Order of the court in Ireland that the guardian of an infant tenant for life should execute a lease in conformity with a covenant for renewal:—Held, semble, not to be authorised by this statute. Sadleir v. Biggs, 4 H. L. Cas. 435.

Curator and Factor.]—A curator bonis and factor loco tutoris of Scotch infants is not bound to pay into the court assets belonging to the infants receivable under an English will of which the curator is administrator, and which is in course of administration by the court. Mackie v. Darling, L. R. 12 Eq. 319; 19 W. R. 796.

Property out of Jurisdiction.]—As to the authority of guardians to recover property of the infant out of the jurisdiction. Scott v. Bentley, 1 K. & J. 281; 24 L. J., Ch. 244; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 394; 3 Eq. R. 428; 3 W. R. 280.

Ship—Sale or Mortgage.]—The guardian of a registered infant owner of a ship has no power under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 99, to sell or mortgage the ship on behalf of the infant. Michael v. Fripp, L. R. 7 Eq. 95; 19 L. T. 257; 17 W. R. 23.

Tenant for Life—Draining.] — Under the Draining Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 55, where the tenant for life is an infant, the petition must be presented in the name of his guardian. Amount of the expenses of draining ordered to be paid out of a fund to which the infant tenant for life was absolutely entitled, in lieu of charging the lands. Stanhope v. Stanhope, 3 Beav. 547.

Sale of Infant's Inheritance.] — Publication passed in a supplemental suit by consent, although an infant party, and the object the more speedy sale of the minor's inheritance, and the cause set down out of the regular course on petition and consent without a reference whether for his benefit. Lord Chancellor holding the discretion of the guardian consenting a sufficient protection. Sheppard v. Green, 1 Moll. 275.

c. Accounts.

By Third Party.] — Infant, even during minority, may, by prochein ami, call guardian to account. Falkland v. Bertie, 2 Vern. 342; 12 Mod. 182; 2 Freem. 220; 3 Ch. Ca. 122; Select Ca. Ch. 129. S. P., Eyre v. Shaftesbury (Countess), 2 P. Wms. 119.

Statute of Limitations.] — A testamentary guardian is a trustee, and therefore the Statute of Limitations is inapplicable to accounts as between him and his ward. Mathew v. Brise, 14 Beav. 343.

By Receiver.]—A receiver to the guardian of an infant, who has his account allowed him by the guardian, shall not be obliged to account over again to the infant when he comes of age. Clavering's case, Pre. Ch. 535.

Guardians and receivers obliged to account on application, being bound to account, when called on, and are considered as officers of the court. Burke, In re, 1 Ball & B. 74.

When ordered.]—The guardian of the person is not bound to account specifically for an allowance for maintenance. But in a case of gross abuse, the court will make an order to account. Oldfield, In re, 2 Moll. 294.

—— Account Settled.]—An account settled between a guardian and an infant soon after he comes of age shall not be conclusive. Under what circumstances an account settled shall be binding upon the ward. Wych v. Packington, 3 Bro. P. C. 46.

From what Time.]—Where guardian, after his ward attains full age, continues to manage property at the request of the ward, and before the accounts of the minority are settled, it is a continuance of the guardianship, and he must account as though the transactions were during the minority. Mellish v. Mellish, 1 Sim. & S. 138; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 32, 120.

—— Continued Possession.]—If a father who has entered upon the estates of his infant children retain possession after the children attain twenty-one, such possession will be considered to be as their guardian and bailiff, so that an account will be directed, if necessary, from the time of entry. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 Kay & J. 79; 25 L. J., Ch. 159; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1106; 4 W. R. 135. And see Nanney v. Williams, 22 Beav. 452.

Where any person, whether a parent or a stranger, enters upon an infant's estate, and continues in possession, equity considers him as guardian, and will decree an account to be carried on after the infancy, unless the infant, being of age, has waived such account. Morgan v. Morgan, 1 Atk. 489. And see Newburgh v. Bickerstaffe, 1 Vern. 295.

Cost of Education.]—Where a guardian by will remits to his ward whatever is due to him for his maintenance, it will include all demands for his education. Anstis v. Gandy, 4 Bro. P. C. 313.

Of Profits].—Defendants, executors to their father, who was guardian in socage to the plaintiff, were ordered to answer for profits taken by him. Burgh v. Wentworth, Cary, 54.

Duress.]—If A. buy from B., a minor, under circumstances of distress, the reversion of a house worth 40*l.* a year for 100*l.*, and sell it again in a few days for 200*l.*, equity will compel him to account to B. for the difference. Spencer v. Chase, 9 Mod. 29.

Interest.]—Interest decreed upon balance kept by guardian in his banker's hand. Dawson v. Massey, 1 Ball & B. 219.

Rent—Improvements.]—B. demised hereditaments for 1,000 years to secure 200*l.* and interest. Upon his death, leaving two infant co-heiresses, J., one of the executors and trustees of his will, which was invalid as to the real estate, entered into possession, received the rents and profits, kept down the interest on the mortgage, and expended 780*l.* in the erection of buildings. H., one of the co-heiresses, being still an infant, intermarried with P., and S., the other co-heiress, died, leaving H. her heiress-at-law:—Held, that there must be accounts from the death of B. of the rents received by J., as guardian during the infancy of the co-heiresses, and the infancy and coverture of the survivor, with an allowance for all permanent improvements made by him for the benefit of the infants. Pelley v. Bascombe, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1120; 9 L. T. 317; 2 N. R. 263; 11 W. R. 766.

A ward upon attaining his majority was induced by his guardian to create a mortgage for the purpose of paying off a debt of 5,000*l.* incurred by the guardian in improving the estate during a minority, in addition to an expenditure of the income of the property for the same purpose:—Held, that the ward was not entitled to have this mortgage set aside as against his guardian, without giving credit to his guardian for, and deducting the outlay upon, those improvements which have produced a permanent return in the shape of increased rental. Dacre v. Strachan, 4 W. R. 401.

Advances obtained by Ward after Majority.]—P., being guardian to appellant's wife during minority, placed her with C. for her education, and ordered respondent to pay C. what sums should be calculated for. Several sums were paid and allowed. Appellant's wife, when of age, as by order of P., desired more money, and two sums were paid her:—Held, that there appearing no positive orders from P. for payment of these two sums, appellant ought to pay the principal, interest, and costs. Dolphin v. Haynes, Shower, P. C. 17.

How taken between Guardians.]—H. and C. were trustees and executors of a will and guardians of the testator's daughters. The daughters were maintained by C., and H. allowed him to receive the income for that purpose. In an action to administer the testator's estate:—Held, that H. as trustee, was not discharged by mere evidence of payment of the income to C., his co-guardian, but that under the inquiry H. was not bound to vouch the items of expenditure; and if it was shown that C. had properly maintained and educated the children, the sum proper for that purpose would be allowed against the balance found due on the account, without vouching the details of the application. Evans, In re, Welch v. Channell, 53 L. J., Ch. 709; 26 Ch. D. 58; 51 L. T. 175; 32 W. R. 736.

I. CUSTODY AND EDUCATION.

1. Religious Education.

a. Ante-Nuptial Contracts Respecting.

In General.]—A contract entered into before marriage, that the children shall be brought up in a particular religion, is not binding on the husband, and cannot be enforced in a court of equity, semble. Browne, In re, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 151.

Mixed Marriage—Abandonment of Father's Right.]—An ante-nuptial agreement that the children shall be brought up in a different religion from that of the father is not binding at law or in equity; but such an agreement will have weight with the court in considering whether the father has abandoned his right to educate his children in his own religion. Andrews v. Salt, L. R. 8 Ch. 622; 28 L. T. 686; 21 W. R. 431, 616.

When a father has not forfeited his right to educate his children in his own religion, the court cannot refuse to order a child to be educated in that religion merely because it thinks that the child will be more happy and contented if left with those who have had the care of it. Ib.

But if a father has forfeited or abandoned this right, the court will consider only the happiness and benefit of the child, and will order it to remain in the care of those by whom it has been brought up, and to be educated in their religion; although the child may not have so far imbibed the particular doctrines of that religion as to render it dangerous to change its religious training. Ib.

A Roman Catholic father, who married a Protestant, allowed his two daughters to be brought up as Protestants until they attained the ages of fifteen and eleven respectively. After the death of the mother the father gave way to intemperate habits and neglected his children, and by an order of the court, made after notice to the father, but in his absence, they were placed for four years in the custody of a Protestant. During the pendency of this order the father, having become a reformed character and a devout Roman Catholic, applied to have his children brought up in his own religion:—Held, that it was too late to change the religion of the elder girl against her will; that it was undesirable to separate the children; and that the conduct of the father was such as to justify the court in disregarding his wishes. Newton, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 641; [1896] 1 Ch. 740; 73 L. T. 692; 44 W. R. 470—C. A.

An Englishman, a Protestant, married in Germany a German, a Roman Catholic. Previously to the marriage a written agreement was signed by both, which provided that the children of the marriage should be educated in the Roman Catholic faith. The two children were, with the father's knowledge, baptised as Roman Catholics. The father allowed the mother to bring up the two children as Roman Catholics:—Held, that the father by his conduct had abandoned his right to have the child brought up in his own faith, and had indicated a wish that he should be brought up as a Roman Catholic. Clarke, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 762; 21 Ch. D. 817; 47 L. T. 84; 31 W. R. 37.

Held, also, that it would be most for the benefit of the infant that he should be educated in the Roman Catholic faith. Ib. Hawksworth v. Hawksworth (infra, col. 1509), Andrews v. Salt (supra), and Hill v. Hill (infra, col. 1509), considered. Ib.

—— Promise by Father Retracted.]—The father of the infant plaintiffs was a Protestant, and the mother a Roman Catholic. The mother married the father, relying on his express promise that all the children should be brought up as Roman Catholics. This promise was retracted soon after the marriage, and the father insisted that the children should be brought up as Protestants, and himself instructed them in the Protestant faith. The mother, secretly and unknown to the father, brought up the children as Roman Catholics:—Held, that as it was a question affecting the wards, the court had jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain the mother from interfering with the religious education of the children. Stourton v. Stourton (infra, col. 1508) considered. Agar-Ellis, In re, Agar-Ellis v. Lascelles, 48 L. J., Ch. 1; 10 Ch. D. 49; 39 L. T. 380; 27 W. R. 117—C. A.

W., a Roman Catholic, before his marriage with a Protestant, wrote to the priest promising to have the children brought up as Roman Catholics. He also wrote to the mother of his intended wife stating that as to guardianship, on no consideration would he "permit anyone to step between [his intended wife] and her children," but "would by will leave her sole and undivided authority." A child was born, which was, with W.'s sanction, baptised as a Roman Catholic:—Held, that the facts afforded a sufficient indication of W.'s intention that his children should be committed to the guardianship of their mother, and an order to that effect was made. Walsh, In re, 13 L. R. Ir. 269.

The daughter of a Protestant father and a Roman Catholic mother was, with the concurrence of the father, baptised in the Roman Catholic faith, the parents having signed an ante-nuptial declaration that the children should be brought up as Roman Catholics. The father on his death-bed commended his wife and child to the care of M., a Protestant. The mother died intestate. The child remained in the custody of M. for four years after the death of the father; she was then forcibly abducted and sent to some Roman Catholic relatives, where she remained for some months:—Held, that it was the duty of the court to consider the welfare of the child without regard to the ante-nuptial declaration, and the court gave the custody of the child to M., and directed that she should be brought up as a Protestant. Nevin, In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 542; [1891] 2 Ch. 299; 65 L. T. 35—C. A.

b. Control of, by Court.

In General.]—The general rule is, that an infant is to be brought up in the religion of the father. Newbery, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 330; L. R. 1 Ch. 263; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 154; 13 L. T. 781; 14 W. R. 360.

A father has a right to direct and regulate the religious faith in which his child shall be brought up, and the court will not interfere with the right unless there is an abuse of parental authority. Browne, In re, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 156.

To insist on bringing up the child in his own religion, notwithstanding a verbal agreement to the contrary, entered into before marriage with his wife, is not an abuse of parental authority which will induce the court to interfere. Ib.

Custody given to Third Persons.]—A Protestant father died leaving a widow and infant children. The infants being in the custody of their mother, who had, since her husband's death, become a Roman Catholic, were removed without their mother's consent; and on a writ of habeas corpus being issued for the production of the infants, the court being informed that a petition was presented, made an order enlarging the return, and directing a reference to the master to approve of a proper guardian; but refused to order the delivery of the infants to their mother, and consigned them to certain persons until further orders. North, In re, 11 Jur. 7.

Where the father has not left nor expressed any direction or instruction as to the religion in which his infant children are to be educated, the court will assume that his wishes were that they should be educated in his own religion. Ib.

Child Born in India.]—A child born in India, whose father was a European British subject and a christian, must be presumed to have the father's religion, and his corresponding civil and social status, and it is the duty of a guardian to bring up his ward in his father's religion. Skinner v. Orde, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 261; L. R. 4 P. C. 60.

Testamentary Guardian.] — Testamentary guardians have the same right as the father to direct the religious education of a child according to the father's wishes. Browne, In re, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 151.

Jurisdiction of the court in controlling the powers of testamentary guardians. Talbot v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 4 Myl. & Cr. 672; 9 L. J., Ch. 125; 4 Jur. 380.

The circumstance that it will be more for the pecuniary interest of a child to be educated in one religious faith than in another will not induce the court to interfere with his religious education. Ib.

And semble, the court will not interfere with the discretion of the testamentary guardian as to the faith in which he educates his ward. Ib.

—— At Common Law.]—In a court of common law, the right of a father to the custody of a child is absolute, and cannot be taken away by the fact that he may have agreed with the mother of the child, that the child shall be taught a particular religion; and this right extends to testamentary guardians appointed under 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 8. Andrews, In re, L. R. 8 Q. B. 153; 28 L. T. 353; 21 W. R. 480. S. C., nom. Edwards, In re, 42 L. J., Q. B. 99.

—— Right of Mother.]—A mother, a testamentary guardian, has no right to bring up her child in a religion different from that in which her husband died; if she do so she will be removed from the office of guardian. Hunt, In re, 2 Con. & L. 373.

Custody of Mother.]—The court will not take a child of tender years from the custody of its mother on the ground that the mother's religion differs from that of the deceased father, and that such change of custody is requisite to the training of the child in the father's religion. Austin, In re, Austin v. Austin, 34 Beav. 257; 34 L. J., Ch. 192; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 101; 11 L. T. 616; 13 W. R. 332.

The father of an infant three years old died a Roman Catholic. His widow married again. The court committed the child, until it should attain the age of seven, to the mother; but the court declared that the child ought to be brought up and educated as a Roman Catholic; and directed that when she attained the age of seven, application should be made to the court respecting her guardianship and education and religious instruction. Austin v. Austin, 4 De G. J. & S. 716; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 536; 13 W. R. 761.

—— On Separation.]—Although the wife may have obtained a decree of judicial separation, the court will not give her the custody of the children if she intends to bring them up in a religion different from that of the father, and different from that in which they have been educated during the cohabitation of their parents. D'Alton v. D'Alton, 47 L. J., P. 59; 4 P. D. 87.

Religious Convictions of Infant.]—The court has jurisdiction to protect the conscientious convictions of a minor, although adverse to the religion or even to the declared wishes of a living father who has not forfeited his parental authority, but such jurisdiction is only to be exercised with extreme caution. Grimes, In re, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 465.

If the case for interference is rested solely on the ground of the child's religious convictions, it must be established that they have some root, and are entertained by a mind of intelligence adequate to understand their importance, and with stability capable of adhering to them; and, in order to inform itself on these points, the court may, by a personal interview, test the opinions and wishes of the child. Ib.

A ward of court, aged nine, who had been ordered to be brought up as a Roman Catholic, was, in disobedience to the orders of the court, removed out of the jurisdiction, and educated in the doctrines of the established church. At the age of fifteen she was brought back within the jurisdiction; and the lord chancellor having, in personal interviews, been convinced that she was herself attached to the religious opinions in which she had been brought up, ordered her future religious education to be conducted in conformity with them. Browne, In re, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 172.

The actual conscientious convictions of a minor, who has arrived at the age of conscious responsibility, are to be secured against pressure or coercive influence. Ib.

A Roman Catholic left a widow, a Roman Catholic, and a child. The widow, after her husband's death, became a member of the Church of England, and brought up the child as a member of the Church of England, until he was upwards of nine years old; and it appeared, in an interview with him, that the distinctive doctrines of that church had taken a strong hold on his mind:—Held, that it was too late for the court to give directions that he should be educated in the faith of his father. Stourton v. Stourton, 8 De G. M. & G. 760; 26 L. J., Ch. 354; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 527; 5 W. R. 418.

Unless a child has been allowed to grow up in faith different to that of his father, and great danger to his moral and religious welfare would arise by effacing the strong religious convictions entertained by the child, the court will not interfere with the express directions contained in the father's will. Davis v. Davis, 10 W. R. 245.

When a father has acted in such a manner as to abdicate during his lifetime the duty of controlling the religious education of his child, and has intrusted it to his wife and a relation of a different religion, who have grounded that child in the tenets of their own religion, the religion of the father shall not determine that of the child. Garnett, In re, 20 W. R. 222.

A father by will directed his son to be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith. The infant having been brought up chiefly with his Protestant relations, and educated in their faith till the age of fifteen, the court, considering the bad effect upon the faith and moral character of the infant, which a change of religion at that time might work, decided to see the infant, and ascertain the state of his mind, before making any order. Witty v. Marshall, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 68 ; 5 Jur. 1079.

Abandonment of Father's Right.]—Where a Roman Catholic father allowed the mother, a Protestant, to have the exclusive charge of the education of the children, and they were with his full knowledge brought up in the Protestant faith :—Held, to have abdicated his right to direct the religious education of his children ; and the court disregarded a direction in his will that they should be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith. Hill v. Hill, 31 L. J., Ch. 505 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 609 ; 6 L. T. 99 ; 10 W. R. 400. And see Scanlan, In re, infra, col. 1510.

When a father has not forfeited or abandoned his right to educate his children in his own religion, the court cannot refuse to order a child to be educated in that religion merely because it thinks that the child will be more happy, or better provided for, if left with those who have had the care of it. Andrews v. Salt, L. R. 8 Ch. 622 ; 28 L. T. 686 ; 21 W. R. 616.

But if a father has forfeited or abandoned his right to educate his children in his own religion, the court will consider only the happiness and benefit of the child, and will order it to remain in the care of those by whom it has been brought up, and to be educated in their religion ; although the child may not have so far imbibed the particular doctrines of that religion as to render it dangerous to change its religious training Ib. S. P., Clarke, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 762 ; 21 Ch. D. 817 ; 47 L. T. 84 ; 31 W. R. 37.

A Roman Catholic, married to a Protestant, had all his children baptised by Roman Catholic clergymen, but he permitted the children to attend divine service as Protestants. They did not receive any religious instruction as Roman Catholics, nor attend Roman Catholic worship. The mother's wish was that the children should be brought up as Protestants :—Held, that the children were to be brought up as Protestants. O'Malley, In re, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 291.

—— By Application to the Court.]—A father, who makes his children wards of court, and then applies to the court to assist him in directing their religious education, does not necessarily thereby abdicate his parental authority. In such a case, if the father has not abandoned his right to educate his children, the court will not interfere with him in the honest exercise of his parental authority, nor will it see the children, although they may have acquired strong religious convictions different from those of the father, but will give effect to his wishes. Agar-Ellis, In re, Agar-Ellis v. Lascelles, 48 L. J., Ch. 1 ; 10 Ch. D. 49 ; 39 L. T. 380 ; 27 W. R. 117—C. A.

No Directions by Father.]—A Roman Catholic died, leaving a widow, a Protestant, and an infant daughter. He left no directions as to her religious education. The daughter was brought up by her mother as a Protestant till she was eight years and a half old. The court made an order that the child should be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith, but did not think it advisable to have an interview with the child. Hawksworth v. Hawksworth, 40 L. J., Ch. 534 ; L. R. 6 Ch. 539 ; 25 L. T. 115 ; 19 W. R. 735.

Father Irreligious.]—A father's authority over his children controlled, on the ground of his professing and acting on irreligious principles. Shelley v. Westbrooke, Jacob, 266 ; 23 R. R. 47.

Court has jurisdiction to prevent parents preaching irreligious doctrines in presence of their children. De Manneville v. De Manneville, 10 Ves. 58 ; 7 R. R. 340.

As to the jurisdiction of court over parents with respect to their children. Id. 10 Ves. 52.

The peculiar religious opinions of the father form no ground for removing a child from the custody of its father. Curtis, In re, 28 L. J., Ch. 458 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1147 ; 7 W. R. 474.

Where a father deserted his wife and lived with the leader of a sect professing peculiar opinions, and the wife after her desertion gave birth to a child, who was maintained by his mother and grandmother :—Held, a proper case for restraining the father from acquiring possession of the infant. Thomas v. Roberts, 3 De G. & Sm. 758 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 506 ; 14 Jur. 639.

Mother Irreligious—Separation Deed.]—By a covenant in a separation deed, a father agreed that his daughter should remain in her mother's custody during eleven months in each year. The mother held and promulgated atheistical opinions, and refused to allow the child to receive any religious instruction. She also published and circulated an obscene book :—Held, that it was the duty of the court to bring up the child in the religion of her father ; and also that the refusal of religious instruction to the child and the publication of the obscene book were in themselves sufficient grounds for removing her from the custody of the mother. Besant, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 497 ; 11 Ch. D. 508 ; 40 L. T. 469 ; 27 W. R. 741.

Interference by Father with Infant's Religion.]—The court of chancery has jurisdiction to restrain a father from interfering with the religious education of his infant child ; but that jurisdiction will not be exercised unless the court sees that the interference of the father will be injurious to the happiness and welfare of the child. Meade, In re, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 98 ; 19 W. R. 313.

Under Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886.]—The court has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian to act with the mother after the father's death, in order to insure the infants being brought up in the religion of the father, and the fact that the infants have no property, and that the father was an alien, does not affect the jurisdiction. Magees, In re, 31 L. R. Ir. 513.

The Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, does not affect the right of the father to determine the religion in which his children shall be brought up after his death. Scanlan, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 718 ; 40 Ch. D. 200 ; 59 L. T. 599 ; 36 W. R. 842.

The children of a Protestant father and Roman Catholic mother, aged ten, nine, and three years, were with the assent of the father educated as Roman Catholics for three years, and his two elder children were admitted to communion, according to the rights of that faith. At the end of that period the father, being then dependent for support upon the Protestant clergy of his parish, caused his children to be educated as Protestants, and expressed a wish that they should thenceforth be brought up in that religion :—Held, that the father had not abandoned the right to have his children brought up in his own religion. Ib.

—— Welfare of Infants.]—The court has jurisdiction under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1866, to remove a guardian appointed under that act, and appoint another, and give directions as to the religion in which the infant shall be brought up, although the infant is not a ward of court and has no property, and although the religious faith in which the infant shall be brought up is the only ground for interference. McGrath (an infant), In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 549; [1892] 2 Ch. 496; 67 L. T. 636; 41 W. R. 97—C. A.

Change of Religion by Parent.]—Where a widow without means had voluntarily placed her son (who had been baptised as a Roman Catholic) in a Protestant school, and after a time desired to remove him that he might be brought up as a Roman Catholic:—Held, that the authorities had no right to detain the boy from the custody of his mother. Reg. v. Williams, 58 L. J., Q. B. 176.

—— Child under Ten—Desertion by Father—Rights of Mother.]—A Protestant mother placed her son at a boys' home. The father had deserted his family. The mother, who had lately become a member of the Church of Rome, desired to have the infant restored to her, and a gentleman was prepared to provide for its maintenance, education, and advancement:—Held, that the manager of the home must give the child up to the mother. Reg. v. Barnardo, 58 L. J., Q. B. 522.

Evidence of Father's Wishes.]—A presbyterian makes his will, appointing his brothers, and also a clergyman of the Church of England, guardian to his three infant daughters, and dies, having sent his eldest daughter to his next brother; the three brothers, presbyterians, brought their bill to have the two daughters delivered to them, offering parol evidence that the testator directed and declared he would have his children bred up presbyterians. The court declared no proof out of the will ought to be admitted in the case of a devise of a guardianship any more than in the case of a devise of land. Storke v. Storke, 3 P. Wms. 51.

Mother out of Jurisdiction.]—Infants interested in real estate in England, whose father was dead, were living in charge of their mother, who was resident out of their jurisdiction, and was one of their testamentary guardians. At the instance of their other two guardians an order was made declaring in what faith they ought to be educated. Montagu, In re, Montagu v. Festing, 54 L. J., Ch. 397; 28 Ch. D. 82; 33 W. R. 322.

2. CUSTODY.

a. In General.

Jurisdiction of Court.]—As to the jurisdiction of court over parents with respect to their children. De Manneville v. De Manneville, 10 Ves. 52; 7 R. R. 340.

Court has jurisdiction to prevent parties preaching irreligious doctrines in presence of their children. Id. 10 Ves. 58.

When the custody of an infant is in question the matter rests absolutely on the discretion of the judge, and the interests of the child are primarily to be considered by him. Taylor, In re, 25 W. R. 69.

Right of Father.]—A father has a right to the custody of his daughter up to sixteen. Reg. v. Howes, 3 El. & El. 332; 30 L. J., M. C. 47; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 22. S. C., nom. Barford, Ex parte, 3 L. T. 467; 9 W. R. 99; 8 Cox, C. C. 405.

Guardianship for nurture continues until a child attains the age of fourteen: until that age the child cannot exercise his own choice as to quitting or remaining with his father. Hyde v. Hyde, 29 L. J., P. & M. 150.

The father is by law entitled to the custody of his legitimate children, and semble, that a court of common law has no jurisdiction, under any circumstances, to deprive him of that right. Hakewill, In re, 12 C. B. 223.

The court of common pleas has not any authority to control the right of a father to the possession of his child. Skinner, Ex parte, 9 Moore, 278: 27 R. R. 710.

Nor has the king's bench any such delegated authority. De Manneville v. De Manneville, supra.

—— How Controlled.]—The court of chancery, representing the king as parens patriæ, has jurisdiction to control the right of a father to the possession of his child. Warner, Ex parte, 4 Bro. C. C. 101.

The court of chancery has jurisdiction over the custody of the children of an English subject, though such children were born and are resident abroad. Hope v. Hope, 4 De G. M. & G. 328; 23 L. J., Ch. 682; 2 W. R. 698.

Age of Nurture—Exclusion of Mother.]—The father of a child is entitled to the custody of it, though an infant at the breast of its mother, if the court sees no ground to impute any motive to the father injurious to the health or liberty of such a child, as by sending it out of the kingdom; the father being at the time an alien enemy domiciled in this kingdom, and the mother an Englishwoman. Rex v. De Manneville, 5 East, 221; 1 Smith, 358; 7 R. R. 693.

A father is entitled to the custody of his children, to the exclusion of their mother, although they are within the age of nurture. Rex v. Greenhill, 6 N. & M. 244; 4 A. & E. 624.

When the children are in the custody of the mother, the court will compel her to deliver them to the father, unless it appears that the child would be improperly restrained, or its morals contaminated by the father. Ib.

The father having formed an adulterous connection away from home is not sufficient to warrant the court in refusing to enforce his right to the custody of his children. Ib.

When a child is of years of discretion, though under age, the court will not interfere to place him under the restraint of his father. Ib.

—— Lunatic Mother.]—The court will, under exceptional circumstances, such as the dangerous lunacy and improbable recovery of the mother, order the removal of a child within the age of nurture from her care, notwithstanding the rule established by Reg. v. Birmingham (5 Q. B. 210). Reg. v. Barnet Union, 57 L. J., M. C. 39; 58 L. T. 947; 52 J. P. 611.

Refusal of Wife to Live with Husband.]—A wife left her husband's home without any reasonable cause, taking with her their child. The court ordered the wife forthwith to deliver the child to the father, with liberty to either party to apply in chambers as to access. Constable v. Constable, 34 W. R. 649.

Separation Deed—Habeas Corpus.]—Children ordered to be delivered up by their mother to their father, on habeas corpus, notwithstanding provisions contained in deeds of separation for their residing with their mother. Westmeath's (Lord) Children, Ex parte, Jacob, 251, n.

Removal from Mother's Custody.]—The court will remove a child from the custody of the mother to that of the father, although there is no suggestion that the child is subjected to any improper restraint, nothing showing that the custody of the father is improper. M'Clellan, Ex parte, 1 D. P. C. 81.

Father out of Jurisdiction.]—If a father residing abroad has directed his child to be in custody of a person, not a relative, the child will not, pending an application to him for directions, be removed from the care of her near relatives. Suttor, In re, 2 F. & F. 267.

Duration of.]—Protection in respect of infancy continued after majority, until proper information has been obtained. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 69; 19 R. R. 155.

Right of Guardians.]—Where suit is instituted for administration of infant's estate, court has jurisdiction, and may order him to be delivered up to the guardians. Wright v. Naylor, 5 Madd. 77.

—— Testamentary.] — Testamentary guardians, appointed under 12 Car. 2, c. 24, s. 8, are entitled to the custody of their infant wards. Rex v. Isley, 6 N. & M. 730; 5 A. & E. 441; 2 H. & W. 196; 5 L. J., K. B. 253.

A father having, by will, appointed a guardian of his children, the mother has no right to their custody, though the court may leave them under her care. Talbot v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 4 Myl. & Cr. 672; 4 Jur. 380.

—— Place of Education.]—Guardian's control over infant as to the place of his being educated. Tremain's case, 1 Stra. 168.

The guardian is a proper judge at what school to place his ward. Hall v. Hall, 3 Atk. 721.

Widow—Education of Daughters.]—A mother, who is a widow, allowed to see and visit her children while with their guardians. Semble, she ought also to have some influence as to the mode of educating and bringing up her daughters. Fermor v. Pomfret, 1 Jur. 150.

Recommendation by Testator.]—A father having by will appointed a guardian to his children, with a recommendation that, in the event of their mother's death, they should be placed under the care of two female relations:—Held, that the court was bound to give effect to the recommendation, but not further than might be consistent with preserving to the testamentary guardian the general superintendence and control over the children. Knott v. Cottee, 2 Ph. 192.

A testator by will, having expressed his wish that his deceased wife's sister should take charge of his children:—Held, that unless a case were made against the propriety of the children remaining in charge of the party named in the will, the court would give effect to the directions of the testator. Hartley v. Smith, 10 W. R. 763.

Interference by Court.]—The power of the parent over his child is subordinate to that of the state; therefore, where it appears improper that the father should have the custody of his child, too young to make a choice, the court has a discretionary power in assigning the custody. Blisset's case, Lofft, 748.

Infant above Sixteen—Free Access to Mother restricted.]—A father has a legal right to direct the education and bringing up of his children until they attain the age of twenty-one, even although they are wards of court, and the court will not interfere with him, except (1) where by his moral turpitude he forfeits his rights, or (2) where he has by his conduct abdicated his authority, or (3) where he seeks to remove his children, wards of court, out of the jurisdiction. Agar-Ellis, In re, Agar-Ellis v. Lascelles, 53 L. J., Ch. 10; 24 Ch. D. 317; 50 L. T. 161; 32 W. R. 1—C. A.

A father put restrictions on the intercourse between his daughter, in her seventeenth year, a ward of court, and her mother. The court refused to interfere. Ib.

Grounds for Interference.]—The court has no right to interfere with the course adopted for the education of an infant of tender years by a father who has not misconducted himself. Where a husband and wife have been separated through the misconduct of the wife only, her petition for access to her infant child was dismissed. W——, In re, 5 N. R. 363.

—— Religious.]—A father's authority over his children controlled on the ground of his professing and acting on irreligious and immoral principles. Shelley v. Westbrooke, Jacob, 266; 23 R. R. 47. S. P., Lyons v. Blenkin, Jacob, 267; Wellesley v. Beaufort (Duke), 2 Russ. 1.

A court of equity has no jurisdiction to remove a child from the custody of the father or mother, merely because it would be for the benefit of the child. Curtis, In re, 28 L. J., Ch. 458; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 7 W. R. 474.

The religious opinions, or the poverty of the father, form no ground for removing a child. Ib.

Mere acts of harshness by a father, not such as would be injurious to the health of the children, or the fact of a somewhat passionate temper, will not form grounds for removing the children. Ib.

—— Immorality.]—In the absence of an appointment by a father, the mother surviving him is the guardian for nurture, and entitled to the custody of a legitimate child until it attains the age of fourteen. Moore, In re, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 1.

But the right to the custody of the child may be forfeited by prior immorality, by the want of bona fides in the application to the court to obtain the custody of the child, by its being shown that the parent or guardian has an illegal object in view in obtaining the custody of the child, or that such parent is unfit for discharging the duties of guardian, and that it would not be for the welfare of the child that it should be given into the custody of the parent or guardian. Ib.

But in order to constitute a forfeiture of the right to the custody of the child, the immorality must be of so gross a character that the morals of the child would be seriously endangered. Ib.

Wilful and deliberate lying, together with fraud practised on a charitable society, will cause a forfeiture of the right to the custody of the child. Ib.

—— Adultery.]—The court has no jurisdiction to deprive a father, though living in adultery, of the custody of his child, unless he brings the child in contact with the woman; nor to order him to permit the mother to have access to the child, unless misconduct is shown with reference to the management of the child. Ball v. Ball, 2 Sim. 35.

Before depriving a father of the guardianship of his children, the court must be satisfied that the father has so conducted himself as to render it essential to their safety or welfare, that the father's rights should be interfered with, except in the cases within 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54. Fynn, In re, 2 De G. & S. 457; 13 Jur. 483.

—— Separation Order.]—The court cannot interfere with the rights of a father, unless he renders it essential to the safety and welfare of the children in some serious and important respect, that they should be removed from his custody. Curtis, In re, 28 L. J., Ch. 458; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 7 W. R. 474.

A decree for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty is not in itself sufficient to render him unfit to have the management of them, and the court dismissed the petition of the wife. Ib.

—— Improper Conduct.]—The court will, under circumstances of improper conduct, interfere to prevent a father from interfering in the education, &c., of his son, being a ward of the court. Creuze v. Hunter, 2 Cox, 242; 2 Ves. J. 157; 2 R. R. 38.

The court will take an infant out of his father's care if there is danger of his abusing his parental authority. S. C., 2 Bro. C. C. 500, n.

If it is established that the father is to be considered as guilty of the perpetration of an unnatural crime, it is impossible to permit any sort of intercourse with his children. Anon., 2 Sim. (N.S.) 54.

Reference to Counsel.]—A father claiming from his wife the custody of their child, the court referred it to a barrister to determine as to the proper custody of the child, the wife and the husband consenting to abide by such determination. Rex v. Dobbyn, 4 A. & E. 644, n.

Right of Mother—Habeas Corpus.]—An infant child in the custody of the mother, brought up by habeas corpus at the father's instance:—Ordered, that the child should remain with the mother; the father's access to be regulated by the master. Rex v. Wilson, 4 A. & E. 645, n.

—— Marital Duty.]—In determining whether the custody of an infant ought to be given to the mother, the court will consider the paternal right, the marital duty, and the interest of the child. The marital duty includes the responsibility so to live that the children shall have the benefit of the joint care and affection of both father and mother. In a case where a father had committed a breach of the marital duty as thus defined:—Held, that the mother ought to retain the custody until further order. Elderton, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 258; 25 Ch. D. 220; 50 L. T. 26; 32 W. R. 227; 48 J. P. 341.

—— Drunkenness.]—On the application of a husband in respect of three children, it appeared that the wife had twice left him, taking her children with her, on account of his habitual drunkenness; that on each occasion he agreed that she should maintain and educate the children apart from him; that after the second separation he publicly alleged on oath against his wife charges so injurious that she could not be expected ever to live with him again; that the wife had ample means, while the husband had only a narrow income:—Held, that the wife should retain custody of the children. Smart v. Smart, 61 L. J., P. C. 38; [1892] A. C. 425; 67 L. T. 510; 56 J. P. 676—P. C.

—— Child in School with Mother's Consent.]—The mother, a Roman Catholic, had consented to the child being placed in a Protestant school for destitute children. She had, before being in the infirmary, lived in lodging-houses, had neglected the child, and had lived a drunken and immoral life. The child herself desired to remain in the school:—Held, that the court would not grant a habeas corpus to remove the child. Turner, In re, Turner, Ex parte, 41 L. J., Q. B. 142; 25 L. T. 907.

Destitution.]—The court will interfere with paternal rights only in cases of very gross misconduct. Comparative destitution is not a sufficient ground. Pulbrook, In re, 11 Jur. 185.

Felony.]—When minor's father was obliged to fly the kingdom, and was indicted for felony, the father was not permitted to have the custody. Stewart, In re, Wall. Lyn. 115. And see Bailey, Ex parte, infra, col. 1518.

Wishes of Infant.]—On a question with whom infant should reside, infant's inclination must have weight, where no imputation exists against the person with whom she wishes to reside. Anon., 2 Ves. sen. 374.

An infant at the age of ten being brought up from a school, on habeas corpus, at the instance of her mother, the father being dead, although it was deposed that the child was of intelligence, and wished, on religious grounds, to remain in the school, the court refused to examine the child, holding that a guardian for nurture has a legal right to the custody, irrespectively of the wishes of the ward. Reg. v. Clarke, Race, In re, 7 El. & Bl. 186; 26 L. J., Q. B. 169; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 335; 5 W. R. 222.

—— Infant Maintained by Uncle.]—A rich uncle takes his niece, maintains her, and dies, having left her 10,000*l.* The executor continues to keep his niece. The child (of the age of thirteen) appears in court, and denies she is under any force. The court is of opinion that the father may take his child, but not by force, nor going to or returning from court; and that the father may at all reasonable times have access to his child. Hopkins, Ex parte, 3 P. Wms. 152.

Legacy—Condition as to Education.]—A sum of money being left to an infant, with a direction that her education should be committed to the trustees, and a legacy to the father, on condition of his not interfering in it, the condition enforced by requiring his undertaking not to interfere. Colston v. Morris, Jacob, 257; 6 Madd. 89; 22 R. R. 246.

Removal out of Jurisdiction.]—On the application of a parent residing in India, the court refused to grant a habeas corpus for the removal of a child from the custody of persons here, to whose care it had for a long time been committed, and their custody of the child having been acquiesced in by the parent. Preston, Ex parte, 5 D. & L. 233; 2 B. C. Rep. 169; 17 L. J., Q. B. 21; 11 Jur. 1039.

Proceedings in Scotland.]—When the court had appointed a guardian, and settled a scheme for the education of an infant peer, entitled to estates in England and Scotland, it restrained the tutor dative from continuing proceedings in the court of session relative to the education and residence of the infant. Bute (Marquis) v. Stuart, 2 Giff. 582. Affirmed sub nom. Stuart v. Moore, 4 Macq. H. L. 1; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1129; 4 L. T. 382; 9 W. R. 722.

Wife Absconding.]—A husband, whose wife had absconded with his infant children, applied for an order, that the wife's brother, who had assisted her, and had since transmitted to her the income to which she was entitled, might either produce the children or disclose the place of their concealment. On an affidavit of the brother, that the children were not in his custody or under his control, the order was refused. Spence, In re, 2 Ph. 247; 16 L. J., Ch. 309; 11 Jur. 399.

Maternal Aunt.]—A maternal aunt of an infant, who is possessed of no property, has no legal right to the custody of the infant. Medley, In re, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 84.

Habeas Corpus.]—A habeas corpus was granted for detaining a child under age from her father, and a rule granted for an information nisi. Rex v. Ward, 1 Wm. Bl. 386.

The court will grant a rule absolute in the first instance to bring up the body of an infant, if it is probable that it may be concealed. Glover, Ex parte, 4 D. P. C. 291; 1 H. & W. 508.

The court will grant a habeas corpus in the first instance, to bring up an infant who has absconded from his father, and was detained by a third person without his consent. Pearsom, In re, 4 Moore, 366. And see Rex v. Delaval, 3 Burr. 1434.

The court granted a habeas corpus, at the instance of the father, commanding the mother (from whom the applicant was divorced) and her father to bring the infant into court without any previous demand. Witte, Ex parte, 13 C. B. 680.

—— Felony.]—Where a father has been convicted of felony, the court will grant a habeas corpus in order to give the mother the custody of an infant. Bailey, Ex parte, 6 D. P. C. 311. And see Stewart, In re, ante, col. 1516.

When a child has been traced to the actual or virtual custody of a person who has no legal right to that custody, the court will issue a habeas corpus, at the instance of the person having the legal right to the custody, in order that the child may be brought into court, or that it may be ascertained how the child has been disposed of. Matthews, In re, 12 Ir. C. L. R. 233.

—— What Return Sufficient.]—A return to a writ that a child under fourteen is not detained by or in the custody, power, or possession, or under the care or control of the defendant, or any person employed by him, is insufficient. Reg. v. Roberts, 2 F. & F. 272.

The parties to whom a writ of habeas corpus was addressed, returned that the infant at the time of issuing the writ was over fourteen years of age and under sixteen:—Held, that the application must be refused, as at the age of fourteen a male infant is at liberty to exercise a discretion as to his own place of abode. Connor, In re, 16 Ir. C. L. R. 112.

—— Issued in Vacation.]—A habeas corpus was issued in vacation, and returned in court, for a young lady who had been decoyed away from her father, but desired to continue with him. Rex v. Clerke, 1 Burr. 606.

—— By Testamentary Guardian.]—A person who has been appointed by the will of a father to be guardian, stands in loco parentis, and may, in order to obtain possession, claim a writ of habeas corpus, which a common law court has no discretion to refuse, if the applicant is a fit person, and the child too young to choose for itself. Andrews, In re, L. R. 8 Q. B. 153; 28 L. T. 353; 21 W. R. 480. S. C., nom. Edwards, In re, 42 L. J., Q. B. 99.

—— Enforcement of Order—Serjeant-at-Arms.]—By the terms of a separation deed the father had the right to select a school for the boy, and the boy was to spend a portion of his holidays with his mother. At the end of the holidays the mother refused to give up the boy, and disobeyed two orders obtained by the father directing her to deliver the boy at times and places specified. An ex parte application being made by the father, an order was made directing the serjeant-at-arms attending the court to take the boy into his custody and deliver him to the lady named in the previous orders, at her residence or elsewhere. G. v. L., 60 L. J., Ch. 705; [1891] 3 Ch. 126; 64 L. T. 732; 40 W. R. 10.

—— Welfare of Infant — Jurisdiction of Queen's Bench Division.]—Where an application is made to the queen's bench division by the parent for a writ of habeas corpus for the custody, the court is not, since the Judicature Act, bound, in the absence of misconduct on the part of the parent, to order the child to be delivered up, but may exercise the jurisdiction of the old court of chancery, and inquire whether it is for the welfare of the child that it should be delivered up. The court, under the circumstances, refused to order the child to be delivered up by the person with whom she was living to the custody of the mother. Reg. v. Gyngall, 62 L. J., Q. B. 559; [1893] 2 Q. B. 232; 4 R. 448; 69 L. T. 481; 57 J. P. 773—C. A. S. P., Elliott (an infant), In re, 32 L. R. Ir. 504.

b. Agreements respecting.

Validity of.]—A contract, by which a father deprives himself of all his parental control over his child, is contrary to the policy of the law, and void; and such a contract is valid, if the conduct of the father towards his child is so gross that the court would remove the child from his custody. Swift v. Swift, 34 Beav. 266. Affirmed, 4 De G. J. & S. 710; 34 L. J., Ch. 394; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 458; 12 L. T. 435; 13 W. R. 731.

An agreement by which a father stipulated that the mother of his deceased wife should have the custody of the infant children during three months of every year is bad for want of mutuality, and cannot be enforced. Kennedy v. May, 7 L. T. 819; 11 W. R. 358.

Revocation of.]—If a father consents to his child remaining with another person, he may at any time revoke such consent, and recover possession of his child by a habeas corpus, although such consent was given in consideration of an agreement by such third person to take charge of the child. Reg. v. Smith, 1 B. C. C. 132; 22 L. J., Q. B. 116; 17 Jur. 24; 1 W. R. 130.

Separation — Deed of Compromise.]—A wife intended to proceed in the divorce court for a separation. By a deed of compromise it was agreed that the proceedings should be stayed, that two of the children should remain at such schools as the husband should direct, and that their holidays should be passed at such places as the trustees should direct:—Held, that the agreement as to where the holidays of the children should be passed was reasonable, and would be enforced by the court. Hamilton v. Hector, 40 L. J., Ch. 692; L. R. 6 Ch. 701; 19 W. R. 990.

Effect of.]—A recommendation by letter of the education of infants, with an assurance that the writer was willing to go himself towards its object as far as a certain sum, construed to be a promise to pay that sum for the purpose. Dowell v. Wilson, Coop. t. Brough. 504.

Illegal Agreement.]—On a suit by the father for possession of the children, the lord chancellor made an order for delivery of the children to their father, and a court in France made an order for carrying it out. An agreement was then signed by the wife in France, and by the husband in England, by which it was stipulated that the youngest child should be left with the mother, and that she would facilitate the husband's proceedings for a divorce:—Held (affirming 22 Beav. 351), that, assuming the agreement to be one which was to be judged of by French law, and that it was valid by French law, it would not be enforced here, inasmuch as the stipulations that the youngest child should be delivered to his mother, and that the wife would facilitate the husband's proceedings for a divorce, were contrary to the laws and policy of England. Hope v. Hope, 8 De G. M. & G. 731; 26 L. J., Ch. 417; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 454; 5 W. R. 387. And see Besant, In re, supra, col. 1510.

c. Of Illegitimate Children.

Right of Putative Father.]—Except under special circumstances the putative father is entitled, after the mother's death, to the custody of his illegitimate child, as against a person claiming to have been appointed guardian by its mother, and he is entitled, by any peaceful means to take possession of it, or to resist its being taken from him by others. Kerr, In re, 24 L. R., Ir. 59—C. A.

Right of Mother.]—The mother is entitled to the guardianship of her illegitimate children. Darcy, In re, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 298.

A woman placed her illegitimate child soon after birth with N. and wife, who were labouring people, intending to pay them for it. She was unable to continue her payments, but N. and wife continued to maintain the child till it was nearly seven years old. The mother, who was a kept mistress, did not propose that the child should live with her, but with a respectable married sister, whose husband was in a station superior to that of N.:—Held, that the mother of an illegitimate infant has a natural right to its custody, which will be regarded by the court. Reg. v. Nash, Carey, In re, 52 L. J., Q. B. 442; 10 Q. B. D. 454; 48 L. T. 447; 31 W. R. 420—C. A.

Mixed Marriage — Christian and Mahommedan.]—Where an Englishwoman married a Mahommedan who was already married, and the children, after a separation, remained with their father till his death, the wife sought to obtain the custody of them, contending that they were illegitimate:—Held, that the mother had no absolute right to the custody, and the court held it was best for them to remain in the custody of the guardians whom the father had appointed. Ullee, In re, 54 L. T. 286—C. A.

In the case of the custody of an illegitimate child, regard has always been had in equity to the mother, the putative father, and the relations on the mother's side. Reg. v. Nash (supra) approved.—By the lord chancellor. The law has placed upon the mother of an illegitimate child obligations which bring with them corresponding rights.—By Lord Herschell. The desire of the mother of an illegitimate child as to its custody ought primarily to be considered. Barnardo v. McHugh, 61 L. J., Q. B. 721—H. L. (E.)

In determining who is to have the custody of and control over an illegitimate child, the court, in exercising its jurisdiction with a view to the benefit of the child, will primarily consider the wishes of the mother. Reg. v. Nash (supra) approved.—By Lords Herschell and Field. The authorities do not establish the proposition that the legal rights of the mother of an illegitimate child as to its custody are the same as those of the father of a legitimate child. Barnardo v. McHugh, 65 L. T. 423; [1891] A. C. 388; 40 W. R. 97; 55 J. P. 628—H. L. (E.)

d. Statutory Jurisdiction.

i. Under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54.

Practice.]—The vice-chancellor has jurisdiction, under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, to make orders as to the custody of infants, though the lord chancellor and master of the rolls are alone mentioned in the act. Taylor, In re, 10 Sim. 291 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 399 ; 4 Jur. 983.

Semble, the order may be made ex parte if the necessity of the case so requires. Ib.

If, independently of the act 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, the court can exercise jurisdiction upon the petition of a mother having the custody of her infant child for the continuance of such custody, it may do so, although the petition is intituled in the matter of that act as well as in the matter of the infant. Tomlinson, In re, 3 De G. & Sm. 371.

On what Grounds.]—Principles on which access to a child will be granted or refused to a mother petitioning in a court of equity, under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, discussed. Winsom, In re, 2 H. & M. 540 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 297 ; 13 L. T. 14 ; 13 W. R. 452.

—— Out of Jurisdiction.]—The father of infants before a petition was presented by their mother for access to them, &c., under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, went with them to reside abroad. The court ordered substituted service of the petition, but at the hearing declined to make the order because the father and infants were resident abroad, and because a suit by the mother for restitution of conjugal rights was pending. Taylor, In re, 11 Sim. 178 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 399 ; 4 Jur. 959.

Semble, that where the husband is bonâ fide resident abroad, as the court cannot make an order under this act which could be enforced, it will not interfere. Ib.

The court will not make the order where the wife has left her husband without sufficient cause. Ib.

The court will not make an order under this act, to give the mother access to her children, pending a suit by the wife in the ecclesiastical court for restitution of conjugal rights. Ib.

The vice-chancellor of England has jurisdiction under the act of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54. Ib.

The court has an absolute discretion under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, as against the father or a testamentary guardian, to give the custody of children under seven to the mother. Shillito v. Collett, 8 W. R. 696.

The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, has introduced, as controlling the paternal right to the exclusive custody of his infant child, two considerations, viz. of marital duty to be observed towards the wife, and of the interests of the child to be consulted. But if these two objects can be attained consistently with the father's retaining the custody of the child, his common law paternal right will not be disturbed. Halliday, In re, 17 Jur. 56.

Right of mother to custody of or access to child under seven years of age, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54. Woodward, In re, 17 Jur. 56 ; 1 W. R. 59.

A husband having separated from his wife, took from her their daughter. He subsequently sued for a divorce, but unsuccessfully. The husband continued to live separate from his wife, and went abroad, and placed the child under the charge of his sister, refusing to allow access by the mother to it, on the ground that this was best for the child. His conduct had throughout been very indulgent to his wife and free from blame :—Held, that the court would not interfere with the father's arrangements for the training of the child. Winsom, In re, 2 H. & M. 540 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 297 ; 13 L. T. 14 ; 13 W. R. 452.

Semble, that where a child is resident in a foreign country, it does not follow that an order by the court under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, for access to it by the mother cannot be carried into effect. Ib.

Husband Divorced.] — Where a wife had obtained a sentence of divorce against her husband, the conduct of her husband appeared clearly to render it improper that he should have the custody of a girl eleven years old, the court made an order for the delivery of all the children to the mother, as the effect of the children being brought up in different custodies would be likely to create factions in the family. Warde v. Warde, 2 Ph. 786.

This act has invested the court of chancery with a discretionary power, which by its inherent jurisdiction it did not possess, of interfering with the common law right of a father to the custody of his children, such power varying according as the children are under or above seven years of age. Ib.

Provision for Education.]—Conduct showing the father to be a person to whose guardianship it would be very objectionable to entrust children :—Held, sufficient ground for depriving him of their custody, and for providing for their maintenance and education, where such a provision can be effectually secured. Fynn, In re, 2 De G. & Sm. 457 ; 13 Jur. 483.

But where the only security proposed was a deed of covenant of the infant's mother-in-law to provide for the maintenance and education of the children for life :—Held, that such conduct was not sufficient to enable the court to interfere. Ib.

Although the circumstance of the children being in the custody of the mother excludes the operation of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, the provisions of that act are to be regarded in considering an application by her to retain such custody, and to restrain the father from interfering with it. Ib.

When Granted.]—It is not necessary in order to enable the mother to apply under this act for the custody of her child that she should have obtained, or be entitled to obtain, a divorce à mensâ et thoro. Bartlett, Ex parte, 2 Coll. C. C. 661 ; 15 Jur. 418.

Where the mother of an infant under seven years of age, and having custody of it, is living separate from the father, and has a good defence to a suit by him for restitution of conjugal rights, the court may make an order continuing to the mother the custody, such a case being within the equity of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54. Tomlinson, In re, 3 De G. & S. 371.

When already in Mother's Custody.]—Where the children were in the custody of the mother, semble—that 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, does not enable her to resist the father's right to have them delivered over to him. Corsellis v. Corsellis, 1 Dr. & War. 235.

ii. Under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 86, s. 9.

In General.]—The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 86, s. 9, has given the court the widest discretion to weigh the comparative advantages or disadvantages of giving the custody of all or any of the children to the one parent or to the other, and no general rule can be laid down. It is the duty of the court to consider all the circumstances of the particular case. Symington v. Symington, L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 415.

Where there appears to be no continuance of immorality, and the husband is attached to his children, and engaged in a profitable business, an order which should take from him the custody of his sons would not be conducive to their future welfare. It is a different matter with regard to the daughters. Their mother, against whom nothing has been proved, is the natural person to have their custody. Ib.

iii. Under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 12.

Jurisdiction.]—Since the passing of the Judicature Act, 1873, the courts of common law have concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of equity with regard to the care and custody of infants; but, in the exercise of that jurisdiction, the rules of equity are to prevail. Goldsworthy, In re, 46 L. J., Q. B. 187; 2 Q. B. D. 75.

When the custody of an infant is in question the matter rests absolutely on the discretion of the judge, and the interests of the child are primarily to be considered by him. Taylor, In re, 25 W. R. 69.

Primâ Facie Right of Father.] — The court must be satisfied that he has so conducted himself, or placed himself in such a position, as to render it essential to their safety or welfare in some very serious and important respect that the father's rights should be interfered with. Goldsworthy, In re, supra.

Mere incontinence, or a habit of intemperance, will not of itself justify the interference of the court. Ib.

The discretion of the court as to the custody of an infant is exercised in accordance with the rules of equity under s. 25, sub-s. 10, of the Judicature Act, 1873. One of these rules is incorporated under s. 1 of 36 Vict. c. 12, empowering the court to grant the custody of infants under sixteen to the mother. Evidence that proceedings against the father for bigamy have failed will not compel the court to restore to the father the custody of his child. Brown, In re, or Rowe, In re, Rowe v. Smith, 13 Q. B. D. 614; 51 L. T. 793; 33 W. R. 79.

When given to the Mother.]—A husband having abandoned his wife and kidnapped the only child, and being co-respondent in a pending divorce action charging him with adultery, the court, upon the wife's petition, ordered immediate delivery of the child to her, with liberty of access by the father and paternal grandparents, and liberty to apply as to the maintenance and education of the child on his attaining seven years. Taylor, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 399; 4 Ch. D. 157; 36 L. T. 169; 25 W. R. 69.

Order for, "Until Further Order"—Application to Vary.]—When an order is made under s. 1 of the Infants Custody Act, 1873, "until further order," an application to vary the order should be made by motion before the judge of first instance. Such a motion can be made by the respondent to the original petition. The provision of s. 1 applies only to the original petition. Holt, In re, 16 Ch. D. 115; 29 W. R. 341—C. A.

Separation Deed—Religious Education.]—The words "custody or control," in s. 2 of the Infants Custody Act, 1873, comprise all the rights which a father has over his children, including that of directing their religious education. The father, a Roman Catholic, married the mother, a Protestant. A separation deed was executed, containing a declaration that the wife should have the absolute custody and control of the infant until the deed should be mutually put an end to and revoked by the parties. The father had not seen the child for three years and a half. An order had been made in an action to administer the trusts of the separation deed. The father was without means to maintain the child:—Held, that it was for the benefit of the infant to give effect to the agreement in the separation deed; and that it should be enforced accordingly. Condon v. Vollum, 57 L. T. 154.

Court can set aside Covenant in Separation Deed.]—By a covenant in a separation deed executed after the passing of the Infants Custody Act, 1873, a father agreed that his infant daughter should remain in her mother's custody during eleven months in each year. The mother promulgated atheistical opinions, and refused to allow the child to receive any religious instruction. She also published an obscene book. The child was made a ward of court:—Held, that to bring up the child in the religion of her father was a duty which the court owed to its ward, and was unaffected by the covenant in the separation deed; and also that the refusal of religious instruction to the child and the publication of the obscene book were sufficient grounds for removing her from the custody of the mother. Besant, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 497; 11 Ch. D. 508; 40 L. T. 469; 27 W. R. 741—C.A.

iv. Under 49 & 50 Vict. c. 27.

Appointment by Mother—Confirmation by the Court.]—Under s. 3, sub-s. 2, of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, the appointment by the mother of guardians should be in form an appointment of guardians "jointly with the father" of the infant; and upon an application under that sub-section, after the death of the mother, to confirm the appointment, the court can make an order under the act in that form only. The court, on such an application, is bound to consider whether the guardians so appointed are proper persons. G. (an infant), In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 490; [1892] 1 Ch. 292; 66 L. T. 336.

Rights of Father—Misconduct.]—The position of father and mother in respect of the custody of their children is materially altered by s. 5 of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886. A. and B. (infants), In re, 66 L. J., Ch. 592; [1897] 1 Ch. 786—C. A.

The court has, with reference to the custody of and access to children, a wide discretion under that section, which must be exercised subject to the requirements of the section. Ib.

The court can deprive a father of the custody of his children although he may not have acted in such a way as would have forfeited his rights under the old law. Ib.

The court can make an order in favour of a mother, although she has been guilty of misconduct, in cases where both father and mother are equally guilty. Ib.

Judicial Separation—Effect of Order.]—The wife petitioned for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty; and she also prayed that the court would append to the decree a declaration that the respondent was a person unfit to have the custody of the children of the marriage. The court found that the respondent was a person unfit to have the custody of the children:—Held, that the effect, under s. 7 of the act of 1886, was to put upon him the onus of affirmatively proving himself to be a reformed character, and fit to be intrusted with the children's custody. Webley v. Webley, 64 L. T. 839.

Divorce—Jurisdiction of Chancery Division.]—A divorce decree was made on the ground of the wife's adultery; and by the decree nisi it was ordered that the infant child should remain in the custody of the petitioner until further order. A summons was taken out by the mother in the chancery division asking for an order for access to the child:—Held, that the divorce court had full power to make orders as to access, and that, whether there was also a discretionary power in the chancery division or not, it would not be exercised when an order dealing with the matter had already been made by the divorce court. Manders v. Manders, 63 L. T. 627.

Misconduct of Father—No Limit as to Age.]—Where a mother applied by petition to the court for the custody of her boy, aged ten years, on the ground of the misconduct of the father:—Held, that under s. 5 of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, the court had jurisdiction to make such order as it might think fit regarding custody and access, having regard to the welfare of the infant, and to the wishes as well of the mother as of the father. The court has jurisdiction to order the delivery of the infant to the custody of its mother, without fixing any limit of age. Witten, In re, 57 L. T. 336.

Declaration as to Unfitness of Guilty Parent—Divorce.]—The court appended to its decree for judicial separation, granted upon the ground of gross misconduct on the husband's part, a declaration, in terms of s. 7 of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, that he was a person unfit to have the custody of the child, notwithstanding evidence that the father was very fond of the child and had never been cruel to her. Webley v. Webley, supra, approved. Hitchings v. Hitchings, 67 L. T. 530.

The court appended to a decree nisi for adultery and cruelty an order under s. 7 of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, declaring the respondent, who did not appear to oppose the application, an unfit person to have the custody of the children. Skinner v. Skinner, 57 L. J., P. 104; 13 P. D. 90; 58 L. T. 923; 36 W. R. 912; 52 J. P. 406.

Application to Rescind or Vary Order—Unfitness of Mother—Custody given to Father.]—A decree for dissolution of marriage having been made on the ground of the husband's adultery and cruelty, the custody of the children was given to the petitioner, and the respondent was ordered to pay the petitioner for her maintenance. Subsequently the respondent applied to rescind or vary the order, and it was shown that the petitioner was no longer a fit person to have charge of her daughter. The court made an order transferring the custody of the daughter to the father, who had married again and was shown to be leading a respectable life. Witt v. Witt, 60 L. J., P. 63; [1891] P. 163; 64 L. T. 121; 39 W. R. 432; 55 J. P. 184.

A. IN GENERAL.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

Origin and extent of jurisdiction by injunction. Goodeson v. Gallatin, Dick. 455.

Principles which regulate the exercise of the jurisdiction by injunction. Spottiswoode v. Clarke, 2 Ph. 154; 1 Coop. C. C. 254; 10 Jur. 1043.

Injury to Strangers.]—In granting an injunction the court is bound to consider the amount of injury which may be thereby inflicted on strangers to the suit and third parties. Maythorn v. Palmer, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 230; 11 L. T. 261; 13 W. R. 37.

Sufficiency of the Remedy by Damages.]—The grant of an injunction to restrain a person from doing a particular thing is an act dependent on the discretion of the court, and in exercising that discretion a court of equity will consider whether the doing of the thing sought to be restrained must produce an injury to the party seeking the injunction; whether that injury can be remedied or atoned for, and, if capable of being atoned for by damages, whether those damages must be sought in successive suits, or could be obtained once for all. Doherty v. Allman, 3 App. Cas. 709; 39 L. T. 129; 26 W. R. 513. See also Cooke v. Forbes, 37 L. J., Ch. 178; L. R. 5 Eq. 166; 17 L. T. 371; and Dollfus v. Pickford, 1 W. R. 220—L. JJ.

Landlord and Tenant.]—Whether, even where a lease gives no right of re-entry, the court, seeing a gross case of waste and breach of covenant, not to be indemnified by damages, would leave the tenant to law, refusing relief, quære. Gourlay v. Somerset (Duke), 1 Ves. & B. 68; 13 R. R. 234.

On Ground not put forward by Plaintiff.]—Where an injunction is applied for upon a distinct ground which fails, it will not in general be granted upon another ground which has not been put forward, but which it appears might have been put forward in the circumstances of the case. Castelli v. Cook, 7 Hare, 98; 18 L. J., Ch. 148; 13 Jur. 675.

Plaintiff Suing at instigation of Trade Rival of Defendant.]—A plaintiff filed a bill, on behalf of himself and other shareholders in a railway company, to restrain the directors committing a breach of trust. It appeared that he was suing at the instigation of another rival company:—Held, that this circumstance was not of itself sufficient to prevent him obtaining a special injunction on the merits of the case. Colman v. Eastern Counties Ry., 10 Beav. 1; 16 L. J., Ch. 73; 11 Jur. 74.

Undertaking equivalent to Injunction.]—An undertaking entered into with a court of equity is equivalent to, and will have the effect of, an injunction, so far that any infringement thereof may be made the subject of an application to the court. London & Birmingham Ry. v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 1 Railw. Cas. 224.

Applicant must make Primâ Facie Case.]—On a motion for an injunction as to a matter merely pecuniary, the plaintiff cannot succeed without satisfying the court, not merely that there is a case to be tried, but that there is some probability of the bill not being dismissed at the hearing. Att.-Gen. v. Wigan Corporation, 5 De G. M. & G. 52; 23 L. J., Ch. 429; 18 Jur. 299; 1 W. R. 203.

Breach of Contract—Parties.]—In a suit for an injunction to prevent a violation of an agreement, the persons alleged to have made the agreement must be parties. Landed Estates Investment Co. v. Weeding, 21 L. T. 384; 18 W. R. 35.

—— Stipulation for Liquidated Damages.]—The court has a discretion to restrain a breach of covenant, though there is a further covenant for payment of 100*l.* as liquidated damages for such breach. Cole v. Sims, 23 L. J., Ch. 258; 1 W. R. 151.

—— Injunction as of Right.]—Where the construction of a contract is clear, and the breach clear, it is not a question of damage; but the mere circumstance of the breach of contract affords sufficient ground for the court to interfere by injunction. Tipping v. Eckersley, 2 K. & J. 264.

Defendant claiming Right to commit Breach.]—Semble, the court may so interfere, whether the breach has or has not actually been committed, provided the defendant claims and insists on a right to do the act which would constitute such breach. Ib.

A defendant who had failed in an action brought against him at law by the plaintiff, for the infringement of a trade mark, but who persisted in asserting his right to continue the infringement, perpetually restrained, and ordered to pay all the costs of the action at law, and of the suit. Farina v. Silverlock, 4 K. & J. 650.

Where Specific Performance impossible.]—The court will not interfere by injunction to restrain the breach of a contract for the sale and delivery of chattels which it could not specifically perform. Fothergill v. Rowland, 43 L. J., Ch. 252; L. R. 17 Eq. 132; 29 L. T. 414; 22 W. R. 42. See also Baldwin v. Society for Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, 9 Sim. 393.

Ambiguous Agreement.] — Where a party agrees not to do a particular act, and there are other terms in the agreement, which are so vague that the court connot enforce them, it will not grant an injunction to restrain the breach of the negative term. Kimberley v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340.

Vendor and Purchaser—Purchaser Disabling himself from Completing.]—A vendor of land is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the purchaser from buying another estate, on the ground that to do so will incapacitate him from completing his first purchase. Syers v. Brighton Brewery Co., 11 L. T. 560; 13 W. R. 220.

Wrongful Dismissal no Ground for Injunction.]—In the case of a contract for personal service, even when an agent has been wrongfully dismissed by his employers, the court, having no power to compel the agent to fulfil his duties, cannot interfere, by way of injunction, in his favour. Mair v. Himalayan Tea Co., L. R. 1 Eq. 411; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1013; 13 L. T. 586; 14 W. R. 165.

Removal of Nuisance, allowing Time for.]—When a plaintiff has proved his right to an injunction against a nuisance or other injury, the court will not inquire in what way the defendant can best remove it. The plaintiff is entitled to an injunction at once, unless the removal of the injury is physically impossible; and it is the duty of the defendant to find his own way out of the difficulty, whatever inconvenience or expense it may put him to. Att.-Gen. v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, L. R. 4 Ch. 146; 19 L. T. 708; 17 W. R. 240. And see Kentes v. Holywell Ry., 28 L. T. 183.

But when the difficulty of removing the injury is great, the court will suspend the operation of the injunction for a time with liberty to the defendant to apply for an extension of time. Ib.

In such a case a reference before the decree to an expert under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 42, as to the existence of the injury, or as to the best mode of removing it, is improper. Ib.

Party taking Advantage of his own Wrong.]—The court will interfere by injunction to prevent a party availing himself in any manner of a title arising out of a violation of right, or breach of contract or confidence. Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Mac. & G. 25; 1 Hall. & Tw. 1; 18 L. J., Ch. 120; 13 Jur. 109.

The cases in which the court refuses to interfere by injunction until the legal right is established at law, have no application to cases in which the court exercises an original and independent jurisdiction to prevent a wrong arising from a violation of right, or breach of contract or confidence. Ib.

Execution of Statutory Powers.]—The court ought not, by granting an injunction, indirectly to order the carrying into execution of the powers of an act of parliament. If it can make such order it should make it directly. Att-Gen. v. Dorking Union, 51 L. J., Ch. 585; 20 Ch. D., 595; 46 L. T. 573; 30 W. R. 579—C. A.

Statutory Remedy.]—The court of chancery will not entertain a suit to enforce making or repairing railway accommodation works, unless recourse has been had in the first instance to justices, where by act of parliament they have jurisdiction in the matter. Hood v. North-Eastern Ry., 40 L. J., Ch. 17; L. R. 11 Eq. 116; 23 L. T. 433; 19 W. R. 266.

It is a settled rule that if a statute creates a new right and gives a particular remedy for enforcing it, there is no other remedy. But there are two exceptions to this rule—(1) The ancillary remedy in equity by injunction to protect a right; that is, a mode of preventing that being done which if done would be an offence. (2) The remedy created by s. 25, sub-s. 8, of the Judicature Act. Cooper v. Whittingham, 49 L. J., Ch. 752; 15 Ch. D. 501; 43 L. T. 16; 28 W. R. 720.

To Prevent Person from Permitting Nuisance beyond his Control.]—Semble, it would be wrong to enjoin a company or an individual from permitting that to be done which is really beyond his control—not beyond his control in this sense, that there is a vis major or an act of God paramount—but beyond his control in the sense that he cannot by any precaution or by any works with reasonable certainty prevent that happening which all contemplate as likely to happen. Evans v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Ry., 57 L. J., Ch. 153; 36 Ch. D. 639; 57 L. T. 198; 36 W. R. 331.

Slight present Injury—Future Damage.]—In an action to restrain the obstruction of ancient lights, where the right of the plaintiff to relief rests mainly upon damage not suffered at the time, but likely to accrue within a reasonable time, the court will nevertheless grant an injunction to enforce that right, and will not give compensation by way of damages. In cases of this character the possible future application of a plaintiff's premises must be considered in granting an injunction or directing an inquiry as to damages. Dicker v. Popham, 63 L. T. 379.

Assuming Business Name—Damnum absque injuria.]—The short address "Street, London," was used for many years in sending telegrams from abroad to Street & Co., of Cornhill. A bank adopted by arrangement with the post-office the phrase "Street, London," as a cypher address for telegrams from abroad to themselves: —Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction restraining the bank from using such address, as there was no attempt to interfere with trade, no legal injury done, but simply inconvenience. Street v. Union Bank of Spain and England, 55 L. J., Ch. 31; 30 Ch. D. 156; 53 L. T. 262; 33 W. R. 901.

Evidence of Public Body—Effect of.]—Where a public body is, under an act of parliament, entrusted with powers and duties for a public purpose, the court will give credit to them as being the best judges of what they want for that purpose. Att.-Gen. v. Great Eastern Ry., L. R. 6 Ch. 572; 19 W. R. 788.

A railway company was restrained from taking a large quantity of water for the use of their station from a river under the control of conservators, credit being given to the evidence on their part that taking such water would impede the navigation, against the evidence on the part of the company that taking such water would produce no appreciable effect. Ib.

Applicant in Default—Stage-Coach Licensing Acts.]—The court granted an injunction to restrain a party from using on his omnibus the same words and devices, being a colourable imitation of those used by the plaintiffs, and held that the not having complied with the requisites of the stage-coach licensing acts, which were merely fiscal, did not preclude the right to sue. Knott v. Morgan, 2 Keen, 213.

Plaintiff Threatened with Action, to which he has a good Defence—Perpetuating Testimony.]—In an action by underwriters for an injunction to restrain policy-holders from taking any proceedings with reference to a policy of insurance, on the ground that the underwriters had an admittedly good defence to any action that might be brought on such policy, and that the evidence in support of that defence might be lost if the underwriters were not sued at once:—Held, that the plaintiffs' proper remedy was by an action to perpetuate testimony, and that an injunction ought not to be granted. Brooking v. Maudslay, 57 L. J., Ch. 1001; 38 Ch. D. 636; 58 L. T. 852; 36 W. R. 664; 6 Asp. M. C. 296.

Water Company withholding Water—Dispute as to Annual Value.]—Although the statutory remedy provided by s. 68 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, for the settlement by two justices of disputes as to the annual value of a tenement supplied with water, and the special remedy by penalties given by s. 43 against a company for withholding water, have not ousted the general jurisdiction to restrain the company by injunction from cutting off the supply of water pending proceedings for settling a dispute as to value, such injunction will not be granted on the application of an owner or occupier who will not undertake to commence proceedings with due speed before the justices under s. 68. Hayward v. East London Waterworks Co., 54 L. J., Ch. 523; 28 Ch. D. 138; 52 L. T. 175.

Stage Carriage—Use of Manager's Name.]—The plaintiff, as manager of an omnibus company, became, under the provisions of the statutes and rules for the regulation of metropolitan stage-carriages, the licensee of their vehicles. Having ceased to be such manager:—Held, that he was entitled to an injunction to restrain the company from continuing to use his name upon the number plates affixed to their carriages. Hodges v. London Tramways Omnibus Co., 12 Q. B. D. 105; 50 L. T. 262; 32 W. R. 616.

Nuisance—Reasonable Use of Property.]—It is not a sufficient defence to an action for an injunction to restrain a nuisance to prove that the nuisance is caused by a perfectly reasonable use of defendant's property. Reinhardt v. Mentasti, 58 L. J., Ch. 787; 42 Ch. D. 685; 61 L. T. 328; 38 W. R. 10.

The defendant, who was a hotel proprietor, placed in his kitchen and used in the course of his business a large cooking range, with a shaft for hot air, which interfered with the comfort of the plaintiff's house by overheating his wine cellar:—Held, that although the use by the defendant of the range and shaft was perfectly reasonable, the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to restrain the nuisance caused thereby to him. Broder v. Saillard (2 Ch. D. 692) followed. Ib.

Application to Parliament—Jurisdiction.]—The court has no jurisdiction to restrain a railway company from applying to parliament for an act giving them new powers, and repealing restrictions contained in an act they have already obtained. Steele v. North Metropolitan Ry., 15 L. T. 561.

Though it is clear that the court, by means of its jurisdiction in personam, can restrain an application to parliament for a private act, it is almost impossible to conceive a case in which that jurisdiction would be exercised. Injunction which had been granted by Stuart, V.-C., to restrain from further promoting a bill in parliament, dissolved on appeal. Hartridge and Allender, Ex parte, L. C. & D. Ry., Ex parte, 20 L. T. 718; 17 W. R. 946—L. JJ.

Railway Company—Dispute as to Possession of Line—Account.]—Disputes having arisen between a railway company and a contractor employed in making the railway, the company insisting upon a right under the contract, owing to the alleged default of the contractor, to discharge him, take possession of the line and materials, and complete the works themselves; and the contractor resisting such claim, imputing the backward state of the works to the acts of the company, and holding forcible possession; collisions occurring between the workmen of the two parties, each being charged with impeding the operations of the other, and the completion and opening of the railway for traffic being in the meantime delayed, the court, on the application of the company, restrained the contractor from continuing on the line, or interfering with the operations of the company; directed an account of what was due to the contractor for works and materials done and provided, without regard to the formal certificates of the company's engineer, and an issue to try whether the company, at the time they proceeded to enter upon the works and remove the contractor, were lawfully justified in so doing; reserving as well the question of the right of the contractor to compensation for loss of profit on unexecuted works, as all other directions, until after the trial and the report. East Lancashire Ry. v. Hattersley, 8 Hare, 72.

Injunction Granted though not Asked for.]—At the hearing an injunction may be granted, although not prayed for by the bill. Reynell v. Sprye, 1 De G. M. & G. 660; 21 L. J., Ch. 633.

Contract for Personal Service — Contract by Telegraph Company to Supply Tape-recording Instruments.]—Held, that, although, under the circumstances of the case, there had been breaches by the defendants of two contracts, the plaintiff was entitled to damages only, and not to an injunction, the contracts being for personal service in reference to a chattel. Cochrane v. Exchange Telegraph Co., 65 L. J., Ch. 334.

The defendant had agreed to act as servant to the plaintiff, and to no other person, for seven years, with power to either party to determine the agreement on payment of 500*l*. Defendant having engaged himself to another master, Wood, V.-C., granted an injunction, which the L.JJ. dissolved on the defendant bringing into court 600*l*. Thornton v. Kendall, 1 N. R. 391; 11 W. R. 352—L. JJ.

—— Stipulation not to Dismiss—Stipulation Negative in Form but Positive in Substance.]—A stipulation in an agreement for service between a carrier and his manager, that the former would not require the latter to leave his employ and determine their agreement, though negative in form, is positive and affirmative in substance, and cannot be enforced by injunction. Davis v. Foreman, 64 L. J., Ch. 187; [1894] 3 Ch. 654; 8 R. 725; 43 W. R. 168.

—— Absence of Negative Stipulation.]—The defendant agreed to become manager of the plaintiff company's works for a certain period, and during that period to "give the whole of his time to the company's business." The agreement was wholly affirmative, and contained no express stipulation that the defendant should not do any particular thing. He being about to set up and become a director of a rival company:—Held, that, there being no negative stipulation in the agreement restraining the defendant from so doing, the court could not grant an injunction. Montague v. Flockton (L. R. 16 Eq. 189) commented on. Whitwood Chemical Co. v. Hardman, 60 L. J., Ch. 428; [1891] 2 Ch. 416; 64 L. T. 716; 39 W. R. 433—C. A.

—— Theatrical Engagement—Contract to Act with a Company for a certain Period—Stipulation against Acting elsewhere.]—Defendant, an actor, agreed with plaintiff, a theatrical manager, to act and to understudy as a member of plaintiff's company on tour in America for twenty-five weeks, or longer if required, but not more than forty weeks, subject to certain rules, by one of which no member of the company was allowed to act at any other theatre without permission. Shortly after the beginning of the tour plaintiff produced a play in America, in which defendant was not given a part to act, but was called on to understudy. A week later defendant wrote asking plaintiff to cancel the engagement, and this being refused defendant returned to England, and entered into an engagement and acted at a theatre in London. Defendant alleged in his affidavit that plaintiff had verbally promised that defendant should perform in certain parts, but had not kept such promise. On an application for an injunction to restrain defendant from acting at any theatre other than where plaintiff's company played:—Held, that the negative stipulation against acting elsewhere could be enforced by injunction, that the alleged verbal promise could not, in the absence of any circumstances showing want of good faith on plaintiff's part, be considered in construing the contract, that the allotting of parts to defendant was no part of the consideration, that plaintiff had not failed to carry out his part of the contract, and an injunction ought to be granted. Fechter v. Montgomery (33 Beav. 22) distinguished. Grimston v. Cuningham, [1894] 1 Q. B. 125.

Where an actor agreed to act for a certain time at a certain theatre, and not elsewhere:—Held, that the court could not enforce the positive part of the contract, and therefore would not restrain a breach of the negative part. Kemble v. Kean, 6 Sim. 333.

Injunction granted to restrain an actor from playing during the ordinary hours of performance at any other theatre than that at which he has agreed to perform exclusively during the time specified in the agreement. Webster v. Dillon, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 432; 5 W. R. 867.

Agreement to Serve as Manager in Business—Discretion of Court.]—Where in breach of an agreement by the defendant to serve the plaintiff for fourteen years as manager of his business (which agreement contained no express negative covenants), the defendant left the plaintiff, and started a similar business a few doors off:—Held, that the court had power to grant an injunction, but that the power was discretionary, and the case was not one for its exercise. Jackson v. Astley, 1 Cab. & E. 181.

See also cases sub tit. CONTRACT.

—— Agreement by Employed to "Act Exclusively for" Employers—Absence of Negative Covenant—Breach—Injunction.]—In a contract of personal service a stipulation by the employed to "act exclusively for" his employers does not, in the absence of a negative covenant, express or implied, which is sufficiently clear and definite, confer upon the employers a right to obtain an injunction against the employed to restrain him from entering into the employment of other persons. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. v. New York Life Insurance Co. and Harvey, 75 L. T. 528—C. A.

Restrictive Covenant—Occupier with Notice of.]—The owners of the freehold reversion in a house sued A. and his son B. to restrain them from using the house in such a way as to break a restrictive covenant contained in a lease of it granted by the plaintiff's predecessor in title. The house was vested in B. for a term under an underlease which had been assigned to him. It was not shown that A. had any estate legal or equitable in the house, but there was evidence to show that he was in substance managing the business carried on there in which B. took part: —Held, that the evidence showed A. to be in joint or sole occupation of the house, and to be managing the business in it with notice of the covenants, and that even if he was nothing more than a mere occupier he was liable to an injunction to restrain him from using the house in a way forbidden by the restrictive covenants. Mander v. Falcke, [1891] 2 Ch. 554; 65 L. T. 203—C. A.

—— Implied Prohibition.] — An injunction will be granted to restrain an act which is not expressly, but only impliedly, forbidden by a restrictive covenant. Hall v. Box, 18 W. R. 820.

Specific Performance of Contract—Threat to Cut off Telephone Wires.]—Where a company agreed to "erect and maintain in working order" certain telephone wires and apparatus, and threatened to cut off the communication, an injunction was granted to restrain the company from so doing. Keith, Prowse & Co. v. National Telephone Co., 63 L. J., Ch. 373; [1894] 2 Ch. 147; 8 R. 776; 70 L. T. 276; 42 W. R. 380; 58 J. P. 573.

Dissenting Chapel.]—Injunction granted to restrain trustees of a presbyterian chapel erected for religious worship in accordance with the doctrines of the church of Scotland from electing as minister a person not duly licensed by that church; but refused to restrain them from allowing persons not so licensed to officiate prior to the election. Milligan v. Mitchell, 1 Myl. & K. 446.

Against Trustee Guilty of Breach of Trust.]—Trustees of a marriage settlement, without power to lay out in land, purchased copyholds to be held on trusts as nearly as possible corresponding with the trusts of the settlement. The husband laid out money on the copyholds, and became bankrupt, and the trustees neglected to prove in respect of part of the fund which he had covenanted to pay. The surviving trustee proposing to sell the copyholds under a power in the deed executed on the purchase, motion granted for injunction to restrain his interference with the property, and for payment into court of the sum due on the husband's covenant. Wiles v. Gresham, 1 W. R. 514.

Pauper Defendant—Inadequacy of Remedy in Damages.] — Injunction granted to restrain a pauper defendant from committing acts of trespass, on the ground that a right of action for damages against a pauper did not constitute an adequate remedy. Hodgson v. Duce, 4 W. R. 576.

Nuisance—Award.] — To establish the existence of a nuisance, an award is of no less value (if the court thinks the party well advised in going to arbitration) than a verdict. Broadbent v. Imperial Gas Co., 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1132. Affirmed, 26 L. J., Ch. 276; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 221; 5 W. R. 272.

Gas Company—Public Policy.] — Arguments from the inconvenience of preventing a gas company from carrying on their manufacture have no weight against a plaintiff who has established a clear case of nuisance. Ib.

While Appeal Pending.]—Injunction to restrain the infringement of a patent granted, notwithstanding that the defendant had got leave to appeal, to a patentee who had obtained a verdict at law. Lister v. Leather, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 433; 5 W. R. 550.

Breach of Statutory Prohibition.]— Where a statute contains an express prohibition on one railway company, introduced for the benefit of another, the court is bound to enforce the prohibition by injunction, though inconvenience to the public will probably result, and though it is doubtful whether the applicants will derive any benefit. Cromford, &c., Ry. v. Stockport, &c., Ry., 3 Jur. (N.S.) 628; 5 W. R. 636.

Railway Company—Sale of Plant of Defaulting Contractor.]—A company will be restrained by injunction from selling plant belonging to a contractor who has made default, where it has power in that case to take possession of the plant at a valuation, and to allow it in account with the contractor, and has also power to use it in the construction of the line, unless it appears that there is a balance of account actually due from the contractor. Garrett v. Salisbury and Dorset Junction Ry., L. R. 2 Eq. 358; 14 W. R. 816.

Property Acquired with Notice of Prior Contract as to its Use.]—Where property, either immovable or movable, is disposed of, with notice of a prior contract entered into by the person disposing of it for its use in a particular manner, the person taking it with such notice may be restrained from using it otherwise. De Mattos v. Gibson, 4 De G. & J. 276.

Discretion of Court—Right to Proceed after Offer of Undertaking.]—The granting of an injunction in a patent action is a matter of discretion, and it will not be granted where the defendant has offered an undertaking which will protect the plaintiff. The plaintiff has a right to have the undertaking given in court. Jenkins v. Hope, 65 L. J., Ch. 249; [1896] 1 Ch. 278; 73 L. T. 705; 44 W. R. 358.

2. Materiality of Damage.

Possible and Actual Use of Premises Regarded.] —In considering the injury caused by acts of trespass, the possible as well as the actual use of the injured premises will be regarded. Ardley v. St. Pancras Union, 39 L. J., Ch. 871.

Amount of Damage should be Considered—Reversioner.] —In considering whether an injunction should be granted, the amount of the injury sustained is material. Where a reversioner's possessory rights are being seriously injured by an act for which he would obtain very trifling damages at law, an injunction, being his only adequate remedy, may be granted.

Cooper v. Crabtree, 51 L. J., Ch. 544 ; 20 Ch. D. 589 ; 47 L. T. 5 ; 30 W. R. 649—C. A.

Injunction refused where no irreparable injury was shown. Southampton (Lord) v. Birmingham Ry., 2 Jur. 1012. North Union Ry. v. Bolton and Preston Ry., 3 Railw. Cas. 345. Shrewsbury and Birmingham Ry. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 3 Macn. & G. 70 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 90 ; 14 Jur. 1125. Sainter v. Ferguson, 1 Macn. & G. 286 ; 1 H. & Tw. 383 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 170 ; 14 Jur. 255. Hilton v. Granville (Lord), 4 Beav. 130 ; Cr. & P. 283 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 398.

In cases of trespass, under colour of title, where the mischief apprehended is irreparable, a court of equity will grant an injunction ; and whether the mischief be irreparable or not, it will by decree, if not by order, upon motion, extend the jurisdiction of preventive justice to all cases of trespass in which damages would be an inadequate and uncertain remedy, and the protection of the right in specie the only mode of doing complete justice. North Union Ry. v. Bolton and Preston Ry., 3 Railw. Cas. 345.

What kind of Damage Necessary.]—Except in a case of irreparable damage, or of substantial damage, or, semble, of continuous damage, a court of equity will not interfere by injunction, unless the acts complained of are done under a claim of right. Martin v. Douglas, 16 W. R. 268.

Where Injunction would do Irreparable Damage.]—The court will not grant an injunction to restrain parties from proceeding to deal with property whose right, if it exists, depends upon the construction of a doubtful statute, where the granting of the injunction would for ever deprive them of an opportunity of exercising the right, especially if no irreparable mischief is to be apprehended from allowing them to proceed. Att.-Gen. v. Liverpool Corporation, 1 Myl. & C. 171.

Substantial Damage must be Shown.]—The plaintiff must satisfy the court that he has sustained substantial damage from the violation of a legal right to entitle him to an injunction. Holyoake v. Shrewsbury and Birmingham Ry., 5 Railw. Cas. 421.

Trivial Trespasses.]—The court will not interfere to prevent trivial trespasses. Saunders v. Smith, 3 Myl. & C. 711 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 227 ; 2 Jur. 491.

Trivial Obstruction of Watercourse.]—Injunction refused, no damage being shown. Ingram v. Morecraft, 33 Beav. 49.

Right of Property.]—The jurisdiction of the high court of justice to grant an injunction does not depend on the existence of a right of property requiring protection. Pollard v. Photographic Co., 58 L. J., Ch. 251 ; 40 Ch. D. 345 ; 60 L. T. 418 ; 37 W. R. 266.

Interference with Privacy Sufficient.]—Injunction granted to the occupier of a house in London to restrain the occupier of a neighbouring house from violating an agreement as to certain bars in front of the defendant's windows; the complaint being held not too trivial, since it related to an interference with the plaintiff's privacy. Andover (Lady) v. Robertson, 26 L. T. (O.S.) 23.

Occasional Nuisance.]—Occurrences of nuisance, if temporary and occasional only, are not grounds for the interference of the court of chancery by injunction except in extreme cases. Swaine v. G. N. Ry., 4 De G. J. & S. 211 ; 3 N. R. 399 ; 33 L. J. Ch. 399 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 191 ; 9 L. T. 745 ; 12 W. R. 391.

Therefore, when a railway company carried down to and deposited on a siding to their line manure, which was occasionally not proper manure, and they occasionally allowed it to remain there longer than it ought to have remained :—Held, in a suit by a neighbouring landowner for an injunction to restrain the nuisance and for damages, that the court could not interfere by way of injunction. Ib.

Action by Remainderman.]—A., in 1839, demised land on a building lease for ninety-nine years, with a condition not to carry on any trade in any of the houses, but that the same should be occupied solely as private dwelling-houses. By his will, in 1844, he devised the lands, subject to the lease, to one for life, with remainder to the plaintiff. In 1854 one of the houses was occupied as a school. The tenant for life refused to interfere. Thereupon a bill was filed by the remainderman to prevent the premises from being occupied otherwise than according to the lease, i.e. as a private house. It appeared that there were other schools in the neighbourhood, but it did not appear that the testator had sanctioned any breach or waiver of the covenant :—Held, that the remainderman could not have any remedy on the mere ground of infraction of a special agreement, but must show special damage by reason of such infraction : and the Court being of opinion that no material or substantial damage to the plaintiff was established, the bill was dismissed, with costs. Johnstone v. Hall, 2 Kay & J. 414 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 462 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 780 ; 4 W. R. 417.

Semble, if there had been any injury to the material of the house and premises, or if a grossly noxious trade had been carried on, the plaintiff might be entitled to relief, although claiming in remainder only, and not in possession. Ib.

Breach of Covenant—Benefit to Covenantor.]—It is no defence to an application for an injunction to restrain a breach of covenant to say that the covenantee sustains no damage from the breach, for, if the covenantor derives any benefit therefrom, the covenantee may reasonably demand a share of it as the price of his consent. Wells v. Attenborough, 24 L. T. 312 ; 19 W. R. 465.

Where, however, an injunction would inflict great injury on the defendant, and a delay in granting it would cause little or no loss to the plaintiff, the court will not grant it on an interlocutory application, but will express its opinion and direct the motion to stand over till the hearing. Ib.

Right under Contract.]—The question of substantial injury is not material for the purpose of an injunction, when the right etsablished arises under contract. Allen v. Seckham, 47 L. J., Ch. 742.

Building Land—Covenant to erect Houses of certain Value.]—A plaintiff bought certain plots on a building estate subject to certain restrictions; the defendant subsequently bought other plots with a restriction as to the value of the houses to be erected, but he proposed to build houses of less value:—Held, that the plaintiff in such a case is not obliged to prove damage in order to obtain an injunction. Collins v. Castle, 57 L. J., Ch. 76; 36 Ch. D. 243; 57 L. T. 764; 36 W. R. 300.

Breach of Statutory Provision—No Proof of Actual Damage necessary.] — Where an act of parliament contains a provision for the special protection or benefit of an individual, he may enforce his rights thereunder by an action, without either joining the attorney-general as a party or showing that he has sustained any particular damage. The Plymouth, Devonport, and Districts Tramways Act, 1882, authorised the making of tramways in the adjoining boroughs of P. and D., and provided that the defendant company should not, without the consent of the corporations of P. and D., use for public traffic any of the tramways mentioned in the act until the whole system was completed, and if either corporation should at any time complain to the board of trade that the company were not carrying out this provision, the board might direct an inquiry in the manner prescribed by the act, and the company was to abide by every order made consequent on such inquiry by the board. The company had opened and worked a tramway in P. without the requisite consent, and the corporation of D. moved for an interim injunction to restrain the company from working the section opened until the whole system in both boroughs was complete:—Held, that the injunction could be granted, as there was nothing in the section of the private act to take the case out of the jurisdiction under the Judicature Act, 1873, to grant an injunction, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to complain of the breach of the conditions imposed by the private act, without showing that they had thereby sustained any actual damage. Devonport Corporation v. Plymouth and Devonport Tramways Co., 52 L. T. 161; 49 J. P. 405—C. A. See Price v. Bala and Festiniog Ry., 50 L. T. 787.

Lessor and Lessee—Breach of Covenant not to Assign — Bankruptcy.] — The Court will not restrain the assignees in bankruptcy of a lessee from parting with the lease contrary to a covenant therein, unless irreparable damage is likely to result from the assignment. Dyke v. Taylor, 30 L. J., Ch. 281; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 83; 3 L. T. 717; 9 W. R. 403—L.JJ.

Ancient Lights — Plaintiff with Limited Interest.]—An injunction to restrain interference with ancient lights will not be granted on the application of a tenant from year to year under notice to quit, who has sustained no serious damage. Jacomb v. Knight, 2 N. R. 295; 8 L. T. 621; 11 W. R. 812—L.JJ.

Not every interference with access of light will entitle a plaintiff to an injunction. Material damage must be shown. Curriers' Co. v. Corbett, 2 Dr. & Sm. 355; 12 L. T. 169; 13 W. R. 1056.

Breach of Covenant.] — Before the court will refuse to enforce a covenant it must be satisfied that no substantial damage can arise from the breach. Lloyd v. L. C. & D. Ry., 34 L. J., Ch. 401; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 380; 12 L. T. 363; 13 W. R. 698—L.JJ.

Offer by Plaintiff to Accept Money for Abstaining from Proceedings.]—Little weight will be attached to the argument that the plaintiff, by offering to accept a sum of money as the price of abstaining from taking proceedings, has shown that he does not apprehend irreparable damage. Ainsworth v. Bentley, 14 W. R. 630.

Nuisance.]—Where a nuisance is not temporary or trifling, but is likely to be serious and to lessen the value of the estate, an injunction will be granted. Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Improvement Commissioners, 35 L. J., Ch. 382; L. R. 1 Ch. 349; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 308; 14 L. T. 154; 14 W. R. 562.

Interference with Trade—Action by Non-Traders.]—An association of shipowners and others formed for the protection of the shipping trade, but not carrying on such trade or owning goods in its corporate capacity, together with a firm of shipowners, brought an action against a dock company for an injunction to restrain them from imposing certain regulations and charges, as being ultra vires, and for a declaration that they were invalid until confirmed as required by statute:—Held, that the plaintiff firm were not entitled to an injunction without proof of special damage accruing to themselves, but that under the circumstances they were entitled to a declaratory judgment under Order XXV. r. 5. London Association of Shipowners v. London and India Docks Joint Committee, 62 L. J., Ch. 294; [1892] 3 Ch. 242; 2 R. 23; 67 L. T. 238; 7 Asp. M. C. 195—C. A.

Waste—Remedy in Damages Sufficient.]—On an information filed by the attorney-general praying that the defendant might be restrained from cutting trees or underwood within a royal forest:—Held, that, though the vert of a forest is a necessary part of the forest, still, as no irreparable injury to the vert was shown, the act of the defendant, assuming the locus in quo to be within the forest, was a trespass in the nature of waste, which might be compensated in damages, and therefore that no injunction could be granted. Att.-Gen. v. Hallett, 16 M. & W. 569; 16 L. J., Ex. 131.

—— Injury to Inheritance.]—To obtain an injunction against a defendant on the ground of waste, the plaintiff must prove that what the defendant is doing is prejudicial to the inheritance; if it improves the value of the land it is not waste. "Ameliorating waste" discussed. Meux v. Cobley, 61 L. J., Ch. 449; [1892] 2 Ch. 253; 66 L. T. 86. See also Grand Canal Co. v. McNamee, 29 L. R., Ir. 131—C. A.

Small Excess in Height of Building.]—Although a court of equity has power to restrain parties from using a building which has been erected in a form that is in violation of the terms of a contract, or of an act of parliament, yet a small excess in the height of a building beyond that to which it might lawfully have been raised, where no irreparable injury arises from such excess in height, would not be a case in which the court would interfere to restrain the use of the building after it had been erected. Dover Harbour (Warden) v. S. E. Ry., 9 Hare, 493 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 886.

3. Threatened Damage.

Public Bodies.]—Injunction, at the instance of parliamentary commissioners for cleansing and improving the river Witham and its navigation, and the drainage of the adjacent lands, against the erection or use of a steam engine, by parliamentary trustees for draining a particular district, applied for on the ground of probable damage to the banks of the river, into which an increased body of water was thereby expected to be thrown ; and, also, on the ground of apprehended injury to the drainage of the lands, within the jurisdiction of the commissioners, refused. Principles upon which the court proceeds in interposing by injunction between public companies or trustees in cases of apprehended mischief or nuisance. Ripon (Earl) v. Hobart, 3 Myl. & K. 169 ; Coop. t. Brougham, 333 ; 3 L. J., Ch. 145.

Unless an actual injury results to a private individual himself from the excessive exercise of the powers of a company, he is not entitled to an injunction. Ware v. Regent's Canal Co., 28 L. J., Ch. 153 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 25 ; 7 W. R. 67.

Infringement of Legal Right.]—When an injunction is sought in aid of a legal right, the court is bound to grant it if the legal right is established. Fullwood v. Fullwood, 47 L. J., Ch. 459 ; 9 Ch. D. 176 ; 38 L. T. 380 ; 26 W. R. 435.

The circumstance that a party is commencing operations avowedly for a purpose which another conceives to be injurious to him and illegal, does not warrant the latter in applying for an injunction, unless the circumstances of the case at the time when the motion is made are such as to enable the court either to form its own opinion as to the legality of the meditated purpose, or to put that question into a course of immediate trial. Haines v. Taylor, 2 Ph. 209 ; 11 Jur. 73.

No Intention to do Acts sought to be Restrained.]—To warrant the court in granting or continuing an injunction, it must be reasonably satisfied that there is an intention on the part of the defendant to do the acts sought to be restrained, or at least that there is probable ground for believing that, unless the injunction is granted, there is danger of such acts being done ; and it is not a sufficient ground for granting an injunction that if there is no such intention it will do the defendant no harm. Dunn v. Bryan, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 143.

The court will not interfere to restrain future acts of a wrongdoer, unless it is plain that they will be of a wrongful nature. Aldebert v. Leaf, 3 N. R. 455.

Imminent or Apprehended Injuries.]—Unless in a very clear case the court will not, with the previous decision of a jury, restrain by a perpetual injunction the erection of buildings which it is alleged will obstruct ancient lights. Hertz v. Union Bank of London, 24 L. T. (o.s.) 186 —L.J.

The court has jurisdiction by injunction to protect property from an act threatened, which, if completed, would give a right of action ; and an injunction will be granted if the person threatened is free from blame, and shows that an action for damages would be no adequate redress. Austria (Emperor) v. Kossuth, 3 De G. F. & J. 217 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 690 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 639 ; 4 L. T. 494 ; 9 W. R. 712.

Excavations—Danger to Adjoining Houses.]—The court will restrain excavations which threaten danger to adjoining houses, though the actual resulting damage may be small. Dent v. Auction Mart Co., 35 L. J., Ch. 555 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 338 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 447 ; 14 L. T. 827 ; 14 W. R. 709.

Building—Hiding from View Goods in a Shop.]—But the court will not restrain the erection of buildings which merely prevent goods displayed in a shop from being seen from places whence they would previously have been seen. Smith v. Owen, 35 L. J., Ch. 317 ; 14 W. R. 422.

Threatened Act alleged to be Violation of Legal Right.]—In order to obtain an injunction restraining a threatened act on the ground that, if done, it will be a violation of some legal right, the plaintiff must show that the act must result in a violation of such right. Pattison v. Gilford, 43 L. J., Ch. 524 ; L. R. 18 Eq. 259 ; 22 W. R. 673.

Threatened Interference with Right of Shooting.]—The owner of an estate, the shooting over which had been let for a term of years, issued particulars of sale of the estate in thirteen lots, stating that the estate contained several plots of accommodation and building land suitable for the erection of villas and residences, and describing one lot in particular as well situated for the erection of a house. The particulars showed that it was intended to make a road through the estate and dedicate it to the public ; but gave full notice of the right of shooting :—Held, that the court would not, at the instance of the owner of the right of shooting, interfere to prevent the intended sale. Ib.

To Restrain Parting with Legal Estate.]—In an action by an equitable mortgagee for sale or foreclosure the court granted an interim injunction to restrain dealing with the legal estate till the next motion day, on an ex parte application by the plaintiff ; there being ground for believing that the defendants intended to part with the legal estate pendente lite. London and County Banking Co. v. Lewis, 21 Ch. D. 490 ; 47 L. T. 501 ; 31 W. R. 233—C. A.

Threatened Breach of Agreement to keep Farm Properly Stocked.]—An injunction will not be granted to restrain a threatened breach by a tenant of a stipulation in a farming agreement requiring him to keep on the farm a proper and sufficient stock of sheep, horses, and cattle. Phipps v. Jackson, 56 L. J., Ch. 550 ; 33 W. R. 378. See also Fleming v. Snook, 5 Beav. 250.

Past Infringement of Patent—Intention to Infringe.]—In August, 1882, A. set up in B.'s factory four machines of his own make to be taken and paid for if they worked to B.'s satisfaction. They were used till April, 1883, when B., being dissatisfied with them, took them down, laid them in his yard, called on A. to take them away, and never used them again. A. did not take them away till January, 1885. In March, 1887, P., who had obtained a judgment against A. that A.'s machines were an infringement of a patent belonging to him, claimed royalties from B. B. replied that P. could satisfy himself by calling at B.'s mill that B. was using neither P.'s nor A.'s machines, and had no intention of so doing. Further correspondence took place, and B. denied all liability, alleging that he had not bought the machines from A., who had set them up on trial, and as they did not work well had to take them down, and that B. had not used and was not using any machine which infringed P.'s patent. In January, 1888, P. brought his action in the chancery of the county palatine against B. for an injunction and an account or damages. B. put in a defence denying infringement, and stating that if he ever had used machines infringing the patent such user had been discontinued long before the action, as the plaintiff knew, and that B. never threatened or intended and did not threaten or intend to use any apparatus infringing the patent. The vice-chancellor granted an injunction and an inquiry as to damages:—Held, on appeal, that though B. had infringed the patent, it was not to be inferred from the circumstances that he had any intention to infringe it again, and that P., if he had made such inquiry as he ought, would have discovered this; that there was, therefore, no case for an injunction, and that (the court of the county palatine having only the old chancery jurisdiction) damages could not in that case be given. The judgment of the vice-chancellor was therefore discharged, but as B. had not given full information, which would probably have prevented litigation, the action was dismissed without costs, the defendant receiving only his costs of the appeal. Millington v. Fox (3 My. & Cr. 338) distinguished. Proctor v. Bayley, 59 L. J., Ch. 12; 42 Ch. D. 390; 61 L. T. 752; 38 W. R. 100—C. A.

Apprehended Repetition of Nuisance—Refusal to give Undertaking.]—An action was brought by inhabitants of houses abutting on an open and unbuilt-on area of land situate in the centre of a town, adjoining the market-place, and known as Market-square, for an injunction to restrain the owner thereof from using, or causing or permitting the same to be used for the purpose of any sports, exhibitions, entertainments, or otherwise, whereby a nuisance might be occasioned to the annoyance and injury of the plaintiffs. It appeared that in June, 1889, the defendant's agent licensed S. to use Market-square for holding a public show for several days, S. paying 6*l*. The show consisted of a large circular roundabout worked by a steam-engine, which engine also worked an organ; a large circular mechanical switchback worked by another steam-engine, which worked a second organ; a shooting gallery; and a boxing booth. Whilst the show was going on, the plaintiffs complained to the defendant's agent, and a correspondence ensued, which resulted in the defendant's agent declining to give an undertaking, and expressing his intention of allowing persons to use Market-square for public shows:—Held, that, as the defendant contended that he had the right to do the thing complained of, and had refused to give an undertaking, the inference was that there would be a repetition of the nuisance; and that therefore the plaintiffs were justified in bringing the action, and were entitled to an injunction. Phillips v. Thomas, 62 L. T. 793.

Nuisance—Smallpox Hospital—Interim injunction.]—An interim injunction will not be granted in a quia timet action, unless the plaintiff makes out a strong case of probability that the apprehended mischief will in fact arise:—Quære, whether, in the case of an hospital, the health of the public at large may not be considered to some extent as against the merely local inconvenience. Att.-Gen. v. Manchester Corporation, 62 L. J., Ch. 459; [1893] 2 Ch. 87; 3 R. 427; 68 L. T. 608; 41 W. R. 459; 57 J. P. 343.

To Restrain Persons from Acting under Faculty when Granted.]—It is an abuse of the process of the court to ask for an injunction to restrain the vicar and churchwardens of a parish from acting under a faculty which has not yet been granted by an ecclesiastical court. Proud v. Price, 63 L. J., Q. B. 61; 9 R. 40; 69 L. T. 664; 42 W. R. 102—C. A.

Trade Mark—Providing Instruments of Fraud.]—The court will restrain a man from providing others with the means of committing fraud, and will not wait till the fraud is completed. A printer will therefore be restrained from printing and selling labels in fraudulent imitation of the plaintiff's trade-marks. Farina v. Silverlock, 1 Kay & J. 509; 3 W. R. 532. (Reversed on other point, 4 W. R. 731.)

Public Nuisance.]—The court will not interfere on a case of merely prospective nuisance by draining towns into public rivers. The nuisance must be actual and existing, not future, however strongly the apprehension of damage may be supported by scientific evidence. Att.-Gen. v. Kingston-on-Thames Corporation, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 597; 12 L. T. 665; 13 W. R. 888. See also Att.-Gen. v. Forbes, 2 Myl. & Cr. 123.

Mandatory Injunction.]—The court will grant a mandatory injunction to prevent risk of irreparable injury to adjoining property from the presence of a combustible substance, where the danger is pressing and there is ground for an indictment. Plaintiffs put on terms to indict forthwith. Hepburn v. Lordan, 34 L. J., Ch. 293; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 122, 254; 13 W. R. 368, 1004.

Restraining Sale of Goods.]—Application to stay disposal of personals must show specific right to property, and danger of same being lost. Ximenes v. Franco, Dick. 149.

Misapplication of Corporate Property.]—A municipal corporation regulated by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, promoting a local improvement bill by a petition to which they have affixed the corporate seal, will be restrained from applying any of their trust property towards the expenses of the bill without the subsequent sanction of parliament, even before any such property has been actually so applied, if the liability has been incurred. Att.-Gen, v. Waterford Corporation, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 522—C. A.

4. Balance of Convenience to be Regarded.

In granting an injunction the court must look at the balance of convenience. Att.-Gen. v. Dorking Union, 51 L. J., Ch. 585; 20 Ch. D. 595; 46 L. T. 573; 30 W. R. 579—C. A. S. P., Read v. Richardson, 45 L. T. 54—C. A.

Upon an application for an interlocutory injunction, the court should take into account the balance of convenience; and if, on the one hand, irreparable injury may be caused by withholding the injunction, while, on the other hand, any injury occasioned by the injunction can be compensated by damages, the court will grant the injunction, upon the plaintiff undertaking to abide any order as to damages that may afterwards be made in the suit. Cork Corporation v. Rooney, 7 L. R., Ir. 191.

Injunction to restrain the defendants from entering into an agreement with another railway company, which would be a violation of or inconsistent with a subsisting agreement between the plaintiffs and defendants, refused; the inconvenience to arise from granting the injunction being greater than the inconvenience to arise from refusing it. Shrewsbury and Chester Ry. v. Shrewsbury and Birmingham Ry., 1 Sim. (N.S.) 410; 20 L. J., Ch. 574; 15 Jur. 548.

The plaintiff, by virtue of a grant from the crown, made 36 Hen. 8, claimed, as lord of the manor of C., to be entitled to the beach or shore of the sea between high- and low-water mark. The defendants, the surveyor of highways, took the stones to mend the highway of the parish. Upon a bill filed by the plaintiff against them, the defendants put in their answer, denying the right claimed by the plaintiff, and insisting upon their right to take the stones by custom, by prescription, and also under the Highways Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50. Upon a motion to dissolve the injunction obtained by the plaintiff:—Held, that the rights claimed by the plaintiff were legal, and must be decided by an action; that the court must consider which of the two parties was likely to sustain more injury; that, notwithstanding the want of distinct evidence respecting injury, the court, to prevent a possible mischief, would grant an injunction, and give the plaintiff leave to bring an action, but it refused to say that he must do so. Clowes v. Beck, 20 L. J., Ch. 505.

The court will not, by interlocutory injunction, restrain one of the parties to a contract from an act for which, if wrongful, the plaintiff can obtain compensation in damages at the hearing of the cause, and where the contract is one of which specific performance cannot be decreed as against the plaintiff. Garrett v. Banstead and Epsom Downs Ry., 11 Jur. (N.S.) 591; 12 L. T. 654; 13 W. R. 878.

Where on motion for an interlocutory injunction the rights of the parties are doubtful on the evidence, the court will act on the consideration of the comparative injury which may arise from granting or withholding the injunction. Ib.

On a motion for an interim injunction, the court, holding that the plaintiffs had shown an intention to preserve and not to abandon their ancient lights, and that there was a fair question of right to be tried at the hearing, and considering that the balance of convenience was in favour of granting an injunction rather than allowing the defendants to complete their building with an undertaking to pull it down if required to do so, granted an injunction till the hearing. Newson v. Pender, 27 Ch. D. 43; 52 L. T. 9; 33 W. R. 243—C. A.

Upon an interlocutory motion to restrain the defendant from diverting the flow of water in a river, the court, upon the balance of convenience, refused an injunction until the plaintiff should have established his right at law. William v. Heath, 1 L. T. 267.

Defendants proposing to alter their landing-place, plaintiffs objected that under their act the defendants could not do so. The court, being satisfied that the alteration would be a public convenience, refused to interfere, whether or not the defendants were authorised by their act. Ryde Commissioners v. Isle of Wight Ferry Co., 30 Beav. 616.

Breach of Covenant — Mistake.]—Where a breach of covenant is threatened the court will not refuse to interfere on the ground that there has been a mistake by both parties in the form of the covenants, or on the ground of inconvenience to the public. Lloyd v. L. C. & D. Ry., 34 L. J., Ch. 401; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 380; 12 L. T. 363; 13 W. R. 698—L.JJ.

Railway Company.]—Injunction refused to restrain railway company from taking land, where compensation would be given, and the stopping of the works would be a public inconvenience. Wood v. Charing Cross Ry., 33 Beav. 290.

Restraining Action for Breach of Covenant.]—Where a lessee had covenanted not to erect any new buildings without leave, and lessor brought ejectment for a breach, but the breach was such that it could be remedied in a day:—Held, on the balance of convenience, that an injunction to restrain the action ought to be granted. Haigh v. Waterman, 16 L. T. 375.

5. Delay and Acquiescence.

Where party allows and acquiesces in erection of a nuisance, he shall be stayed in action at law. Anon., 2 Eq. Abr. 522.

An injunction, although the facts in support of it are sufficient, will not be granted unless the application is made speedily. Isaacson v. Thompson, 41 L. J., Ch. 101; 20 W. R. 196. Effect of delay on suit for injunction. Ware v. Regent's Canal Co., 3 De G. & J. 212; 28 L. J., Ch. 153; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 25; 7 W. R. 67.

Remedy Barred by Acquiescence.]—A building estate was laid out in lots, which were sold by the owners of the estate to different purchasers, each of whom covenanted with the vendors, and with the purchasers of the other lots entitled to the benefit of the covenant, not to build a shop on his land, or to use his house as a shop, or to carry on any trade therein. The purchaser of one of the lots, who occupied his house as a private residence, brought an action against the purchaser of another lot, who was using his house as a beershop with an "off" licence, to restrain him from breaking his covenant, and for damages. The plaintiff had known for three years before the action was commenced that the defendant was using his house as a beershop, and had himself bought beer at the shop. There was evidence that some of the houses built on other lots had been for some time used as shops notwithstanding the covenant, and that some of the houses near the plaintiff's house were occupied, not each by a single tenant, but by two families at weekly rents:—Held, that the change in the character of the neighbourhood was not in itself a ground for refusing relief to the plaintiff, as the change was not caused by his conduct; but that the plaintiff had lost the right to enforce his covenant either by injunction or damages through his acquiescence in the proceedings of the defendant. Bedford (Duke) v. British Museum (Trustees) (2 My. & K. 552) explained. Sayers v. Collyer, 54 L. J., Ch. 1; 28 Ch. D. 103; 51 L. T. 723; 33 W. R. 91; 49 J. P. 244—C. A.

Per Fry, L. J.:—An amount of acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff which would not be sufficient to bar his action, may be sufficient to induce the court to give damages instead of an injunction. Ib.

The plaintiff and the defendants held under the same superior lease which contained a covenant that nothing should be hung or exposed for sale or otherwise outside the premises. The defendants had committed a breach of the covenant, and there was such an unreasonable user of the highway as to amount to a public nuisance, and the plaintiff had sustained some damage. During the eighteen years for which the nuisance had existed, the plaiutiff had only once complained about it to the defendants:—Held, that there was such acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff in the nuisance that an injunction would not be granted. Gaunt v. Fynney (L. R. 8 Ch. 8) followed. Rogers v. G. N. Ry., 53 J. P. 484. See also Rochdale Canal Co. v. King, 1 W. R. 278.

Delay.]—A delay of fourteen months by a plaintiff in taking steps to prevent the continuance of a breach of a restrictive covenant will not amount to such acquiescence as to disentitle him to an injunction. Northumberland (Duke) v. Bowman, 56 L. T. 773.

Where there has been delay in the assertion of a legal right, and the damage sustained is slight, the court will not grant an injunction. Wintle v. Bristol, &c. Ry., 6 L. T. 20; 10 W. R. 210.

The prosecution of an action by surveyors against a railway company for a large balance not restrained where the bill filed by the company sought a discovery as to documents in order for the defence, and the injunction had not been applied for till more than a year after action. S. E. Ry. v. Martin, 1 H. & Tw. 69; 2 Ph. 758; 18 L. J., Ch. 103; 13 Jur. 1; 12 id. 1062.

Public Right—Growing Nuisance.]—Though the public can lose their right to an injunction by laches, this does not apply to the case of a gradually growing nuisance. Att.-Gen. v. Bradford Navigation Co., 35 L. J., Ch. 619; 15 L. T. 9; 14 W. R. 579.

Public Convenience — Breach of Statutory Contract.]—In an action brought to obtain a mandatory injunction to compel the defendants to pull down a goods station and cattle shed which they had erected 140 yards from Bala station, in the face of an act which provided "that at that station there should be no goods or cattle station:" the plaintiff had not objected to the buildings till they were nearly completed, owing to his being abroad at the time, and ignorant of their erection until his return. The defendants contended that the buildings in question had not been erected "at" the station, as they were 140 yards off; that, if they had been, it was for the public convenience they should be there, and that the plaintiff was precluded by his acquiescence from now obtaining a mandatory injunction to remove:—Held, that by sub-s. 6 the defendants had made a statutory contract not to do what the court was of opinion they had done, so that the question of public convenience did not apply, and that the acquiescence of the plaintiff was not such as would preclude him from obtaining the injunction, but that the court would grant one, compelling the defendants to remove the buildings as prayed. Price v. Bala and Festiniog Ry., 50 L. T. 787.

Patent.]—A special injunction, on notice, to prevent the infringement of a patent refused, on the ground of delay, notwithstanding the court had a strong impression in favour of the plaintiff's right. Bridson v. Benecke, 12 Beav. 1.

Bankrupt.] — After repeated acts of acquiescence of the bankrupt in the validity of a commission, and the dismissal of a former petition by him to the lord chancellor to supersede it, the court will restrain him from bringing actions against his assignees. White, Ex parte, 4 Deac. & C. 279; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 104; 4 L. J., Bk. 50.

Laches.—A court of equity frequently refuses an injunction, where it acknowledges a right, when the conduct of the complaining party has led to the state of things which occasions the application. Saunders v. Smith, 3 Myl. & C. 711; 7 L. J., Ch. 227; 2 Jur. 491.

Effect of laches in depriving a party of his remedy by injunction. Blakemore v. Glamorganshire Canal Navigation Co., 1 Myl. & K. 154; 2 L. J., Ch. 95; Ward v. Higgs, 12 W. R. 1074.

If the parties complaining of an interruption in their enjoyment of an easement, fail to institute proceedings to stop it until the new building has been completed, the court will not grant an injunction to restrain the interruption, but will leave them to their remedy at law. Cooper v. Hubbuck, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 457; 9 W. R. 352.

Laches may be a defence to an application for an injunction by way of information as well as upon a bill. Effect of a protest in negativing laches. Att.-Gen. v. Sheffield Gas Consumers

Co., 3 De G. M. & G. 304 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 811 ; 17 Jur. 677 ; 1 W. R. 185.

Injunction refused to the owner of land on which a railway company having statutory powers were about to enter, because by his silence and conduct he had permitted the company to carry on their works on the supposition that they were entitled to enter. Greenhalgh v. Manchester and Birmingham Ry., 3 Myl. & Cr. 785 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 75.

A broad gauge railway company were shareholders in a mixed gauge railway company, who, by their act, were bound to construct their line throughout on the broad gauge, and as to part on the narrow gauge also. In March, 1852, they filed a bill, stating that the mixed gauge railway company were about to construct the line throughout on the narrow gauge, although their funds were insufficient to enable them to do this, and also to comply with their act as to laying down the broad gauge. The bill sought an injunction to restrain the opening of any part of the narrow gauge line, and the further construction upon that gauge, until the broad gauge was complete. In April, 1852, the injunction was refused. From that time contests were carried on in parliament between the two companies, ending in the rejection of certain bills solicited by the mixed gauge company. From August, 1852, to January, 1853, correspondence was carried on between them as to traffic arrangements. Principles on which the court acts in refusing applications, either original or by way of appeal, on the ground of laches. Effect of objection in excluding laches. G. W. Ry. v. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., 3 De G. M. & G. 341.

In January, 1853, the broad gauge company filed a new bill, and sought an injunction to restrain the opening by the mixed gauge railway of any portion of the line upon the narrow gauge before the broad gauge was completed. In the same month they moved for an injunction in the new suit, and also appealed from the refusal of the injunction in April, 1852 :—Held, that both motions were too late. Ib.

When a corporation with power to prescribe the line of road within which future building should be erected, allowed the defendant to make some progress with the building of his church, which projected beyond the line afterwards prescribed by the corporation, a motion for an injunction to compel him to put the walls back within the line was refused. Folkestone Corporation v. Woodward, 42 L. J., Ch. 782 ; L. R. 15 Eq. 159 ; 27 L. T. 574 ; 21 W. R. 97.

An action was instituted to restrain a local board from taking proceedings for the recovery of a penalty from the plaintiff for having advanced his building beyond the line of frontage. His case was that it would be inequitable to allow such proceedings to be taken, the plans having been laid before the local board, and the board having stood by and allowed the plaintiff to expend his money. An application by the plaintiff for an injunction was refused. Kerr v. Preston Corporation, 46 L. J., Ch. 409 ; 6 Ch. D. 463 ; 25 W. R. 264.

Trespass — Delay — Motion to Commit.]—Though the court will not restrain an action of trespass by a party through whose estate a canal is cutting, for deviating from the line, because he has lain by, and rested upon his legal rights ; yet, if he files a bill to restrain their deviating, and then moves to commit them, the court will not do so without a trial by jury in a disputed case and directing an issue at law. Agar v. Regent's Canal Co., G. Coop. 77 ; 14 R. R. 217.

Infringement of Patent.]—Where plaintiff knew of infringement in August, and wrote to defendant complaining in November, but did not file his bill till the following July, interlocutory injunction refused on the ground of delay. Bovill v. Crate, L. R. 1 Eq. 388.

Riparian Owners—Pollution of Stream.]—See Att.-Gen. v. Halifax Corporation, 21 L. T. 52 ; 17 W. R. 1088.

Agreement, Violation of, by both Parties.]—A party seeking relief by injunction must state in his bill the whole of the agreement in respect of which he seeks relief. The court will not grant relief by injunction when there has been for a considerable time a violation of the agreement by both plaintiff and defendant. Sheard v. Webb, 2 W. R. 343.

Patent—Right to an Account.]—Relief in respect of the infringement of a patent refused on the ground of delay. An account is an ancillary remedy, and is the equitable way of estimating damages where it has been necessary to interfere by injunction. Smith v. L. & S. W. Ry., 1 Kay, 408 ; 2 Eq. R. 428 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 562 ; 2 W. R. 310.

Sale of Land—Stipulation for certain Works.]—A vendor of land, who on the agreement for sale in 1847 had stipulated for certain works to be done by the purchaser on the land sold :—Held, in 1854, to be entitled to an injunction to restrain a breach of the agreement, the works having then been lately commenced. Foster v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Dudley Ry., 2 W. R. 378.

Acquiescence in Breach of Agreement in Restraint of Trade.]—Injunction to restrain breach of covenant in restraint of trade refused to plaintiff, who had for two years delayed to take proceedings. Scarisbrick v. Tunbridge, 3 Eq. R. 240.

Delay in commencing Proceedings to restrain Action at Law.]—See Beck v. Dean, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 14 ; 5 W. R. 105.

Nuisance—Chancery Amendment Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27).—A delay of two-and-a-half years from the time of certain alterations in a roadway will disentitle a plaintiff to relief in equity, though he suffered no damage during that time, and took proceedings promptly as soon as he was damnified. Where there is a plain common law remedy the jurisdiction of the court is not extended by the Chancery Amendment Act. Wicks v. Hunt, 1 John. 372.

Breach of Covenant.]—Where a landlord has relaxed, in favour of some of his tenants, a covenant entered into for the benefit of all, he cannot obtain an injunction to restrain the other tenants from infringing it. Roper v. Williams, Turn. & R. 18.

Purchase of Railway Stock after Acquiescence by Vendor.]—The purchaser of railway stock will not, by the acquiescence of his vendor in illegal dividends, be precluded from objecting to similar dividends in the future. Bloxam v. Metropolitan Ry., L. R. 3 Ch. 337 ; 18 L. T. 41 ; 16 W. R. 490.

Breach of Partnership Articles.]—By articles of partnership, the partnership (which was for twenty-one years) was to be carried on for fourteen years under the style of A. & Co., and for the last seven years under the style of A. & B. During the fourteen years, and for more than a year after, the name of A. alone was stamped upon certain manufactures. Injunction to restrain the use of any other name than that of A. during the remainder of the term, refused. Powell v. Allarton, 4 L. J., Ch. 91.

Piracy of Publication—Delay.]—Injunction refused. Lewis v. Chapman, 3 Beav. 133.

Plaintiff encouraging Nuisance.]—A party may so encourage another in the erection of a nuisance as to give that other an equity to restrain him from recovering damages at law for the nuisance when completed. Williams v. Jersey (Earl), Cr. & Ph. 91 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 149.

Remedy not Barred.]—Where, under an agreement containing mutual grants, the plaintiffs had been put in possession of what was granted to them, and enjoyed it for several years, while the defendants took no steps to require the performance of the stipulation for their benefit, but allowed the time to expire within which it should have been performed, the court granted an injunction to restrain the defendants from disturbing the plaintiffs' enjoyment. G. N. Ry. v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 1 Sm. & G. 81.

A plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for an injury to his business, occasioned by the erection of gas-works. The action was referred to arbitration ; nearly two years elapsed before the award was made, in the course of which time alterations in the mode of carrying on the business complained of were effected ; two months after the date of the award the injunction was applied for :—Held, that there had not been any such acquiescence as to deprive the plaintiff of his right to the injunction. Imperial Gas Light Co. v. Broadbent, 7 H. L. Cas. 600 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 377 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1319.

Mere lapse of time will not be a bar to the granting of an injunction, unless it would be a bar to the legal right. Fullwood v. Fullwood, 47 L. J., Ch. 459 ; 9 Ch. D. 176 ; 38 L. T. 380 ; 26 W. R. 435.

To an action for an injunction to restrain a defendant from representing that the business carried on by him was the same as that carried on by the plaintiff, it was objected that the plaintiff had known for between two and three years before issuing his writ the facts on which he relied :—Held, that this delay was no bar to the action. Ib.

Distinction between the effect of acquiescence, upon a motion for an injunction and on a demurrer. In the former case, acquiescence merely prevents the special protection by injunction, but in the latter it must be such as to disentitle the plaintiff to any relief whatever. Gordon v. Cheltenham Ry., 5 Beav. 229.

Though A. may be disentitled by acquiescence to an injunction to stop B.'s manufactory, which is noxious to the neighbourhood, yet it does not consequently follow that B. is entitled to an injunction to prevent A.'s recovering damages at law. Equity may leave both parties to their legal rights. Bankart v. Houghton, 27 Beav. 425 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 473 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 282 ; 7 W. R. 197.

Acquiescence in the erection of noxious works while they produce little injury does not warrant the subsequent extension of them to an extent productive of great damage. Ib.

Injunction to prevent, on the ground of acquiescence, a party injured by copper works, from enforcing a judgment recovered by him for damages at law, refused, with costs. Ib.

Held, that certain ratepayers who had delayed from December to April, to take proceedings to restrain an improper application of the ratepayers' money by commissioners under a paving act were not thereby deprived of their right to an injunction. Att.-Gen. v. Eastlake, 11 Hare, 205 ; 17 Jur. 801 ; 1 W. R. 323.

Interlocutory Application—Trial.]—To deprive a plaintiff of a legal right at the hearing of the cause, a case of acquiescence must be shown much stronger than such as would be a sufficient defence to an interlocutory application by him, and must amount not only to positive licence, but to an implication of an actual grant. Patching v. Dubbins, 1 Kay, 1 ; 17 Jur. 1113.

In a suit for an injunction, a stronger case of acquiescence is necessary to cause the bill to be dismissed at the hearing, than that which will suffice to prevent the plaintiff from obtaining an interlocutory injunction. Johnson v. Wyatt, 3 N. R. 270 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 394 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1333 ; 9 L. T. 618 ; 12 W. R. 234.

A plaintiff's right to an interlocutory injunction is not barred by laches, when he has forborne in a reasonable hope of an accommodation, and the defendant has not incurred expense or injury through the delay. Lee v. Haley, 18 W. R. 181.

The court will not grant an interlocutory injunction if the plaintiff, having sufficient notice of the defendant's intention to commit the act sought to be restrained, is guilty of unreasonable delay in applying to the court. Salisbury v. Metropolitan Ry., 39 L. J., Ch. 429 ; 18 W. R. 484.

Interim Injunction Granted.]—If it appears that there has been unnecessary delay, an interim injunction only will be granted. Carew v. Yates, 1 W. R. 11.

Damage after Acquiescence.] — Acquiescence in a breach of covenant not attended with substantial damage will not bar the right to restrain a subsequent breach so attended. Western v. M'Dermot, 35 L. J., Ch. 190 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 366. Affirmed on appeal, 36 L. J., Ch. 76 ; L. R. 2 Ch. 72 ; 15 L. T. 64 ; 15 W. R. 265.

To restrain Proceedings.]—An injunction to stay a trial at law will not be granted on the eve of the trial, where there has been delay on the part of the plaintiff in equity in making the application ; but the lapse of time before the application is made is not an objection to granting it, if the trial be not near. Holme v. Brown, 9 Hare (App.) xxix.

See also under Interlocutory Injunctions, A. g. 2, infra, col. 1555.

6. Who May be Bound.

General Rule.]—Injunction is not binding on a person not a party in the cause. Iveson v. Harris, 7 Ves. 256.

Against a Stranger.]—Order made in a summary way to restrain a person, not a party to the suit, to whom the receiver had let a farm, part of the estates in the cause, from moving hay, straw, &c., therefrom. Walton v. Johnson, 15 Sim. 352 : 12 Jur. 299.

Injunction against tenant in possession, not a party, to stay waste. Att.-Gen. v. Ancaster (Duke), Dick. 68.

The court will not grant an injunction to restrain waste against persons specifically who are not parties defendants to the bill ; but they may be restrained as workmen or servants of the defendants, if they fill that character. Freeman v. Burke, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 282.

For Benefit of Stranger.]—Where there is a case for special injunction, and the injunction will operate for the benefit of parties not before the court, the absence of those parties, though made the ground of demurrer to the bill, will not prevent the court from interposing. Const v. Harris, Turn. & R. 514 ; 24 R. R. 108.

Injunction cannot be extended to protect one who is not a party to the suit in equity. Gadd v. Worral, 2 Anstr. 555.

Where a bill is filed by some "on behalf, &c.," an injunction which restrains proceedings against persons not named parties to the record is irregular, per the Lord Chancellor. Armitstead v. Durham, 11 Beav. 556 ; 13 Jur. 330.

Assignee of Obligee.]—Quære, whether the proceedings of an assignee in the name of the obligee are stayed by an injunction which restrains only the obligee, his counsellors, and agents. Montague v. Hill, 4 Russ. 128.

Against Devisee.] — Perpetual injunction against defendant devisee where testator has had injunction and decree against him in same cause. Lowe v. Jolliffe, Dick. 390.

Against Under-Sheriff Refusing to Execute Writ.]—A., after judgment in ejectment and a writ of possession taken out against him, brings a bill, and has an injunction on a dedimus ; this injunction was allowed to extend to the under-sheriff, who had refused to execute the writ, and was in contempt to an attachment in the king's bench before the bill filed. —— v. Emerton, 1 Vern. 25.

Under Tenants.]—Where a landlord filed a bill against his immediate tenant to restrain him from cutting turf for sale, on a valuable bog appurtenant to the lands demised, and the tenant put in an answer stating, that he had never himself been in the actual occupation of any portion of the lands ; that he never by himself or any of his agents had committed the waste charged by the bill, and that if his subtenants had cut turf for sale or otherwise, he was unable to restrain them from so doing, the practice having existed previously to the lands coming into his possession :—Held, that although it did not appear whether those tenants held from year to year or had any greater interest, the injunction could not issue as they were not before the court. Norbury v. Alleyne, 1 Dr. & Wal. 337.

Public Health Act, 1875—District Board—Successors in Title.]—A decree was made in 1875 against the corporation of B., as the sanitary authority of B., granting a perpetual injunction to restrain them from allowing sewage to flow into a river so as to be injurious to health or a nuisance to the plaintiffs ; but the injunction was suspended for five years, to give the corporation an opportunity to execute certain works. After the expiration of that period the plaintiffs desired to enforce the injunction, but in the meantime the B., T., and R. district board had been constituted under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), as the sanitary authority of the district, in the place of the corporation of B. The plaintiffs brought an action against the B., T., and R. board, claiming a declaration that they were entitled to the same benefit of the decree as against the defendants in the present action as if they had been defendants in the former suit. The defendants demurred :—Held, that the B., T., and R. board were not made by the Public Health Act subject to any liabilities of their predecessors except those attaching under the act, and were, therefore, not bound by the decree against them ; and that, there being no allegation of any nuisance committed by the B., T., and R. board, the plaintiffs had no cause of action, and the demurrer must be allowed. Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham Drainage Board, 50 L. J., Ch. 786 ; 17 Ch. D. 685 ; 44 L. T. 906 ; 29 W. R. 793 ; 46 J. P. 36—C. A.

Granting, on all Defendants Resigning Office.]—A bill having been filed against a local board of health alleging that it was committing a nuisance, and praying for an injunction to restrain it, all the members of the board resigned. There being no defence to the suit, the injunction was granted in the terms of the first paragraph of the prayer of the bill. Hardinge v. Southborough Local Board, 32 L. T. 250.

Adding Plaintiff—Where Original Plaintiff going Abroad.]—In an action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from using certain premises as a small-pox hospital, application was made under Ord. XVI. r. 13, by the plaintiff, to join another person, with his consent, who was an inhabitant of the same neighbourhood, on the ground that since the action was brought the original plaintiff had given up business, and was going abroad. The application was refused on the ground that the cause of action was injury to the plaintiff's own property only, and it was not "necessary, in order to enable the court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action," that any other person should be added as plaintiff within Ord. XVI. r. 13. Dalton v. St. Mary Abbotts, Kensington, 47 L. T. 349.

Covenant in Restraint of Trade—Breach by Covenantor's Tenant.]—Where breaches of a covenant in restraint of trade are being committed by the covenantor's tenant, who is not a party, an injunction may be granted against the covenantor, his servants and agents, but not against the tenant. Hodgson v. Coppard, 30 L. J. Ch. 20; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 11; 9 W. R. 9..

7. INTERLOCUTORY AND INTERIM INJUNCTIONS.

An interlocutory order for an injunction cannot be considered in argument as affecting the ultimate decision of a cause. Drew v. Harman, 5 Price, 319.

On an interlocutory application for an injunction, the court will only act prospectively, and with a view to keep matters in statu quo, and will not, unless in a very special case, grant the order in such a form as indirectly to compel some positive act to be done by the party enjoined. Blakemore v. Glamorganshire Canal Navigation Co., 1 Myl. & K. 154; 2 L. J., Ch. 95.

It is not necessary, for the purpose of supporting an interlocutory injunction for restraining proceeding in another court, that a case should be shown which would entitle the plaintiff to relief at all events; it is sufficient if the court finds, upon the evidence then before it, a case which makes the transaction a proper subject of investigation in a court of equity. After long acquiescence under such an order, the court will not readily entertain an application for dissolving it. Glascott v. Lang, 3 Myl. & C. 451; 8 Sim. 358; 2 Jur. 909.

In matters of great importance, which can only be properly determined at the hearing, the court is in favour of restraining destructive operations until the hearing. Att.-Gen. v. Great Eastern Ry., 25 L. T. 867.

Injunction to stay waste only, granted on interlocutory application. Kettle v. Corbin, Dick. 314.

In no case does the court grant injunction of course till hearing. Potter v. Chapman, Ambl. 99; Dick. 146.

Exceeding Prayer.]—An injunction granted upon an interlocutory application cannot exeed that prayed by the bill. Munro v. Wivenhoe and Brightlingsea Ry., 4 De G. J. & S. 723; 12 L. T. 562, 655; 13 W. R. 880.

General Rules.]—In a suit to restrain the publication of private letters, the court granted an interlocutory injunction, although the plaintiff did not fully prove his title to relief, on the ground that to refuse an injunction would be to determine the whole suit on an interlocutory application. Andrew v. Raeburn, L. R. 9 Ch. 522; 31 L. T. 73; 22 W. R. 564.

Where an injunction would inflict great injury on the defendant, and a delay in granting it would cause little or no loss to the plaintiff, the court will not grant it on an interlocutory application. Wells v. Attenborough, 24 L. T. 312; 19 W. R. 465.

Upon an interlocutory application the court will not decide a disputed question of title, but if it is satisfied that injury is threatened or apprehended, and the evidence that such is the case is not distinctly rebutted, an injunction will be granted. Crosse v. Duckers, 27 L. T. 816; 21 W. R. 287.

The court will not permit a defendant to take advantage of an act done with the intent to defeat possible equitable rights of the plaintiff, and will grant an injunction accordingly; and when a defendant, alleged by the plaintiff to have held under a lease, stipulating that hay was to be eaten down on the land, removed a large quantity off the land after differences had arisen as to his tenancy, the court restrained him from selling and disposing of the hay so removed. Ib.

An injunction to restrain an action against the surety refused upon an interlocutory application, in a state of circumstances not showing a sufficient probability that such a case would be proved, on further investigation, as would entitle the surety to be protected by a perpetual injunction at the hearing. Dawson v. Lawes, 1 Kay, 280; 2 Eq. R. 230; 23 L. J., Ch. 434; 2 W. R. 213.

Difficulty in Compensating—Undertaking to Keep Account.]—Injunction to restrain sales of cattle in competition with ancient market refused, on defendant's undertaking to keep an account. Elwes v. Payne, 48 L. J., Ch. 831; 12 Ch. D. 468; 41 L. T. 118; 28 W. R. 234—C. A.

Lease—Breach of Covenant.]—Where the covenants in a lease are clear, and the breach is also clear, and irreparable injury is likely to arise, the court will interfere by interlocutory injunction. If these conditions are not fulfilled, the court will weigh the considerations of convenience for granting or refusing the injunction. Wilkinson v. Rogers, 3 N. R. 347; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 162; 9 L. T. 696; 12 W. R. 284—L.JJ.

Effect of Delay.]—The court will not grant an interlocutory injunction if the plaintiff, having sufficient notice of the defendant's intention to commit the act sought to be restrained, is guilty of unreasonable delay in applying to the court. Salisbury v. Metropolitan Ry., 39 L. J., Ch. 429; 18 W. R. 484.

In a suit to restrain the user of names in trade in a fraudulent manner, the right to an interlocutory injunction is lost by a delay in filing the bill of nine or ten months since the discovery of the user. Isaacson v. Thompson, 41 L. J., Ch. 101; 20 W. R. 196.

Cases (as of waste) in which delay in applying for an injunction may not be deemed to preclude the parties aggrieved from obtaining that relief upon an interlocutory application. Att.-Gen. v. Eastlake, 11 Hare, 205; 17 Jur. 801; 1 W. R. 323.

Balance of Convenience.]—On motion for interlocutory injunction, the claim of the plaintiff being doubtful on the evidence, the court will act upon the consideration of the comparative inconvenience which may arise from granting or withholding the injunction. Hadley v. London Bank of Scotland, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 554; 12 L. T. 747; 13 W. R. 978.

Therefore, where a plaintiff sues for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, and there is a question whether any contract exists, the court will not restrain the owner of the land from dealing with it until a suit for specific performance of the contract has been disposed of. Ib.

Upon an application for an interlocutory injunction, the court should take into account the balance of convenience; and if, on the one hand, irreparable injury may be caused by withholding the injunction, while, on the other hand, any injury occasioned by the injunction can be compensated by damages, the court will grant the injunction, upon the plaintiff undertaking to abide any order as to damages that may afterwards be made in the suit. Cork Corporation v. Rooney, 7 L. R., Ir. 191.

Libel—Exhibition of Portrait Model of Man tried for and acquitted of Murder.]—An interlocutory injunction restraining the publication of a libel until the trial of the action will not be granted where there are conflicting affidavits as to whether the plaintiff has or has not consented to such publication. Circumstances under which an interlocutory injunction in actions of libel should be granted considered. Monson v. Tussaud, 63 L. J., Q. B. 454; [1894] 1 Q. B. 671; 9 R. 177; 70 L. T. 335; 58 J. P. 524—C. A.

Per Lopes and Davey, L.JJ.: The case of Bonnard v. Perryman ([1891] 2 Ch. 260) has established, as a rule of practice, that such an injunction shall not be granted except in cases where a verdict for the defendant would be set aside as unreasonable. Per Lord Halsbury: The case of Bonnard v. Perryman cannot restrict the discretion to be exercised on the facts of each case as to whether it is "just and convenient," within s. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873, to grant such an injunction. Per Lord Halsbury and Davey, L.J.: There is no distinction, as regards the power of granting an interlocutory injunction, between a case of libel affecting trade or property and one affecting character. Ib.

Trade Union — Picketing.]—Picketing—that is, watching or besetting the house or place of business of any person, or the approach thereto, within the meaning of s. 7, sub-s. 4, of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875—excepting when such picketing is for the limited purpose of obtaining or communicating information, according to the proviso to that section, is illegal, and will be restrained by interlocutory injunction. Lyons v. Wilkins, 65 L. J., Ch. 601; [1896] 1 Ch. 811; 74 L. T. 358; 45 W. R. 19; 60 J. P. 325—C. A.

Noxious Trade.]—Though a very strong case be made in support of an interlocutory motion to restrain an alleged noxious manufactory, the court will reserve the question until the trial, which will therefore be advanced. Att.-Gen. v. Charles, 11 W. R. 253.

Against Publication of Magazine.]—See RESTRAINING PUBLICATION, post.

See also Saxater v. Foster, Cr. & Ph. 302.

Over next Motion Day.]—When an interim injunction is granted over the next motion day or until further order, it signifies that the injunction may be dissolved before the day fixed, but cannot be extended beyond that period except with the leave of the court. Bolton v. London School Board, 47 L. J., Ch. 461; 7 Ch. D. 766; 26 W. R. 549. S. C., 38 L. T. 277.

No Irreparable Damage—Doubtful Cause of Action.]—Several shipping merchants whose vessels traded regularly and all the year round to and from certain Chinese ports, formed themselves into a conference, and agreed to allow a rebate every six months of five per cent. on all freights to those merchants who shipped their goods exclusively on conference vessels, and issued a circular notice that any shipment of goods on a non-conference vessel would render the shipper liable to forfeit the rebate on all his shipments in the conference vessels. The result was that the plaintiffs, part owners of non-conference vessels, trading to the same ports, had to ship goods at an unremunerative rate to counteract the loss of the rebate, and sustained damage, for which they sued. On an application for an interim injunction to restrain the issue of the circulars, and to restrain the defendants so acting as to prevent the plaintiffs shipping goods from those ports at a remunerative rate:—Held, that there being no evidence of danger of irreparable injury to the plaintiffs, and the cause of action being on the affidavits not free from doubt, the court ought not to grant an interim injunction. Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, 54 L. J., Q. B. 540; 15 Q. B. D. 476; 53 L. T. 268; 15 Cox, C. C. 740; 5 Asp. M. C. 467; 49 J. P. 646.

Forfeiture of Lease—Equitable Relief.]—A mining company, admitting the forfeiture of their lease at law, sought relief in equity, on the ground of accidental stoppage of works, substituted performance of certain covenants, and implied acquiescence on the part of the lessor's agent. There appearing reasonable grounds for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction, an interim injunction was granted, the plaintiffs undertaking to abide by any order the court might make at the hearing, and to allow judgment to go at law. North Stafford Steel, Iron, and Coal Co. (Burslem) v. Camoys (Lord), 6 N. R. 345.

Plaintiff out of Jurisdiction.]—The court will grant an ad interim injunction on the application of a plaintiff out of its jurisdiction, notwithstanding he has filed no affidavit in support of his bill. Hamilton v. Board, 1 N. R. 379.

Sale of Timber.]—Interim order granted on application of heir ex parte paternâ to restrain heir ex parte maternâ, who was in possession and had obtained administration, from selling timber. Anwyl v. Owens, 1 W. R. 205.

Obstruction of Lights.]—Where plaintiff and defendant held adjoining pieces of land under a common landlord, and plaintiff had, with the licence of the landlord and without objection by the defendant, erected a manufactory, interim injunction granted to restrain defendant, pending a trial at law, from so building as to obstruct plaintiff's lights. Crook v. Wilson, 3 W. R. 378.

Nuisance—Reversioner.]—Where the owner of houses, who lives at a distance from them, complains of nuisance to the inhabitants of the houses, the court will not grant an interim injunction unless there is evidence from the occupiers. Cleeve v. Mahany, 9 W. R. 882.

Temporary Nuisance.]—Where there is reason to believe that a nuisance is only temporary an interim injunction will not be granted. Ib.

Letters of Credit—Restraining Dealing.]—Where marginal letters of credit had been used for purposes different from that for which they had been issued, an interim injunction was granted to restrain transfer or payment. Maitland v. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, 12 L. T. 372.

Granted on Terms.]—Where it is manifest from the pleadings that issues have been raised in a cause which must necessarily be discussed at the hearing, the court will grant an interim injunction upon terms. Coleman v. West Hartlepool Ry., 3 L. T. 847.

Stakeholder—Principal out of Jurisdiction.]—The court will grant an interim injunction to restrain a stakeholder from paying over a fund in medio to the principal possessing the legal interest in it, although that principal is absent, and not amenable to its jurisdiction. Gladstone v. Musurus Bey, 1 N. R. 178; 32 L. J., Ch. 155; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 71; 7 L. T. 477; 11 W. R. 180.

8. MANDATORY INJUNCTIONS.

General Rules.]—There is no real distinction between the conditions under which the court grants mandatory and those under which it grants other injunctions. Smith v. Smith, 44 L. J., Ch. 630; L. R. 20 Eq. 500; 32 L. T. 787; 23 W. R. 771.

When the court is satisfied that a wrong has been wilfully done, and that there has been no delay or acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff, an injunction will be granted as readily in a mandatory form as in any other. Ib.

All injunctions should be issued with care and caution, and it is a mistake to suppose that extra care and caution are required where the form of the injunction is mandatory. Ib.

The power to grant mandatory injunctions is one which ought to be exercised with the greatest possible caution. Isenberg v. East India House Estate Co., 3 De G. J. & S. 263; 3 N. R. 345; 33 L. J., Ch. 392; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 221; 9 L. T. 625; 12 W. R. 450.

The rule in Jessel v. Chaplin (2 Jur. (N.S.) 931; 4 W. R. 610) followed as to the form in which a mandatory injunction should be granted where a building is ordered to be removed. Smith v. Smith, ubi supra.

In granting a mandatory injunction where there is no proof of substantial damage, the court will consider whether the defendants insist on their right to carry on the works objected to; that is, whether they insist not only on maintaining the wrong which they have committed, but on a right to do an increasing wrong in the future. Att.-Gen. v. Acton Local Board, 52 L. J., Ch. 108; 22 Ch. D. 231; 47 L. T. 510; 31 W. R. 153.

Semble, the court has jurisdiction to grant a mandatory injunction on interlocutory applications as well as at the hearing. Bonner v. G. W. Ry., 24 Ch. D. 10; 48 L. T. 623—per Fry, L.J.

Not granted unless the defendants have done an act which has caused injury, and given a right of action, to a private individual—per Brett, L.J. Glossop v. Heston Local Board, 49 L. J., Ch. 89; 12 Ch. D. at p. 121; 40 L. T. 736; 28 W. R. 111; 44 J. P. 36—C. A.

Light and Air—Material Damage.]—A mandatory injunction to preserve a right to light and air will not be granted unless there has been a substantial, material, or serious infringement of the right. Beadel v. Perry, 19 L. T. 760; 17 W. R. 185.

Discretion.]—The court as to granting or refusing to grant a mandatory injunction, will consider how far if granted it would affect the defendant. But in the first place, the court must consider the plaintiff's position, whose rights have been interfered with, and is bound to protect his rights unless by so doing it should inflict such a hardship upon the defendant as would amount to injustice. Myers v. Catterson, 59 L. J., Ch. 315; 43 Ch. D. 470; 62 L. T. 205; 38 W. R. 488.

The assistance afforded by the court of chancery by way of mandatory and prohibitory injunction in aid of specific performance is a jurisdiction the exercise of which is eminently discretionary, and ought to be guided and measured by what substantial justice requires as between the parties. Low v. Innes, 4 De G. J. & S. 286.

Liberty should not be given to a plaintiff, in a suit for a mandatory and prohibitory injunction in aid of specific performance of a building agreement, to apply to the court in the event of the defendant's erecting any wall or building which should prevent free access of light and air. Either the application for such liberty is premature, in which case the liberty ought not to be given; or, if reason for the application afterwards arises, it must be the subject of independent proceedings. Ib.

Where serious injury will be inflicted upon property which is the subject of an action unless the defendant continues to act in a particular manner, which he can do with comparatively little trouble and risk, but which the plaintiff cannot do at all, as where a colliery will be drowned unless the person in possession under an agreement for a lease continues to pump, the interim preservation of the property will be secured by the issue of a mandatory injunction, restraining the defendant from ceasing to act in that particular manner—e.g. to pump out the colliery. Strelley v. Pearson, 49 L. J., Ch. 406; 15 Ch. D. 113; 43 L. T. 155; 28 W. R. 752.

Upon a motion for an interlocutory injunction to restrain an interference with light and air, the defendant gave an undertaking to pull down any building thereafter erected or proceeded with, and to abide by any order as to damages; whereupon the court made no order upon the motion. The defendant subsequently completed his buildings. At the trial of the action, when a mandatory injunction was asked for, it was proved that the defendant's buildings obstructed the plaintiff's ancient lights:—Held, that it was a proper case for the court to grant a mandatory injunction, and not to award damages in lieu thereof, under the discretion given by Lord Cairns' Act. Greenwood v. Hornsey, 55 L. J., Ch. 917; 33 Ch. D. 471; 55 L. T. 135; 35 W. R. 163.

Injury complete before Writ issued.]—The fact that a building which obstructs ancient lights has been completed before writ issued, will not prevent the granting of a mandatory injunction for its removal. The material point for consideration is the state of the new building when the plaintiff first complains. Lawrence v.

Injunction against stopping lights until trial of the right, which was directed on the motion: court will never, on motion, make an adverse order to undo what has been done. Ryder v. Bentham, 1 Ves. 543.

A defendant having, after express notice, erected a porch in breach of a covenant entered into by him, was upon interlocutory motion ordered to remove the erection, although the same had been completed before the filing of the bill. Morris v. Grant, 24 W. R. 55.

The court will in some cases, by an injunction in a negative form, compel parties who have begun to take away the rights of others to restore them in some measure before the hearing of the cause. Spencer v. London and Birmingham Ry., 8 Sim. 193; 7 L. J., Ch. 281.

A plaintiff having upon the trial of an action established his title to a right of way, which the defendant, with full notice of his claim, had obstructed by building over it a solid and expensive structure:—Held, that he was entitled to a mandatory injunction compelling the defendant to remove such obstruction, even though the defendant offered him a substituted right of way. Krehl v. Burrell, 47 L. J., Ch. 353; 7 Ch. D. 551; 38 L. T. 407. S. C. in C. A., 48 L. J., Ch. 252; 11 Ch. D. 146; 40 L. T. 637; 27 W. R. 805.

Erection of Buildings after Notice—Attempt to Anticipate Injunction.]—The defendant in an action to restrain him from building so as to darken the plaintiff's lights, upon receiving notice of motion for injunction, put on a number of extra men, and by working night and day ran up his wall to a height of nearly forty feet before receiving notice that an ex parte interim injunction had been granted. It appeared to be a question of some nicety whether the lights were ancient lights:—Held, that, as the defendant had endeavoured to anticipate the action of the court by hurrying on his building, what he had erected ought to be at once pulled down, without regard to the ultimate result of the action. Daniel v. Ferguson, [1891] 2 Ch. 27; 39 W. R. 599—C. A.

Evading Service of Writ—Continuance of Building Operations.] — Interlocutory mandatory injunction granted to pull down buildings erected by the defendant after the issue of a writ in an action for an injunction of which the defendant had notice, though he succeeded in evading service of the writ. Daniel v. Ferguson, supra, followed. Von Joel v. Hornsey, 65 L. J., Ch. 102; [1895] 2 Ch. 774; 73 L. T. 372—C. A.

Serious Damage—Injury Complete—Easements.]—Relief by way of mandatory injunction is confined to cases of probability of extreme or very serious damage. But the court has no general rule against granting such relief where the damage has been completed before the filing of the bill. There is no difference in this respect between injury to easements and to other rights. Every case must depend upon its own circumstances. Durell v. Pritchard, 35 L. J., Ch. 223; L. R. 1 Ch. 244; 13 L. T. 545; 14 W. R. 212.

Serious Injury.]—The court will grant a mandatory injunction only in cases of extreme and serious injury. Sparling v. Clarson, 17 W. R. 518.

Nuisance and Contract.]—The principles of the court as to granting mandatory injunctions considered, with reference to the difference between cases of nuisance and cases of contract, and to a suit being by an individual or by the attorney-general. Att.-Gen. v. Mid-Kent Ry. and S. E. Ry., L. R. 3 Ch. 100.

Delay and Acquiescence.]—A mandatory injunction ought not to be granted to compel the pulling down of a building, which had been allowed to remain for five years without complaint. Gaskin v. Balls, 13 Ch. D. 324; 28 W. R. 552—C. A.

If a plaintiff is guilty of no acquiescence or delay, he will be entitled to a mandatory injunction, though the works complained of may have been completed before the filing of the bill. Goodson v. Richardson, 43 L. J., Ch. 790; L. R. 9 Ch. 221; 30 L. T. 142; 22 W. R. 337. S. P., Smith v. Smith, ante, col. 1559. Holmes v. Upton, L. R. 9 Ch. 214, n.

Water-Pipes laid in Soil of Highway.]—When water-pipes had, without the consent of the owner of the soil, been laid in the soil of a highway, an injunction to restrain the continuance of the pipes was granted; the owner of the soil not being left to his remedy at law, and not being required to establish his right at law. Goodson v. Richardson, 43 L. J., Ch. 790; L. R. 9 Ch. 221; 30 L. T. 142; 22 W. R. 337.

The facts that the soil under the highway was of no value to the owner, and that his motive for applying to the court was not connected with the enjoyment of his land, held not to be reasons against the granting of the injunction. Ib.

Running Stream—Riparian Owners—Obstruction.]—Where the defendant, one of the riparian owners of a running stream, has obstructed the flow of water, but on the evidence it seems probable that the water received by the plaintiff, the other riparian owner, will not be substantially diminished in quantity or quality, the court will not grant a mandatory injunction. Edleston v. Crossley, 18 L. T. 15.

Injunction Refused till after Answer.]—Injunction granted from further digging a ditch, but court will not order it to be filled up till after answer. Anon., 1 Ves. J. 140.

Mandatory Injunction to undo what was done Refused, but future Acts Restrained.]—A railway company had become owners of a canal by purchase, and they were bound, by several statutes, to keep it open and navigable. The plaintiff was the owner of a mill abutting upon a sort of bay in the canal, which he alleged formed part of the canal itself. This fact was denied by the defendants, who built a wall across the bay, so as to make the canal of the same width there as in other parts. The plaintiff filed his bill for an injunction to make the defendants undo what had been done, and to prevent them doing more:—Held, that the court could not make the defendants undo anything done, but that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to restrain them from proceeding to do more, on the plaintiff undertaking to bring an action at law to try the disputed right. Bradbury v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Ry., 15 Jur. 1167.

Where a building which interfered with the plaintiff's right to light and air, or any other easement, had been actually completed before bill filed, the court of chancery would not, in the absence of fraud, grant either a mandatory injunction or damages under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, but would leave the plaintiff to his remedy at law. But if any part was unfinished when the bill was filed the court had jurisdiction, and would grant an injunction as to that part, and an inquiry as to damages as to the finished part. Lawrence v. Austin, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 576; 13 W. R. 981.

Works Completed.]—Quære, whether a mandatory injunction will be granted ordering the removal of works already completed. Curriers' Co. v. Corbett, 2 Dr. & Sm. 255; 12 L. T. 169; 13 W. R. 1056.

Not asked for.]—Semble, per Turner, L.J., where a merely preventive remedy is sought a mandatory injunction will not be granted. Ib.

Letters Addressed to Agent at Principal's Office—Compelling Agent to rescind Order to Post-Office.]—B. was employed to manage one of L.'s branch offices for the sale of machines, and resided on the premises. He was dismissed by L., and on leaving gave the postmaster directions to forward to his private residence all letters addressed to him at L.'s branch office. He admitted that among the letters so forwarded to him were two which related to L.'s business, and that he did not hand them to L., but returned them to the senders. L. brought an action to restrain B. from giving notice to the post-office to forward to B.'s residence letters addressed to him at L.'s office, and also asking that he might be ordered to withdraw the notice already given to the post-office:—Held, that the defendant had no right to give a notice to the post-office, the effect of which would be to hand over to him letters of which it was probable that the greater part related only to L.'s business; and that the case was one in which a mandatory injunction compelling the defendant to withdraw his notice could properly be made, the plaintiff being put under an undertaking only to open the letters at certain specified times, with liberty for the defendant to be present at the opening. Hermann Loog v. Bean, 53 L. J., Ch. 1128; 26 Ch. D. 306; 51 L. T. 442; 32 W. R. 994; 48 J. P., 708—C. A.

Building in Breach of Covenant—Pulling down Building — Material Damage.]—When houses were set out in a regular plan and each purchaser of a house covenanted with the former owners of the whole not to erect any building in advance of the general line of frontage:—Held, that a purchaser of one of such houses to whom the benefit of such covenants were assigned, was entitled to a mandatory injunction to compel the purchaser of another house to pull down a bay window built in breach of such covenant, even without showing material damage. Manners (Lord) v. Johnson, 45 L. J., Ch. 404; 1 Ch. D. 673; 24 W. R. 481.

To Evicted Tenant to Remove Timber.]—Injunction granted ordering defendant to remove logs of timber left by him on premises of which he had agreed to give up possession at the end of his lease, and from which he was evicted by a writ of possession. Guinness v. Fitzsimons, 13 L. R. Ir. 71.

Restoration of Fence wrongfully broken down—Uneducated Defendant—Form of Order.]—In an action to restrain a defendant from permitting certain fences to remain broken down and removed, the court ordered the defendant, who was in an humble position in life, to restore and replace the fences which he had broken down and removed, instead of making a negative order restraining him from permitting the fences to remain broken down and removed. Bidwell v. Holden, 63 L. T. 104.

Obstructing Flues—Interlocutory Motion.]—Plaintiff had for years used flues for the passage of smoke; defendant, who alleged himself to be part owner, disputing his right to do so. Defendant having placed tiles on the chimney pots to obstruct the passage of the smoke, mandatory injunction granted, on interlocutory application, to compel defendant to remove the tiles. Hervey v. Smith, 1 Kay & J. 389.

Farming Covenant.]—The court will not grant a mandatory injunction to compel a farmer to farm in accordance with his covenant. Musgrave v. Horner, 31 L. T. 632; 23 W. R. 125.

Interlocutory Application — Landlord and Tenant—Breach of Covenant.]—The court will, upon an interlocutory application, when no substantial question remains to be tried, grant a mandatory injunction to rebuild a staircase where rooms, together with the use of the staircase, have been demised to the plaintiff, and the lessor has pulled down the staircase. Allport v. Security Co., 64 L. J., Ch. 491; 13 R. 420; 72 L. T. 533.

Mining Lease—Compelling Lessee to continue Working.] Semble, the lessee would be relieved from the expense of working an unprofitable mine, on paying the lessor for all the coal under the land. Ridgway v. Sneyd, 1 Kay, 627.

Discontinuing Business.]—The court has no jurisdiction to restrain a party from discontinuing the business of an inn; but it may restrain him from doing acts which would make it impossible for him or any other person to carry it on. Hooper v. Broderick, 9 L. J., Ch. 321.

Mining Tenant.]—Tenant of a mine restrained, on motion, from permitting a communication with an adjoining mine to continue open, and water to flow through, the intention being to compel the defendant to close the communication. Mexborough (Earl) v. Bower, 7 Beav. 127.

Against Railway Company.]—Mandatory injunction in effect compelling railway company to pull down certain walls, built for the purpose of preventing another railway company from crossing their line. Great North of England, &c. Junction Ry. v. Clarence Ry., 1 Coll. C. C. 507.

9. JUDICATURE ACT, 1873 (36 & 37 VICT. c. 66), EFFECT OF S. 25, SUB-S. 8 OF.

The extensive jurisdiction of granting injunctions originally given to the common law courts by the C. L. P. Act, 1854, ss. 79, 81 and 82, is now vested, by virtue of the Judicature Act, 1873, in the high court of justice. All acts, therefore, which a common law court, or a court of equity only, could formerly restrain by injunction, can now be restrained by the high court. Beddow v. Beddow, 47 L. J., Ch. 588; 9 Ch. D. 89; 26 W. R. 570.

The jurisdiction of granting injunctions thus vested in the high court is practically unlimited, and can be exercised by any judge of the high court in any case in which it is right or just to do so, having regard to settled legal reasons or principles. Ib.

Section 25, sub-s. 8, of the Judicature Act, 1873, does not alter the former practice as to injunctions, but is only intended to do away with certain technical objections. Fletcher v. Rodgers, 27 W. R. 97.

The principles on which the court acts in granting injunctions are not extended by the provisions of the Judicature Act, which enable the court to grant injunctions where it is "just or convenient," which must be read "just as well as convenient." Day v. Brownrigg, 48 L. J., Ch. 173; 10 Ch. D. 294; 39 L. T. 553; 27 W. R. 217.

The words "just or convenient," in s. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873, do not mean that the court is to grant an injunction simply because the court think it convenient; they mean that the court should grant an injunction for the protection of rights or for the prevention of injury according to legal principles; but the moment you find there is a legal principle, that a man is about to suffer a serious injury, and that there is no pretence for inflicting that injury upon him, it appears that the court ought to interfere. Though it has been said that, as a general rule, the court only interferes where there is some question as to property, it would seem that the interference of the court is not absolutely confined to that now; there may be cases in which the court would interfere even where personal status is the only thing in question. Aslatt v. Southampton Corporation, 50 L. J., Ch. 31; 16 Ch. D. 148; 43 L. T. 464; 29 W. R. 117.

The Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8, has not altered the principles on which the court acts in granting injunctions. Gaskin v. Balls, 13 Ch. D. 324; 28 W. R. 552.

The power of the court to grant injunctions has been enlarged by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8. Thomas v. Williams, 49 L. J., Ch. 605; 14 Ch. D. 864; 43 L. T. 91; 28 W. R. 983. But see Dick v. Brooks, 15 Ch. D. 25.

A suit was commenced in September, 1875, for rescinding an agreement and for an injunction to restrain a common law action. Upon the plaintiff moving for an injunction the defendant entered into an undertaking. The motion was renewed on the 11th of November, 1875, and it was ordered to stand over till the cause came on for trial, the undertaking by the defendant being continued. On the causes coming on for trial, the court, having regard to the provisions of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24, sub-s. 5, directed the cause to stand over until the action in the common law division was decided. Edwards v. Noble, 24 W. R. 390.

The powers of the court in granting an injunction, either at the hearing or upon an interlocutory application, have been extended by s. 28, sub-s. 8, of the Judicature (Ireland) Act; and the only limit to the jurisdiction is that the court must be satisfied that it is just and convenient that the order should be made. The court has now jurisdiction to grant an injunction to give effect to a legal right. Cork Corporation v. Rooney, 7 L. R., Ir. 191.

Equitable Defence.]—An action on a promissory note was commenced in the court of queen's bench before the Judicature Acts came into operation. After those acts came into operation the defendant issued a writ in the chancery division claiming specific performance of a parol agreement for value not to sue, and that the court should direct a stay of proceedings in the action. Upon motion accordingly in the chancery division for a stay of proceedings:—Held, that the court was in effect asked to grant an injunction or prohibition, which the court had no power to do, and that the alleged agreement was matter for defence, and ought to be pleaded, and gave no ground for a stay of proceedings. Garbutt v. Fawcus, 45 L. J., Ch. 133; 1 Ch. D. 155; 33 L. T. 617; 24 W. R. 89.

Lord Cairns' Act.]—Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict., c. 27) remained in force notwithstanding the passing of the Judicature Acts. Fritz v. Hobson, 49 L. J., Ch. 321; 14 Ch. D. 542; 42 L. T. 225; 28 W. R. 459.

—— Effect of Repeal.]—Though Lord Cairns' Act has been repealed since the passing of the Judicature Acts by 46 & 47 Vict. c. 49, s. 3, the repeal does not affect the powers of the court, inasmuch as the Judicature Acts re-enacted those powers, and consequently Lord Cairns' Act became obsolete. Chapman v. Auckland Union, 58 L. J., Q. B. 504; 23 Q. B. D. 294; 61 L. T. 446; 53 J. P. 820—C. A.

Jurisdiction — Quo Warranto — School Board Election.]—The court has jurisdiction under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8, to restrain by injunction a school board from declaring a member in default and proceeding to the election of a new member. Richardson v. Methley School Board, 62 L. J., Ch. 943; [1893] 3 Ch. 510; 3 R. 701; 69 L. T. 308; 42 W. R. 27.

10. DAMAGES.

a. Action for.

Amendment—Claim for Injunction.]—Where an action is framed as an action for damages, it is not convenient to turn it into an action for injunction by giving leave to amend. Halsey v. Brotherhood, 51 L. J., Ch. 233; 19 Ch. D. 386; 45 L. T. 640; 30 W. R. 279—C. A.

Damages and Injunction.]—Damages and injunction are two different forms of remedy against the same wrong; and the facts which must be proved to entitle a plaintiff to the first of these remedies must equally be proved to entitle him to the second. White v. Mellin, 64 L. J., Ch. 308; [1895] A. C. 154; 11 R. 141;

b. In Lieu of Injunction.

Jurisdiction to Grant.]—The court will not enter into the question of damages when the case is one which could be more effectually disposed of at law ; Lord Cairns' Act only gives the court of chancery jurisdiction to give damages in a case where a bill is properly filed, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42 does not make it compulsory on the court so to do. Swaine v. G. N. Ry., 4 De G. J. & S. 211 ; 3 N. R. 399 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 399 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 191 ; 9 L. T. 745 ; 12 W. R. 391.

On a bill for an injunction, the court refused the injunction and directed an inquiry as to damages. Wedmore v. Bristol Corporation, 1 N. R. 120, 187 ; 7 L. T. 459 ; 11 W. R. 136.

The court may entertain a question of damages when the damage appears substantial, though an injunction is refused. Johnson v. Wyatt, 3 N. R. 270 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 394 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1333 ; 9 L. T. 618 ; 12 W. R. 284.

A bill prayed for an injunction against the infringement of his patent by the defendant, for an account of profits, and for damages. After the filing of the bill, but before the hearing of the cause, the patent expired. The infringement being proved, the court held that its jurisdiction related back to the time of the filing of the bill, and awarded damages under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27. Davenport v. Rylands, 35 L. J., Ch. 204 ; L. R. 1 Eq. 302.

Injunction or Damages—Principles on which Courts act.]—The principles upon which the courts act in deciding whether or not to award damages in lieu of an injunction under Lord Cairns' Act, in cases of injury to property, are as follows. If the defendant, in the injury he is inflicting, is doing an act which will render the property of the plaintiff absolutely useless to him unless it is stopped, then, inasmuch as the only compensation which could be given to the plaintiff would be to compel the defendant absolutely to purchase the property, the court will not, in the exercise of the discretion given to it by the act, withhold an injunction. Where, however, the injury is less serious, and the court considers that the property may still remain the property of the plaintiff, and be still substantially as useful as it was before the defendant's acts, and that the injury, therefore, is of such a nature as can be compensated by money without taking away the property from the plaintiff, the court has and will exercise a discretion to award damages in place of an injunction. Holland v. Worley, 54 L. J., Ch. 268 ; 26 Ch. D. 578 ; 50 L. T. 526 ; 32 W. R. 749 ; 49 J. P. 7.

—— Lord Cairns' Act—Repeal.]—The court has power under Lord Cairns' Act to refuse an injunction, although no case is established for granting damages in substitution for the injunction, and in such a case may dismiss an action to enforce a covenant with costs. Sayers v. Collyer, 52 L. J., Ch. 770 ; 24 Ch. D. 180 ; 48 L. T. 939 ; 32 W. R. 200 ; 47 J. P. 741.

Although Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27) is repealed by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 49), s. 3, under section 5 the jurisdiction conferred thereby is still in force — Per Baggallay, L.J. Ib.

Lord Cairns' Act—Jurisdiction.]—Lord Cairns' Act did not confer upon the court of chancery any jurisdiction to award damages in a case where no wrongful act had been committed by the person against whom an injunction was sought. Therefore, where an action is brought for an injunction in respect of a threatened injury, and no actual wrong has been committed by the defendant, the court has no jurisdiction to give damages in substitution for such injunction. Dreyfus v. Peruvian Guano Co., 43 Ch. D. 316 ; 62 L. T. 518 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 492—C. A.

Damage after Action brought.]—Where there is jurisdiction to grant an injunction, damages may be given in lieu, for injury which has occurred since the commencement of the action. Warwick and Birmingham Canal v. Burman, 63 L. T. 670.

Where Notice of Action for Damages is required by Statute.]—The plaintiffs brought an action for an injunction to restrain the continuance of a nuisance arising from certain sewage works of the defendants, who were acting as the rural sanitary authority, and for damages. The defence, so far as material, was that a month's notice of action had not been given as required by section 264 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The judge, who tried the action without a jury, refused to grant an injunction, considering that the circumstances at the time of the trial were such that an injunction was not then necessary for the plaintiffs' protection, but awarded the plaintiffs 25*l.* damages :—Held, that, as the action was substantially and bonâ fide brought for an injunction, and as the damages were given in substitution for an injunction, notice of action was not required under the statute. Chapman v. Auckland Union, 58 L. J., Q. B. 504 ; 23 Q. B. D. 294 ; 61 L. T. 446 ; 53 J. P. 820—C. A.

For Maliciously Inducing Breach of Contract.]—In an action against a third person, who maliciously induced another to break his contract of exclusive personal service with an employer, in which the employed was also a defendant, but as against him the plaintiff claimed only an injunction, and not damages, it was held that damages might, in the discretion of the court, be given under Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27), and that the jury, therefore, should be directed by the judge, in the event of a verdict for the plaintiff, to find such damages as should be awarded ; first, if the court should think it a proper case both for injunction and damages ; and secondly, if the court should think it a proper case for damages only, and not for an injunction. Bowen v. Hall, 50 L. J., Q. B. 305 ; 6 Q. B. D. 333 ; 44 L. T. 75 ; 29 W. R. 367 ; 45 J. P. 373—C. A.

Plaintiff Entitled to Perpetual Injunction.]—Where a plaintiff has established his right to a perpetual injunction against the defendant the court has no power under Lord Cairns' Act to oblige him against his will to accept damages in lieu of the injunction. Krehl v. Burrell, 48 L. J., Ch. 252 ; 11 Ch. D. 146 ; 40 L. T. 637 ; 27 W. R. 805—C. A.

For Injury Already Completed.]—Where a building which interfered with the plaintiff's right to light and air, or any other easement, had been actually completed before bill filed, the court of chancery would not, in the absence of fraud, grant either a mandatory injunction or damages under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, but left the plaintiff to his remedy at law. But if any part was unfinished when the bill was filed the court had jurisdiction, and would grant an injunction as to that part, and an inquiry as to damages as to the finished part. Lawrence v. Austin, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 576; 13 W. R. 981. See also Hindley v. Emery, 35 L. J., Ch. 6; L. R. 1 Eq. 52; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 874; 13 L. T. 272; 14 W. R. 25.

Where the injury has been completed before bill filed, and plaintiff has in the first instance asked for damages, the court will not, even if the injury is substantial, grant a mandatory injunction, but will direct an inquiry as to damages. Gort (Viscountess) v. Clark, 18 L. T. 343; 16 W. R. 569—L.JJ.

Where damages are claimed in substitution for an injunction to restrain a wrongful act commenced before the issue of the writ, and continued afterwards, if the wrongful act has come to an end before the trial, the court has jurisdiction, under s. 3 of Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27) to assess the whole of the damages accrued. Davenport v. Rylands (35 L. J., Ch. 204; L. R. 1 Eq. 302) followed. Fritz v. Hobson, 49 L. J., Ch. 321; 14 Ch. D. 542; 42 L. T. 225; 28 W. R. 459.

Acquiescence.]—The court will, in a case where the legal right is alone in question, coupled with facts which amount to a qualified consent and acquiescence, award damages instead of granting an injunction to restrain proceedings by a railway company with works which have done and might do further damage to a neighbouring landowner. Lockwood v. L. & N. W. Ry., 19 L. T. 68.

Where, therefore, a railway company had trespassed on the plaintiff's land by removing his boundary wall, and was proceeding to build another wall, partly on his and partly on their own land, the court directed an inquiry in chambers to assess the amount of damage done, having previously refused an application for an injunction to restrain the re-building of the wall. Ib.

Breach of Covenant.]—Land was sold, subject to a covenant entered into with a neighbouring landowner, that "no buildings, except dwelling-houses," to front a certain road, should be built thereon. The purchaser threw the land into his garden, and enclosed it, by erecting thereon, along the side of the road, a wall, 8 ft. 6 in. high, for the greater part, but carried up in one part to the height of 11 ft. 6 in., for the purpose of forming the back of vineries and a greenhouse. In a suit for an injunction, to restrain the wall from continuing:—Held, that no substantial injury being caused, the court awarded damages instead of granting an injunction in respect of the breach. Bowes v. Law, 39 L. J., Ch. 483; L. R. 9 Eq. 636; 22 L. T. 267; 18 W. R. 640.

Discretion of Court.]—Where a plaintiff in other respects fails in equity, the court has not, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42, any jurisdiction, and has, under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, a discretion to refuse to entertain the question of damages. Durell v. Pritchard, 35 L. J., Ch. 223; L. R. 1 Ch. 244; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 16; 13 L. T. 545; 14 W. R. 212.

Under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, it is discretionary with the court whether it will award damages or leave the plaintiff to obtain them at law. Ib.

Under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42, where a plaintiff has at the time of filing his bill no ground for equitable relief, the suit is improperly brought into equity, within the meaning of the act, and the court will leave the question of damages to a court of law. Ib.

Contemporaneous Suit for Injunction and Action for Damages.]—A. filed a bill in equity against B. for the cancellation of bills of exchange, drawn by B., and accepted by A. in part performance of a contract, of which B. failed to perform his part, and for an injunction to restrain B. from parting with or suing on the bills; and, pending the suit, A. commenced an action against B. for damages for breach of the contract:—Held, that the suit and action were not for the same matter, and an order to elect obtained by B. was discharged. Anglo-Danubian Co. v. Rogerson, 36 L. J., Ch. 667; L. R. 4 Eq. 3; 16 L. T. 262; 15 W. R. 729.

Where Specific Performance Impossible.]—Although relief by award of damages, under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, is in the nature of consequential relief, yet the court has jurisdiction to grant it, notwithstanding that it may not be in a position at the hearing to grant an injunction or a specific performance on which the right to damages depends. Cory v. Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Co., 8 L. T. 237; 11 W. R. 589.

Damages Awarded though not Prayed.]—Cotton v. Wyld, 32 Beav. 266.

Lord Cairns' Act.]—The 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, does not diminish the rights of suitors; therefore, a plaintiff in equity, who would before the act have been allowed at the same time to sue the defendant at law for damages, may still do so, although he might, under the act, pray for and obtain damages in the suit. M'Rae v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 267; 18 L. T. 226.

When, at the time of filing a bill, the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction against a railway company to restrain them from using their land, damages were awarded to them at the hearing, although no injunction was in fact obtained, and the plaintiffs' interest in the land had meanwhile determined. Ib.

Where other Relief Refused.]—A court of equity will not direct an inquiry as to damages where it refuses other relief. Martin v. Douglas, 16 W. R. 268.

Therefore, where D., when building a house, inserted some tassels and bond timbers, to the depth of a few inches, into the flank wall of an adjoining house belonging to M., and rested the lintel of a door upon a wall, not disputing M.'s right to compensation for such user, an injunction or an inquiry as to damages was refused. Ib.

Where Injunction cannot be Granted.]—A plaintiff cannot recover damages by a suit in equity, where it is practically impossible for him, at the time of filing his bill, to obtain an injunction to restrain the wrong complained of. Betts v. Gallais, 22 L. T. 841.

A plaintiff filed a bill on the 8th January, 1868, which prayed for an injunction to restrain the infringement of a patent, and for damages. The patent expired on the 13th January, 1868 :— Held, that, as it was practically impossible for him to obtain an injunction before the expiration of the patent, it was not a fit case for the interference of a court of equity. Ib.

Inquiry as to Damages.]—The power conferred by Lord Cairns' Act, s. 5, on the court of chancery, of directing an inquiry as to damages, was not intended to be exercised concurrently with the ancient jurisdiction of the court for granting an inquiry as to profits. Therefore a plaintiff cannot obtain an inquiry both as to damages and also as to profits. He must be put to his election between the two inquiries. De Vitre v. Betts, 42 L. J., Ch. 841 ; 21 W. R. 705.

Injunction Granted where Damages in Lieu asked for.] — In an action by mill-owners, riparian proprietors, to restrain the discharge of water containing acid into a stream, where the defendant asked that damages in lieu of an injunction might be given, an injunction was granted. Pennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 773 ; 5 Ch. D. 769 ; 37 L. T. 149.

In a claim by the plaintiffs, as riparian proprietors, and as having prescriptive right to use of water, for injunction and damages :—Held, that there was evidence of actual damage, but that, even if there had been merely evidence of injury to the riparian and prescriptive rights of the plaintiffs, an injunction and not damages would still have been awarded. S. C., 25 W. R. 874.

Jurisdiction — Lord Cairns' Act.] — The jurisdiction given by Lord Cairns' Act to the court of chancery to award damages in lieu of an injunction is not limited to cases where a mandatory injunction is claimed, but extends to all cases in which an injunction is sought to prevent a continuing nuisance. Per A. L. Smith, L.J. : If the injury to the plaintiff's legal right (1) is small, (2) is capable of being estimated in money, (3) can be adequately compensated by a small money payment, and (4) the case is one in which it would be oppressive to the defendants to grant an injunction, damages in lieu of an injunction may be awarded. But there may be cases in which, although these four requirements exist, the defendant by his conduct has disentitled himself from asking that damages may be assessed in substitution for an injunction. Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., 64 L. J., Ch. 216 ; [1895] 1 Ch. 287 ; 12 R. 112 ; 72 L. T. 34 ; 43 W. R. 238—C. A.

Discretion — Lord Cairns' Act — Ancient Lights — Obstruction.] — Where the plaintiff's ancient lights have been obstructed to a substantial extent by a new building, and will be still further obstructed by the carrying out of the building scheme, the plaintiff primâ facie is entitled to an injunction to restrain such further obstruction, the court having no discretion to award damages in lieu thereof. The court awarded damages in respect of the obstruction caused by the part of the building already erected. Dreyfus v. Peruvian Guano Co. (43 Ch. D. 316) and Holland v. Worley (26 Ch. D. 578) discussed. Martin v. Price, 63 L. J., Ch. 209 ; [1894] 1 Ch. 276 ; 7 R. 90 ; 70 L. T. 202 ; 42 W. R. 262—C. A.

Appeal against Award of Damages.] — A plaintiff, who had obtained an injunction against a nuisance and an inquiry as to damages, objected to the amount of damages awarded, and to the way in which they had been assessed :— Held, that it not having been shown that the court had acted on any wrong principle in arriving at the amount of damages, an appeal against the award must be dismissed with costs. Ball v. Ray, 30 L. T. 1 ; 22 W. R. 283.

Damages for Nuisance, where Injunction Claimed.]—Injunction suit to restrain the defendants from causing a nuisance, by the working of their patent for making bricks and tiles under a covered area, to the plaintiff and her dwelling-house. The bill prayed an injunction, but did not ask any inquiry as to damages. The plaintiff at the hearing was willing to take damages instead of an injunction :—Held, that a nuisance was proved, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages although she had not prayed for them by her bill. Crawford v. Hornsea Steam Brick and Tile Co., 45 L. J., Ch. 432 ; 34 L. T. 923.

Decree Indorsed on Title-deeds.]—A memorandum of a decree, giving damages instead of an injunction in respect of a nuisance, directed to be indorsed on the plaintiff's title-deed. Ib.

Damages, how Calculated.] — Damages in equity under Lord Cairns' Act, s. 2, for loss occasioned by pulling up a railway, will be computed upon a general view of the whole case and an estimate, and allowance will be made of such a sum as may be considered a recompense for the loss sustained. Parties who make a claim for damages in equity must by evidence establish the facts on which they base their claim. Mold v. Wheatcroft, 30 L. J., Ch. 598.

c. Undertaking as to.

General Rules.]—Semble, that it is almost universally the practice, on granting an interlocutory injunction, to require an undertaking to be answerable in damages. Chapell v. Davidson, 8 De G. M. & G. 1.

It is the settled practice of the court, upon granting an interlocutory injunction upon notice, to require the plaintiff to give an undertaking as to damages. Wakefield v. Buccleugh (Duke), 11 Jur. (N.S.) 523 ; 12 L. T. 628 ; 13 W. R. 856.

Where the damage which may accrue to a defendant is of a vague and uncertain nature, the court, before granting an injunction, in respect of selling or dealing with a chattel, will require from the plaintiff seeking such injunction an undertaking to make good any such damage. Adamson v. Wilson, 10 L. T. 24.

An undertaking as to damages ought to be given by a plaintiff who obtains an interlocutory order for an injunction, not only when the order is made ex parte, but even when it is made upon hearing both sides. Teign Valley Ry. v. Southwood, 19 W. R. 690—L.JJ.

An interlocutory injunction ought to be made upon an undertaking as to damages. Graham v. Campbell, 47 L. J., Ch. 593 ; 7 Ch. D. 490 ; 38 L. T. 195 ; 26 W. R. 336—C. A.

Since Lord Cairns' Act, s. 2, empowering the court to award damages in cases in which it has jurisdiction to entertain an application for an injunction against the commission of any wrongful act, the court will be more strict than ever in requiring the plaintiff, as a condition previous to his obtaining an interim injunction against the infringement of a patent, to abide by any order it may make as to damages. Tuck v. Silver, 1 Johns. 218.

May be sent by Post.]—The court permitted an undertaking as to damages, on an ex parte injunction obtained by a company, to be signed by an officer of the company on a separate piece of paper and transmitted to the registrar. Pacific Steam Navigation Co. v. Gibbs, 13 L. T. 431; 14 W. R. 218.

Injunction wrongly granted.]—Where a plaintiff obtains an interlocutory injunction, upon giving an undertaking in damages, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the undertaking even though it should afterwards be decided that the injunction was wrongly granted, owing to the mistake of the court itself. Dictum of Jessel, M.R., in Smith v. Day (21 Ch. D. 421), disapproved. Griffith v. Blake, 53 L. J., Ch. 965 ; 27 Ch. D. 474 ; 51 L. T. 274 ; 32 W. R. 833 —C. A.

Where an injunction is wrongly granted, an undertaking as to damages given by the plaintiff is equally enforceable whether the mistake was in point of law or in point of fact. In such a case the court has no discretion to refuse an inquiry as to damages unless the damages alleged would be too remote if the defendant were suing in respect of them upon a breach of contract. Hunt v. Hunt, 54 L. J., Ch. 289.

What Losses.] — An army surgeon, living apart from his wife, was under orders to sail for Egypt, and proposed to take some of his children with him. The wife obtained an injunction to restrain him from so doing, the judge considering that he would be acting in contravention of the separation deed between them. The court of appeal took a different view of the effect of the separation deed, and dissolved the injunction. The husband applied for an inquiry as to damages occasioned to him by the injunction, in enforcement of an undertaking as to damages given by the wife, alleging loss of free passages to Egypt for the children, loss of pay, and expenses caused by his stay in London :—Held, that the inquiry must be granted. Ib.

Where Plaintiff is a Married Woman.]—An undertaking as to damages, required from a married woman in respect of her separate estate. Holden v. Waterlow, 15 W. R. 319.

An application was made on behalf of a married woman for an injunction restraining the Bank of England, until further order, from permitting the transfer of a sum of new three per cent. annuities, standing in the names of the executors of a testator, and to which the married woman claimed to be beneficially entitled. An injunction was granted for a fortnight on the usual undertaking of the married woman to be answerable in damages. The registrar refused to draw up the order on the sole undertaking of the married woman as to damages :—Held, that the sole undertaking of the married woman must be accepted. Prynne, In re, 53 L. T. 465.

Where an interlocutory injunction is granted upon the application of a married woman, her sole undertaking as to damages is sufficient. Pike v. Cave, 62 L. J., Ch. 937; 68 L. T. 650.

Action by Corporation.]—The court will not grant an injunction upon the application, ex parte, of a limited company, except upon the undertaking of some responsible person to be answerable in damages. Anglo-Danubian Co. v. Rogerson, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 87 ; 1 N. R. 185.

Where a corporation obtains an interim injunction, the court will, in a proper case, allow the usual undertaking in damages to be given by the corporation itself, and not require the undertaking to be given by some responsible person on behalf of the corporation ; and the same rule applies where the plaintiff is a local board. East Molesey Local Board v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., 62 L. J., Ch. 82 ; [1892] 3 Ch. 289 ; 67 L. T. 493.

Restraining Sale of Shares — Dismissal of Action at Trial—Measure of Damages.]—The plaintiff, claiming certain shares as his property, obtained, on giving the usual undertaking as to damages, an interlocutory injunction restraining the shareholder and his mortgagees from parting with the shares. Before the trial, a summons by the mortgagees, asking that the shares might be sold and the proceeds paid into court, was successfully opposed by the plaintiff and the shareholder. At the trial the action was dismissed :—Held, that, in ascertaining the amount of damages under the undertaking, all the facts must be considered, including the fluctuations of the market during the continuance of the injunction ; and that the amount payable by the plaintiff was not the difference between the price of the shares when the action was dismissed and the highest price at which they had been quoted during that period ; but the difference between the price when the injunction was granted and the price when the summons asking for a sale was issued. Mansell v. British Linen Bank, 61 L. J., Ch. 696 ; [1892] 3 Ch. 159 ; 67 L. T. 171.

Patent Action—Threats.]—In an action for the alleged infringement of a patent an order was made restraining the plaintiff until judgment in the action from threatening legal proceedings in respect of such infringement :—Held, that the order was in the nature of a final order, and therefore an undertaking as to damages ought not to be inserted. Fenner v. Wilson, 62 L. J., Ch. 984 ; [1893] 2 Ch. 656 ; 3 R. 629 ; 68 L. T. 748 ; 42 W. R. 57.

Limited Company—Undertaking by Counsel.]—The ordinary undertaking as to damages where the plaintiff obtains an injunction on an ex parte motion is properly given by the plaintiff's counsel, although the plaintiff is a limited company. Manchester and Liverpool Banking Co. v. Parkinson, 60 L. T. 47.

Enforcement—Delay.]—An application to enforce an undertaking to be answerable in damages on the granting of an injunction, ought to be made within a reasonable time after it is ascertained that the injunction has been improperly granted. Unexplained and unreasonable delay in making such an application will be a sufficient ground for refusing it. Hall, Ex parte, Wood, In re, 52 L. J.. Ch. 907; 23 Ch. D. 644; 49 L. T. 275; 32 W. R. 179—C. A.

Damage—Detention of Ship.]—Where, on obtaining an injunction against the use of a ship by an owner, an undertaking for damages is given, the measure of damages would include the loss of profit by the detention of the ship. De Mattos v. Gibson, 28 L. J.. Ch. 165; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 347; 7 W. R. 152. S. C., 1 John. & H. 79; 30 L. J., Ch. 145; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 282; 3 L. T. 121.

Loss of Prospective Tenant.]—An injunction to restrain the defendant from building so as to prevent access of light and air to the plaintiff's windows was granted ex parte on the 4th of November, 1879, and on the 27th of November was continued until the trial or further order, the plaintiff giving the usual undertaking as to damages. On the 18th of February, 1880, the court of appeal discharged the order. On the 11th of November, 1880, a perpetual injunction as to access of air was granted; but on the 21st of June, 1881, the court of appeal dismissed the action with costs. On the 16th of February, 1882, the defendant gave notice of motion for an inquiry as to damages, which was refused by Bacon, V.-C. The only damage alleged was that the defendant had agreed to let part of the property with the new buildings to a tenant, and was prevented from carrying this out by the injunction preventing his building. It was not proved, however, that there was any binding agreement to take a lease, nor did it appear that the injunction interfered with the erection of the buildings to such an extent as would have entitled the intended tenant to throw up the agreement if binding:—Held, by the court of appeal, that an inquiry as to damages ought not to be granted. Smith v. Day, 21 Ch. D. 421; 48 L. T. 54; 31 W. R. 187—C. A.

Trivial Damage—Delay.]—The question considered at what time the application for an inquiry as to damages ought to be made:—Held, that even if there had been a binding agreement by the proposed tenant to take a lease, and the injunction had so interfered with the building as to entitle the tenant to be off the bargain, damages ought not to be granted in respect of it, for that damages must be confined to the immediate natural consequences of the injunction, under the circumstances which were within the knowledge of the party obtaining the injunction. Ib.

The court is not bound to grant an inquiry as to damages whenever the defendant has sustained some damage by the granting of the injunction; but it has a discretion, and may refuse any inquiry if the damage is trivial or remote, or if there has been great delay in making the application. Ib.

After Notice to Discontinue.]—When a plaintiff in an action, having obtained an injunction upon the usual undertaking as to damages, has given notice to discontinue his action under Ord. XXIII. r. 1, the court retains its jurisdiction in the matter so far as relates to the question of these damages, and will direct an inquiry as to their amount on motion. Newcomen v. Coulson, 47 L. J., Ch. 429; 7 Ch. D. 764; 38 L. T. 275; 26 W. R. 350.

In such a case a delay, after discontinuance, of nearly eleven months was not held a bar to the defendant's right to an inquiry. Ib.

Interest on Purchase-money Given in Lieu of Inquiry.]—C. having, through D. his agent, agreed to sell a property to F., G., alleging a prior contract for sale to himself, commenced an action against C., D., and F. for specific performance, and, in default, for damages against C. and D., and obtained an interlocutory injunction restraining C. and F. from completing the sale, G. giving the usual undertaking as to damages. Malins, V.-C., held that no contract had been entered into with G., and dismissed the claim with costs as against F., but as against C. and D. without costs, considering the conduct of D. blamable, and refused to give any inquiry as to damages. C. and D. appealed, on the ground that the dismissal ought to have been with costs, and that an inquiry as to damages ought to have been granted. G. presented a cross appeal asking for damages against C. and D. The court of appeal agreed with the vice-chancellor that there was no contract between C. and G., but did not agree with him in his unfavourable view of D.'s conduct:—Held, that C. was entitled to damages under the undertaking, for that, unless under special circumstances, effect ought to be given to such an undertaking when an injunction turns out to have been wrongly granted; but that in the present case, as the only possible damage was that C. had been delayed in receiving the purchase-money, an inquiry would not be directed, but C. should receive from the plaintiffs interest at 5*l.* per cent. on the purchase-money, minus any interest actually made by him, the amount to be verified by affidavit. Graham v. Campbell, 47 L. J., Ch. 593; 7 Ch. D. 490; 38 L. T. 195; 26 W. R. 336.

Crown not exempt from.]—The court will not, in favour of the crown, depart from established practice, therefore in the case of an action by the crown to restrain the defendants from proceeding to construct certain tramways, the court refused to grant an interim injunction against the defendants unless the crown would consent to be bound by the usual undertaking as to damages. Secretary of State for War v. Chubb, 43 L. T. 83.

Costs of Inquiry reserved.]—Where in an action to restrain the defendant from polluting a stream and for damages, judgment was given for the plaintiff with costs, and an inquiry as to damages ordered, the costs of such inquiry were reserved in order that the court might exercise control over the manner in which the inquiry was conducted, and prevent the costs being unduly increased by the plaintiff. It is the usual practice to send such an inquiry to the chief clerk and not to a referee. Slack v. Midland Ry., 50 L. J., Ch. 196; 16 Ch. D. 81; 43 L. T. 434; 29 W. R. 302.

Extent of.]—An undertaking as to damages is the price which a person asking for an injunction has to pay for it; and such an undertaking should not be confined to the damages that may be sustained only by the party enjoined, but should extend to all the defendants asking for it. Tucker v. New Brunswick Trading Co., 59 L. J., Ch. 551; 44 Ch. D. 249; 63 L. T. 69; 38 W. R. 741—C. A.

But the court has no power to extend an undertaking given by a plaintiff so as to cover damages that may be sustained by a party who never asked for it when the injunction was granted. Ib.

Effect of, when Action Dismissed without Costs.—Where a plaintiff has, upon obtaining an injunction, given an undertaking as to damages, and upon the hearing of the cause his bill is dismissed, but without costs, the court will refuse a motion for assessment of damages, on the ground that any damage which the defendant might have incurred would arise out of the institution of a suit which itself has pronounced to have been rightly instituted. Bingley v. Marshall, 9 L. T. 144 ; 11 W. R. 1018.

When Action not Dismissed, but Injunction Dissolved.]—An injunction was granted, on the usual undertaking to be answerable in damages. The injunction having been dissolved, the defendant moved to dismiss for want of prosecution. and for a reference to ascertain the amount of damages. The plaintiff undertook to speed :— Held, that this was not the proper time for obtaining a reference as to damages. Southworth v. Taylor, 28 Beav. 616 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 868.

Damages, how to be Assessed.]—Where an interim injunction has been granted, upon an undertaking as to damages, and the bill is subsequently dismissed, the court has jurisdiction to make an order for the assessment of the damages, by a jury or otherwise. The ground of the jurisdiction is, that the party who gives the undertaking puts himself in the power of the court ; not in the suit alone, but actually and wholly independent of the suit ; the undertaking being an absolute one that he will be liable, in a particular event, for any damages that may be sustained. Newby v. Harrison, 1 John. & H. 678 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 863 ; 7 Jur. (N. S.) 981 ; 5 L. T. (N. S.) 12 ; 9 W. R. 849.

Application, when to be made.]—Where a plaintiff, undertaking to abide by any order as to damages, obtained an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding with certain erections, but his bill was dismissed at the hearing, the court refused an application by the defendant at the dismissal of the bill, for an inquiry as to damages sustained by reason of his having been restrained by the injunction for the space of a year, but without prejudice to any application he might make as to damages on the plaintiff's undertaking, upon the production of sufficient evidence to justify an inquiry. Butt v. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co., 14 L. T. 349 ; 14 W. R. 508.

Violation of Copyright—Injunction Continued on Undertaking.]—Ex parte injunction against violation of copyright had been continued, on defendant's motion to dissolve, upon plaintiff's undertaking to abide by the order of the court as to giving compensation to the defendant. Defendant held entitled to an inquiry as to the damage sustained. Novello v. James, 24 L. J., Ch. 111 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 217 ; 3 W. R. 127.

In Patent Action.]—The undertaking in damages usually inserted in an order granting an interim injunction should not be inserted in an interim order in a patent action restraining one of the parties from publishing threats of legal proceedings for infringement of his alleged patent. Fenner v. Wilson, 62 L. J., Ch. 984 ; [1893] 2 Ch. 656 ; 3 R. 629 ; 68 L. T. 748 ; 42 W. R. 57.

d. Effect.

Entry after.]—It is said in Tilley v. Bridge (2 Vern. 519) that an injunction does not prevent an entry ; but see per master of rolls in Curtis v. Curtis, 2 Bro. C. C. 631.

Foreign Attachment.]—Foreign attachment stayed by injunction. Mildred v. Neate, Dick. 279.

Authority to Receiver Pending.]—Receiver authorised to let the shooting upon certain terms, pending an injunction, upon trial of issue respecting the warren. Blanchard v. Cawthorn, Coop. t. Brougham, 113.

Party in Custody under Legal Process.]—On an injunction obtained, the court will not discharge the party out of custody if taken on legal process. Willis v. Daniel, 1 Anstr. 36,

Against Administrator.]—Semble, injunction restraining administrator from transferring intestate's stock into his own name, will, by equitable construction, operate to prevent his parting with any of the intestate's outstanding estate which has previously come to his hands. Scott v. Becher, 4 Price, 346 ; 18 R. R. 722,

Bail Bond.]—Where bail is put in above, an injunction to stay proceedings against the principal extends to proceedings against the bail ; where bail is only put in below, such an injunction extends to proceedings on the bail bond. Stone v. Tuffin, Ambl. 32.

Operates from the Order.]—Injunction when sealed at the next seal operates from the order, not from the sealing. Rattray v. Bishop, 3 Madd. 220.

B. IN WHAT CASES GRANTED.

1. Restraining Proceedings in other Courts.

As to Restraining Proceedings in Foreign Courts.]—See International Law.

Where the legislature has pointed out a special tribunal for determining a question, as a general rule no other court ought to restrain the proceedings before it ; but where the question has come before another court in independent proceedings in which it is necessary to decide the whole matter between the parties, the court may in such case restrain the proceedings elsewhere by injunction in order to save expense. Stannard v. St. Giles, Camberwell, 51 L. J., Ch. 629 ; 20 Ch. D. 190 ; 46 L. T. 243 ; 30 W. R. 693—C. A.

Where Admission Alleged to have been Obtained by Duress.]—The owners of two privateers seized upon a ship, as a lawful prize, it appearing by her papers that she had carried provisions to the enemy, and the captain signed a note acknowledging that they had justly confiscated his cargo ; afterwards, the captain brought his bill for an injunction to stay a suit in the admiralty court, on the lawfulness of the transaction, suggesting that some of the papers were lost, and that if the note should be produced which he was compelled to give he should be cast at law. The court denied the injunction; for if it was to be granted on such pretences, it would defeat the statute respecting prizes, and if the admiralty found that the note was obtained by duress and imprisonment, they could suppress it of their own authority. Anon., 3 Atk. 350.

Enforcing Wife's Equity to Settlement.]—A man suing for his wife's jointure in the spiritual court, will be restrained by an injunction in equity, till he has made a competent provision for her. Tanfield v. Davenport, Toth. 114.

Legacy.]—Where there is a trust, or anything in the nature of a trust, notwithstanding the ecclesiastical court has an original jurisdiction in legacies, yet the court of equity will grant an injunction. Anon., 1 Atk. 491.

An injunction does not deny, but admits, the jurisdiction of the court of common law, and the ground on which it issues is, that they are making use of their jurisdiction contrary to equity. So, where a trustee is suing in the ecclesiastical court for payment of cestui que trust's legacy into his own hands, or, in the case of a portion, where the husband is suing for it there before settlement made, the court of equity will, upon the same grounds, restrain them from proceeding. Hill v. Turner, 1 Atk. 516.

Custom of Inferior Court.]—By the custom of an inferior court, on an affidavit of debt, an attachment issued against the goods of the defendant below; and unless he could procure bail to pay such debt, damages, expenses, and costs as should be awarded against him, the defendant below could not enter an appearance, or have a trial of the action on the merits. A party so circumstanced filed a bill for an injunction, stating that he was not indebted to the defendant in equity, who had brought the action in the inferior court:—Held, that the court had no power to grant the injunction. M'Anaspie v. Dickson, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 216.

Semble, the proper course is a writ of error to the court of queen's bench or common pleas. Ib.

Quære, whether such a custom be valid. Ib.

Restraining Action in County Court.]—Legatees who had mortgaged their legacies restrained from suing the executors in the county court, the fund being ordered to be brought into court. Neighbour v. Brown, 26 L. J. Ch. 670.

In Lieu of Prohibition.]—The jurisdiction to grant prohibition is now conferred by the judicature acts upon every judge of the high court; but, by virtue of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24, sub-s. 7, and s. 25, sub-s. 8, the court may, in any case in which it has power to grant prohibition, grant an injunction to restrain the proceedings in the inferior court. Hedley v. Bates, 49 L. J., Ch. 170; 13 Ch. D., 498; 42 L. T. 41; 28 W. R. 365. Explained in Stannard v. St. Giles, Camberwell, ante, col. 1578.

Lord Mayor's Court.]—The plaintiffs made advances to S. & Co., on an agreement for the consignment of shipments to them from an agent of S. & Co. at H., who promised the plaintiffs to consign them accordingly. A shipment having been made, the agent directed the plaintiffs to insure a part of the cargo intended for them, and informed S. & Co. thereof, which they communicated to the plaintiffs. After the shipment, but before the consignment, the resident partner in the house at H. died, and his representative made the consignment to B., under whose orders, and by whom, it was sold, and the proceeds received by him; and S. & Co., being creditors of the firm of H., attached their goods in B.'s hands, in the mayor's court:—Held, that the plaintiffs' title being equitable, and not legal, they were entitled to the aid of the court of equity in the trial of their rights, and that the proceedings in the mayor's court should be restrained by injunction. Cotesworth v. Stephens, 4 Hare 185.

Liverpool Court of Passage.]—Injunction issued by the admiralty division to restrain one of the officers of a tug, to which an award of 3,500*l.* had been made in a salvage action in the high court, from proceeding with an action for distribution of salvage instituted by him in the Liverpool court of passage against the owners of the tug. "The Theresa," 11 R. 681; 71 L. T. 342; 7 Asp., M. C. 505.

Palatine Court.]—Special injunction granted to stay proceedings in an action in the C. P. at Lancaster. Hine v. Fiddes, 2 Sim. & S. 370.

Powers of County Palatine Court.]—The vice-chancellor of the county palatine has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain proceedings in the high court, and therefore he ought not to take an undertaking to discontinue them, and an undertaking so taken will accordingly be discharged. Alison, In re, Johnson, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 755; 8 Ch. D. 1; 38 L. T. 304; 26 W. R. 450—C. A.

Powers of County Court.]—The County Courts Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 99), s. 2, confers upon the judge of a county court all the powers and authorities, for the purposes of that act, possessed by a judge of the court of chancery, which at that time included the power of restraining by injunction an action in a superior court of common law. Such a power has been taken away from the court of chancery by s. 24, sub-s. 5, of the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict c. 66), and is therefore impliedly taken away also from a county court judge, who has moreover expressly conferred upon him by the same act (s. 89) the same powers as are possessed by the high courts of justice. Cobbold v. Pryke, 49 L. J, Ex. 8: 4 Ex. D. 315; 28 W. R. 259.

Unqualified Tribunal.]—Two railway companies were empowered by a special act to enter into a working agreement, but no provision was made respecting arbitration. The agreement made under this act contained a clause providing that any difference between the companies should be determined by arbitration, in accordance with the provisions of the Railway Arbitration Act, 1859. Differences having arisen, one of the companies called upon the railway commissioners to decide the differences under the 8th section of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873. The other company accordingly issued a writ for an injunction against the first company, which was amended by making the railway commsssioners parties, and asking for a prohibition :—Held, that the railway commissioners had no jurisdiction to undertake the arbitration, and a prohibition was issued accordingly. G. W. Ry. v. Waterford and Limerick Ry., 50 L. J., Ch. 513 ; 17 Ch. D. 493 ; 44 L. T. 723 ; 29 W. R. 826—C. A.

Bankruptcy.]—A. sold and delivered goods to B., who before payment became bankrupt. A. then brought an action for the price of the goods against C., alleging that B. had bought them on the joint account of B. and C., or on account of C. as undisclosed principal. The defendant C. thereupon served the trustee in the bankruptcy with a third-party notice under Ord. XVI. r. 18, claiming indemnity out of the bankrupt's estate in respect of the contract, but the trustee obtained an order in bankruptcy restraining all proceedings upon the notice :—Held, that the order must be discharged, as the court of bankruptcy could not dispose of the whole matter, and the case was one expressly provided for by Ord. XVI. r. 18. Smith, Ex parte, Collie, In re, 45 L. J., Bk. 116 ; 2 Ch. D. 51 ; 34 L. T. 603 ; 24 W. R. 310—C. A.

Action for Trespass—Plea of Licence.]—To a count for cutting down and carrying away timber growing on the plaintiff's land, the defendant pleaded that the former owner, whose devisee the plaintiff was, had by agreement bargained and sold certain timber growing thereon to the defendant, upon the terms that in a certain event the defendant might from time to time enter, cut down, and carry it away at an agreed price ; that, after the happening of the event and in the testator's lifetime, the defendant entered, cut down, and carried away, and paid for part of the timber sold, and that his entering, cutting down and carrying away other part thereof, in pursuance of the agreement, after the testator's death, and within a reasonable time, constituted the alleged trespass :—Held, that the plea was bad, upon the ground that a court of equity would not grant an unconditional injunction to restrain the action, and that a common law judgment for the defendant would not do final justice between the parties. Wakley v. Froggatt, 2 H. & C. 669 ; 33 L. J., Ex. 5 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1248 ; 9 L. T. 340 ; 12 W. R. 86.

Present Claim inconsistent with that made in former Action.]—In 1812 an assurance society granted a policy for 5,000*l.* to W. on his life, which was forfeited in 1816 for non-payment of premiums. A fresh policy was granted to W. in 1817 on the same terms as the forfeited policy. In the meantime a bye-law of the society had been passed, whereby the holders of policies granted in 1817 were prevented from participation in certain bonuses to which holders of policies granted in 1812 were entitled. After the death of W., in 1855, his executors accepted payment of 8,000*l.* as due on the policy of 1817. In 1860 one of the executors filed a bill alleging that the policy of 1817 was accepted on condition that the assured should be entitled to the same rights as he would have been under the policy of 1812, and praying for an order for the payment of the further bonuses. The bill was dismissed, and the executor brought an action against the society to recover the further bonuses. The society filed a bill to restrain the action :—Held, that the former suit having been brought on the footing that the policy of 1812 was void, the defendant could not be allowed to bring an action on that policy. Tredegar v. Windus, 44 L. J., Ch. 268 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 607 ; 32 L. T. 596 ; 23 W. R. 511.

Held, also, that the right of the society to plead the decree in equity in the action did not prevent the court from granting the injunction. Ib.

Equitable Plea already Pleaded at Law.]—Where a defendant pleaded unsuccessfuly an equitable plea, grounded not on equitable principles, but on the course and practice of a court of equity :—Held, that he was not prevented by the decision at law from filing a bill on the same grounds for an injunction to restrain proceedings in the action. Phelps v. Prothero, 7 De G. M. & G. 722 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 105 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 311 ; 4 W. R. 189.

A. pleaded an equitable plea to an action against him on a promissory note in which he had joined as surety, and on the 29th of May a verdict was found against him on the plea. On the 6th June he filed a bill for an injunction to restrain further proceedings in the action, and on the 12th June the injunction was refused by Wood, V.-C. On the 15th June judgment was entered up ; after which A. gave notice of appeal from the decision of the vice-chancellor :—Held, that the plaintiff had conclusively elected to be bound by the action, and that he was therefore precluded from trying the matter over again in a court of equity. Terrell v. Higgs, 1 De G. & J. 388 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 41 ; 5 W. R. 746.

A. executed a deed, in which he and B. were named as sureties, but which B. did not execute. The creditor brought an action on the deed against A., who pleaded the non-execution by B. as a plea on equitable grounds. This plea was met in such a way that a decision at law might probably have turned on a mere point of pleading :—Held, that the pendency of the plea was no reason why a court of equity should decline to interfere by injunction to restrain the prosecution of the action. Evans v. Bremridge, 8 De G. M. & G. 100 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 334 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 311 ; 4 W. R. 350.

The plaintiff sold two leasehold houses, one to the defendant and another to L. The conveyance to the defendant contained, by mistake, a part of the property intended to be sold to L. but which the defendant believed he was purchasing. Upon a bill filed against the defendant by L., he was directed to reconvey to L. that portion which by mistake was included in the assignment to him. The defendant then brought an action against the vendor for damages made under his covenant against incumbrances. An equitable plea was pleaded by him, and he filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the action, but the injunction was refused. Wild v. Hillas, 28 L. J., Ch. 170 ; 7 W. R. 82.

But if a defendant pleads an equitable plea, he cannot come for an injunction to restrain the action upon the same ground which is the subject of the plea, provided the court of law can give such relief as a court of equity will give. Waterlow v. Bacon, 35 L. J., Ch. 643 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 514 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 614 ; 14 L. T. 724 ; 14 W. R. 855.

But if it cannot, then the equitable plea is no bar to the defendant coming to a court of equity, subject, however, to the costs of the plea being controlled by the court of equity. Ib.

A court of equity will restrain an action for damages where the defence relied upon is an alleged agreement between the parties for the performance of certain acts to which a court of law cannot give effect. Ib.

Equitable Plea not Pleaded.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 83, giving a right to plead an equitable defence, is only permissive, and not compulsory; and a defendant who has not exercised his option of pleading an equitable plea, may come for an injunction to restrain the action, as he might have done before that act. Gompertz v. Pooley, 4 Drew. 448; 28 L. J., Ch. 484; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 261; 7 W. R. 275. S. P., Kinsford v. Swinford 28 L. J., Ch. 413; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 261; 7 W. R. 215.

Proceedings which would interfere with or determine Pending Suit.]—In a suit by three shareholders against the directors to restrain proceedings for recovering the amount of certain calls, an injunction had been granted upon terms of plaintiffs paying the amount into court. The directors' solicitor, a shareholder, obtained judgment by default against the company for his bill of costs, and commenced proceedings against two of the plaintiffs for the amount due:—Held (following Taylor v. Hughes, 2 Jo. & Lat. 24) that, the defendant (the solicitor) not having denied that the proceedings had been taken for the purpose of harassing and impeding the plaintiffs in their suit, the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction to restrain proceedings against them on the judgment, which proceedings would greatly interfere with, if not wholly determine, the pending suit. Horn v. Kilkenny, &c. Ry., 1 Kay & J. 399; 24 L. J., Ch. 241; 3 W. R. 226.

Action against Executors.]—If a cause for the administration of assets has been heard for further directions, and the executors have paid their balances into court, an injunction will be granted to restrain an action against the executors for breach of a covenant in a lease granted to their testator, and the master will be directed to ascertain the damages. Sutton v. Mashiter, 2 Sim. 513.

Action at Law pending Suit for same Matter.] A court of equity in which a suit was pending would have stopped an action for trespass vi et armis. York Corporation v. Pilkington, 2 Atk. 302; 9 Mod. 273.

Injunction granted on Terms.]—See Irving v. Harrison, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 48.

Criminal Proceedings.]—Whilst suits in equity are depending, plaintiffs indict defendant's agent at the sessions where they themselves are judges, for a breach of the peace. Order made to restrain plaintiffs from proceeding at the sessions till the hearing of the cause and further order. York Corporation v. Pilkington, 2 Atk. 302; 9 Mod. 273.

There is no restraining power in courts of equity over criminal prosecutions. Ib.

Where bill is brought to grant possession, if after that plaintiff prefers indictment for forcible entry, this court will stop proceedings upon such indictment. Ib.

No general jurisdiction in equity to enjoin or regulate proceedings upon indictment, but circumstances may give it; as where prosecuted by relators in an information as plaintiffs, they are subject to control by order personally affecting them; but not the defendants. Att.-Gen. v. Clearer, 18 Ves. 211.

Although there may be cases in which the court of chancery will interfere to restrain criminal proceedings taken by a plaintiff in equity against the defendant to the suit in respect of the matters to which the suit relates, yet the court will not so interfere where the remedies in the proceedings in the criminal court are for a purely criminal charge. Saull v. Browne, 44 L. J., Ch. 1; L. R. 10 Ch. 64; 31 L. T. 493; 23 W. R. 50; 13 Cox C. C. 30.

Unless the cases raised and the objects sought are identical, the court will not prevent a plaintiff in the court of chancery from proceeding in a criminal court against the defendants to the suit in chancery. Ib.

Held, that a remedy in the police court, which was the personal punishment of the defendants, was so distinct from a remedy in chancery, which was the recovery of property, that the court of chancery would not restrain the criminal proceedings, and that the discretion to stay such proceedings rested with the magistrates. Ib.

A court of equity has no jurisdiction to restrain criminal proceedings for the recovery of a penalty imposed by an act of parliament for a breach of its enactments. Kerr v. Preston Corporation, 46 L. J., Ch. 409; 6 Ch. D. 463; 25 W. R. 264.

2. Restraining Criminal and Quasi-Criminal Acts.

Though the court of chancery has no jurisdiction to prevent the commission of acts which are merely criminal or illegal, yet its function is to protect property, and therefore it will restrain acts which are of a criminal nature, if they are also of such a nature as to injuriously affect rights of property. Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley, 37 L. J., Ch. 889; L. R. 6 Eq. 551; 19 L. T. 64; 16 W. R. 1138.

Certain members of a trade union, employed at a spinning company's mill, took offence at a reduction of their wages and left their masters' service. The association then posted in the district, and advertised in the local papers, a placard or notice, which was in substance a warning to all workmen not to seek to renew their work at the mill until the dispute was settled. The company filed a bill to restrain the printing and publishing of the notices, charging that they were part of a scheme to prevent persons, by threats and intimidation, from hiring themselves to the plaintiffs, and that persons had, in fact, been so intimidated; that the plaintiffs' business was materially injured thereby, the value of their goodwill depreciated, and the corpus of their property irreparably damaged:—Held, that the acts of intimidation complained of, though punishable as a statutable offence, were yet within the jurisdiction of equity, as tending to the destruction of property. Ib.

Distress by a Stranger.]—Defendant, having assigned leasehold estate to plaintiff, afterwards brought an action of ejectment and was nonsuited. He subsequently distrained on the tenants, was fined by a magistrate, and then distrained again. Injunction refused. Best v. Drake, 1 W. R. 229.

Opening of Railway prohibited by Board of Trade.]—Where an act has been declared by a competent authority to be illegal, the court will, at the instance of the attorney-general, restrain that act, without examining the grounds on which it was declared illegal. Att.-Gen. v. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., 2 W. R. 330.

3. Between Co-Defendants.

Motion by a plaintiff for an injunction to restrain an action brought by one defendant against a co-defendant, granted. Kingham v. Maisey, 2 Sim. 41.

Under special circumstances, an injunction was granted, on the application of a defendant, against a co-defendant. Edgecumbe v. Carpenter, 1 Beav. 171; 8 L. J., Ch. 17.

Special injunction to restrain proceedings in ejectment between two defendants, refused, where the plaintiff's landlord might have made himself defendant at law. Moses v. Lewis, Jac. 502.

A railway company, before a decree was obtained, moved for an injunction to restrain co-defendants (the plaintiff's trustees) from prosecuting an action, on the ground that the object sought by it was identical with relief prayed by the bill against the company and the plaintiff's trustees. The motion also asked that all the proceedings in the suit might be stayed; but it was on both points refused, with costs. Russell v. L. C. & D. Ry., 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1007; 9 L. T. 14; 11 W. R. 983.

4. In Aid of Legal Right.

Trespasses.]—The court will not interfere to prevent trivial trespasses; and does not exercise its jurisdiction by injunction for the purpose of acting on legal rights, but interposes in order either to enforce legal rights, or to prevent mischief, until the time shall arrive when those legal rights may be ascertained. Saunders v. Smith, 3 Myl. & C. 711; 7 L. J., Ch. 227; 2 Jur. 491, 536.

Delay.]—When the court has interfered in aid of a legal right, by granting an injunction upon the terms of the plaintiff's bringing an action, it will deprive the plaintiff of the injunction, if he does not commence and proceed with his action with due promptness; but it will not do this if the defendant has been supine in the case. Bickford v. Skewes, 4 Myl. & C. 498; 8 L. J., Ch. 188; 3 Jur. 379, 818.

And see 10 Sm. 193.

Doubtful Right.]—Probability of right is sufficient to sustain an injunction. Tonson v. Walker, 3 Swanst. 679.

Certainty.]—The legal right must be certain. Bramwell v. Halcomb, 3 Myl. & Cr. 737.

Plaintiff Improperly in Possession.]—Where the plaintiff has, by tortuous means, got into possession of property, pending a suit to establish his equitable title to it, the court will not stay legal proceedings against him for the recovery of possession. Grafton v. Griffin, 1 Russ. & M. 336.

Irremediable Mischief.]—Where the rights of the plaintiff and the defendant are legal, the plaintiff, in asking for an injunction to protect him from a violation of his alleged legal rights, ought to show that the right has been established, or if he has no means of establishing it, that the right is primâ facie well founded, and that irremediable mischief will ensue pending the establishment of the right. Hilton v. Granville (Lord), 4 Beav. 130; 10 L. J., Ch. 398; Cr. & Ph. 283.

On an application for an injunction to restrain an alleged irreparable injury, by taking away stones from the sea-shore, the court, considering that the plaintiff was most likely to suffer by its non-interference, granted the injunction; and although the plaintiff's title was purely legal, and was not clearly made out, it refused to put him on the terms of bringing an action to try it, but merely gave him liberty so to do. Clowes v. Beck, 13 Beav. 347; 20 L. J., Ch. 505.

Nuisance—Conflicting Evidence.]—The jurisdiction of the court of chancery in cases of nuisance existed for the purpose of protecting a legal right, and was not an original jurisdiction; and if no reason was shown why the plaintiff had not proceeded in the first instance to establish his right at law, the court would not, on conflicting affidavits, try the question of nuisance. Semple v. London & Birmingham Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 120. See S. C., 9 Sim. 209; 2 Jur. 560.

When Granted.]—Where equitable relief by way of injunction is sought in aid of a legal right, the court, unless such right is clear, will not, except with the consent of both parties, declare the legal rights and grant a perpetual injunction founded on such declaration, but will require the question to be tried at law. Cardiff Corporation v. Cardiff Waterworks Co., 4 De G. & J. 596.

Defendant Submitting — Declaration as to Future Acts.]—Where a defendant submits to a perpetual injunction restraining him from the specific acts complained of by the bill, as being in violation of a legal instrument, the court will not make any further declaration of the legal rights existing between the parties, with reference to possible future acts, but will leave those matters to be decided when they arise, either by a court of law or by the court of chancery under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42. Att.-Gen. v. Boyle, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 309; 10 L. T. 290; 12 W. R. 368.

Pending Application to Parliament—Form of Order.]—When notice has been given to the court by the defendant of a pending application to parliament when an injunction has been submitted to, it should so appear in the order, to clear the defendant of any impropriety in making such application. Ib.

Nuisance — Trial by Jury.]—The question what is a nuisance is one peculiarly fitted for the investigation of a jury; and in an ordinary case, where the issue of a suit in equity depends upon a legal right, that right must be ascertained in an action before any relief can be granted by a court of equity. Att.-Gen. v. United Kingdom

Electric Telegraph Co., 31 L. J., Ch. 329; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 583; 5 L. T. 338; 10 W. R. 167.

Where, therefore, a company was, at the suit of the attorney-general and a private person, sought to be restrained from going on with their works, and the erection of posts and wires on waste and other lands adjoining property and elsewhere, on the ground of their thereby creating a nuisance and being guilty of a trespass, the court directed those questions to be tried at law, but retained the bill until after such trial. Ib.

Threatened Violation.]—In order to obtain an injunction restraining a threatened act on the ground that, if done, it will be a violation of some legal right, the plaintiff must show that the act must result in a violation of such right. Pattison v. Gilford, 43 L. J., Ch. 524; L. R. 18 Eq., 259; 22 W. R. 673.

The owner of an estate, the shooting over which had been let for a term of years, issued particulars of sale of the estate in thirteen lots, stating that the estate contained several plots of accommodation and building land suitable for the erection of villas and residences, and describing one lot in particular as well situated for the erection of a house. The particulars showed that it was intended to make a road through the estate and dedicate it to the public; but gave full notice of the right of shooting:—Held, that the court would not, at the instance of the owner of the right of shooting, interfere to prevent the intended sale. Ib.

Upon an interlocutory application the court will not decide a disputed question of title, but if it is satisfied that injury is threatened or apprehended, and the evidence that such is the case is not distinctly rebutted, an injunction will be granted. Crosse v. Duckers, 27 L. T. 816; 21 W. R. 287.

As of Right.]—When an injunction is sought in aid of a legal right, the court is bound to grant it if the legal right is established. Fullwood v. Fullwood, 47 L. J., Ch. 459; 9 Ch. D. 176; 38 L. T. 380; 26 W. R. 435.

Plaintiff must show Violation of Right.]—If a plaintiff applies for an injunction in respect of a violation of a common law right, and the existence of that right, or the fact of its violation, is denied, he must establish his right at law; but having done that, he is, except under special circumstances, entitled to an injunction to prevent a recurrence of that violation. Imperial Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Broadbent, 7 H. L. Cas. 600; 29 L. J., Ch. 377; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1319.

Award.]—For such a purpose the award of an arbitrator is equivalent to a verdict. Ib.

Increase of Damage after Reference.]—If, between the time of the case being referred and the award being made, there has been an alteration in the mode of carrying on the business complained of, it may, if in diminution of the cause of injury, be shown as an answer to the application for an injunction; but if in increase of the cause of injury, it need not be the subject of a fresh proceeding at law; that is matter for the discretion of the court of equity. Ib.

Where Legal Right Doubtful.]—The principle upon which the court acts in granting or refusing an injunction, where the legal right of the plaintiff as against the defendant is open to doubt. Electric Telegraph Co. v. Nott, 2 Coop. C. C. 41; 11 Jur. 157.

Where there is any doubt as to the exclusive legal title of a party claiming an injunction in aid of that legal title, the court will not exercise jurisdiction without giving an opportunity of trying the legal title by proceeding at law. Bramwell v. Halcomb, 3 Myl. & C. 737.

Observations on granting injunctions before the legal right is ascertained. Ollendorff v. Black, 4 De G. & Sm. 209; 20 L. J., Ch. 165; 14 Jur. 1080.

Preserving Status Quo.]—The object of the interference of a court of equity by interlocutory injunction between two parties who are at issue upon a legal right, is solely the protection of the property in dispute until the legal right shall have been ascertained, and therefore such an injunction ought always to be accompanied by a provision for putting the question into a course of speedy investigation at law. Harman v. Jones, Cr. & Ph. 299.

After twenty years Adverse Possession.]—Bill by a party out of possession of real estates, against the party in possession, and claiming by title adverse to that of the plaintiff, stating that the defendant had been in possession for twenty years, and that the plaintiff had only recently discovered his title to the premises, and had commenced an action of ejectment against the defendant, and praying an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing acts of trespass alleged to be productive of irreparable waste. Demurrer to the bill allowed, with costs. Davenport v. Davenport (Lady), 7 Hare, 217; 18 L. J., Ch. 163; 13 Jur. 227.

A party out of possession, claiming real estate by title simply adverse to that of the party in possession, cannot be heard in a court of equity upon an application to restrain the party in possession from committing acts of trespass productive of irreparable waste, until he has established his title at law. Ib.

5. Against Exercise of Legal Right.

Principles on which the court of chancery acts on an application for an injunction to restrain a party from prosecuting a legal right. Dalglish v. Jarvie, 2 Mac. & G. 231; 2 Hall & Tw. 437; 20 L. J., Ch. 475; 14 Jur. 945.

An injunction will be granted to restrain assignees from proceeding in an action, where they have not an equitable as well as a legal right. Booth, Ex parte, 4 Deac. & C. 211; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 93.

On a bill to restrain the exercise of a legal right, it is the duty of the plaintiff to satisfy the court that there are substantial grounds for doubting the existence of the legal right. Sparrow v. Oxford, Worcester & Wolverhampton Ry., 9 Hare, 441. Affirmed 2 De G. M. & G. 94; 21 L. J., Ch. 731; 16 Jur. 703.

Semble, the court will in no case interfere, upon an interlocutory application to prevent a party from enforcing a legal right, without putting the party applying upon such terms as will enable the court to do justice to the party restrained, in the event of the plaintiff in equity failing to make out a case for equitable relief at the hearing. Saxater v. Foster, Cr. & Ph. 302.

A court of equity will not, upon an alleged equity, interfere with an admitted legal right, unless there be a manifest certainty that, at the hearing, the plaintiff will be entitled to relief; therefore, where the title to relief, set forth in the bill, was not so clear, the court refused to continue the injunction, except upon the terms of the plaintiff giving judgment in the action, and paying the sum sued for into court. Playfair v. Birmingham, Bristol, & Thames Junction Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 640; 9 L. J., Ch. 253.

The plaintiff in equity had obtained possession of a leasehold by purchase under an execution, but without obtaining any assignment from the sheriff, which he ought to have done. The defendant then brought ejectment at law, but was restrained from proceeding in the action by an injunction granted on his answer coming in; from which it appeared that the ground of his action at law was the want of actual assignment, though he also sued on equitable circumstances, which the court held raised no objection to the injunction, as being for the consideration of equity alone. Jones v. Hughes, 1 Hare, 383; 6 Jur. 316. And see Doe d. Hughes v. Jones, 1 Dowl. (N.S.) 382; 9 M. & W. 372; 11 L. J., Ex. 50; 12 id. 265.

Although a court of equity has no right to interfere with the attempt to enforce a legal title for an interest, however small, it is its duty to inquire whether such interest was being enforced bonâ fide, or for an equitable purpose; and if a legal title were used at law for a purpose inconsistent with good faith, and with the equitable rights of another party, then a court of equity would interfere. Buckland v. Gibbins, 32 L. J., Ch. 391; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 781; 8 L. T. 129; 11 W. R. 483.

Where proceedings were taken to enforce a legal right, consisting of the residue of a term of which three days only were unexpired, for the purpose of obtaining an improper advantage, the court restrained the proceedings by injunction. Ib.

The court may interfere where a man unconscientiously exercises a legal right to the prejudice of another; and an act may, in some sense, be regarded as unconscientious if contrary to the dictates of prudence and reason, although the actor does the act without any malicious motive. Turner v. Wright, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 809; 2 L. T. 649; 8 W. R. 675.

Bonâ fide Exercise of Legal Power not Restrained.]—Defendants were lessees of mines with liberty, on giving notice, to make such railways over the surface as they should think necessary or convenient for carrying away the minerals. The plaintiffs, being lessees of other mines under the same lessor, took from him a lease of two closes of the same surface lands over which the defendants' power extended, in order to make a railroad for their minerals. The defendants thereupon gave notice that they required part of the surface lands for continuing a siding they already had communicating with a neighbouring railway, and proceeded to construct a siding on the same two closes which had been leased to the plaintiffs and (as required by their lease) to fence in the land, the effect being to exclude the plaintiffs from access across the closes to the railway. The plaintiffs brought an action to restrain the obstruction, alleging that the defendants' further lines were unnecessary, and that the defendants were exercising their power malâ fide and unreasonably:—Held, by analogy to the principle governing cases of purchase under compulsory powers, that, as the defendants were exercising a legal power, the onus of proving mala fides was on the plaintiffs, and that even if further accommodation was not at present necessary, the defendants were entitled to look forward to the time when it might become so. James v. Lovel, 56 L. T. 739; 35 W. R. 626.

6. Protection of Property Pending Litigation.

The plaintiff outlawed his debtor, and obtained an injunction, and was proceeding to obtain a custodiam, but, fearing lest the property should be carried off, he filed a bill for an injunction:—Held, that he was entitled to an injunction to preserve the property until he could obtain his custodiam. Barry v. Donnellan, 1 Hog. 339.

An injunction to restrain a defendant from parting with the property in question in the cause may be granted, notwithstanding a principal party interested is out of the jurisdiction. Malcolm v. Scott, 3 Hare, 39; 14 L. J., Ch. 57; 8 Jur. 1059.

In what cases the court will interfere to preserve property in litigation in statu quo. Shrewsbury and Chester Ry. v. Shrewsbury and Birmingham Ry., 1 Sim. (N.S.) 410; 20 L. J. Ch. 574: 15 Jur. 548.

The court will in many cases interfere to preserve property in statu quo during the pendency of a suit in which the rights to it are to be decided, and that without expressing, and often without having the means of forming, any opinion as to such rights; and, in order to support an injunction for such purpose, it is not necessary for the court to decide upon the merits in favour of the plaintiff. If therefore the bill states a substantial question between the parties, the title to the injunction may be good, and yet the title to the relief prayed may ultimately fail. G. W. Ry. v. Birmingham & Oxford Junction Ry., 2 Ph. 597; 17 L. J., Ch. 243; 12 Jur. 106.

Statute giving Right, but no Remedy by Action.]—The owner of a ferry obtained an act enabling him to substitute a bridge, and providing that persons evading the tolls by conveying passengers, &c., across, otherwise than by the bridge, should be liable to penalties to be summarily enforced by a justice, under a distress warrant, and in default of distress by commitment of the offender. A railway company afterwards, having their terminus on the bank, established steamboats for the conveyance of their passengers across:—Held, that the act, giving no remedy by an action, as in a case where penalties might be recovered de die in diem, the court would protect by injunction an infringement of the right; and the court would not simply leave the complaining party to his remedy by distress, in order to try the legal right in replevin, but would direct an issue to try it, and not allow the defendant to object that the alleged wrong was done by a corporation; and would require an account to be kept pending an inquiry at law, without prejudice to the legal question, by granting the injunction in a case where the injury was not extreme or irreparable. Cory v. Yarmouth & Norwich Ry., 3 Hare, 593; 3 Railw. Cas. 524.

Against Waste.]—Although an injunction ex parte will not be granted to stay waste, yet an interim order will be given, with leave to discharge it, where the object of the application is to preserve property during litigation. Anwyl v. Owens, 22 L. J., Ch. 995; 1 W. R. 207—L.JJ.

Advowson.]—On the principle of protecting property pending litigation, the court will, in a suit to impeach a conveyance of an advowson, restrain the institution of a clerk, even as against a defendant claiming to be a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice under it. Greenslade v. Dare, 17 Beav. 502.

Legal Estate.]—In an action by an equitable mortgagee for sale or foreclosure the court granted an interim injunction to restrain dealing with the legal estate till the next motion day, on an ex parte application by the plaintiff; there being ground for believing that the defendants intended to part with the legal estate pendente lite. London and County Banking Co. v. Lewis, 21 Ch. D. 490; 47 L. T. 501; 31 W. R. 233.

Pending Appeal to House of Lords.]—Where a bill has been dismissed and the decree has been inrolled, the court has exhausted its jurisdiction in that suit, and will not grant an injunction to preserve the property which was in question in the cause, pending an appeal to the House of Lords; and where the plaintiff is desirous of having the property thus temporarily protected, it is incumbent on him to see that the decree is framed so as to keep alive the jurisdiction pending the appeal. Galloway v. London Corporation, 11 Jur. (N S.) 537; 12 L. T. 623.

A decree was made in three suits for the administration of the personal estate of an intestate, directing the usual inquiry as to her next of kin. A certificate was made finding five persons of the name of F., who were resident abroad, to be the next of kin, and an order was made for distribution of the fund in court among them. S., who had not been a party to the proceedings, applied by motion to stay the distribution of the fund, alleging herself to be next of kin. The vice-chancellor suspended the giving out of the order, and directed his chief clerk to inquire whether S. had made out a primâ facie case, and the chief clerk finding that she had not, the vice-chancellor directed the order to be given out without prejudice to any independent proceeding by S. Four of the five shares were at once transferred to four of the persons found entitled; the fifth remained in court. Two of the shares which had been transferred were sold out, and the proceeds received by the vendors. S. then commenced an action, and obtained in it an order granting an injunction to restrain any dealing with the three shares which had not been sold, and directing an inquiry who were the next of kin, and this order was subsequently directed to be taken as made in the three suits as well as in the action. The chief clerk again found the F. family to be next of kin. The action and a summons to vary the certificate were heard before the vice-chancellor, who dismissed the summons and the action, but continued the injunction in the three causes until further order. S. appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed the decision of the vice-chancellor dismissing her bill, but S. being about to appeal to the House of Lords:—Held, that as, if S. ultimately succeeded in the House of Lords, her success would be useless unless the fund were protected in the meantime, the injunction ought to be continued pending the appeal. Polini v. Gray, Sturla v. Freccia, 49 L. J., Ch. 41; 12 Ch. D. 438; 40 L. T. 861.

And see APPEAL.

Alleged Right to Compensation for Abolition of Office in Custom House.]—Tunstall v. Boothby, 9 L. J., Ch. 294.

Specific Chattels.]—The jurisdiction to protect by injunction the possession, and to decree the delivery up, of specific chattels, is not confined to chattels, the loss or injury of which would not be adequately compensated by damages, but extends to all cases in which the party in possession of the chattels has acquired such possession through an alleged abuse of power on the part of one standing in a fiduciary relation to the plaintiff. Wood v. Rowcliffe, 2 Ph. 382; 17 L. J., Ch. 83; 11 Jur. 915.

Where a chattel, from being used in business or otherwise, has a peculiar value, the court will entertain a bill for an injunction to restrain its sale or detention. North v. G. N. Ry., 2 Giff. 64; 29 L. J., Ch. 301; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 244; 1 L. T. 510.

Irreparable Damage to Seashore.]—See Clowes v. Beck, 13 Beav. 347; 20 L. J., Ch. 505 (ante, col. 1586).

Alleged Lien—Parting with Fund.]—Injunction refused to restrain defendants from parting with a fund on which plaintiffs claimed a lien, the claim being doubtful, and the defendants' liability, if the claim were valid, being admitted. South Yorkshire Ry. and River Don Co. v. G. N. Ry., 1 W. R. 203—L.JJ.

Public Company—Illegal Association.]—The court will interfere by injunction to secure the property of an association from being appropriated by the trustee, who is also sole director, for the purpose of recouping himself the sums he has advanced, though questions are raised as to the legality of the association, and though relief might be refused at the hearing. Sheppard v. Oxenford, 3 W. R. 397—L.JJ.

Promissory Note.]—Injunction granted, on terms, to restrain defendant from negotiating a promissory note, and from further prosecuting an action at law upon it. Simons v. Cridland, 5 L. T. 523.

Adjacent Mines—Flow of Water.]—The barrier between two mines having been perforated, the defendant, owner of one of them, artificially caused his water to pass by the perforations into the plaintiff's mine, that being beneficial to him, but causing irreparable damage to the plaintiff. Interlocutory mandatory injunction granted to keep things until the hearing in the state in which they were ante litem motam:—Semble, it was immaterial whether or not the perforation was the wrongful act of the injured owner. Westminster Brymbo Coal and Coke Co. v. Clayton, 36 L. J., Ch. 476.

Plaintiff need not be in Occupation.]—A court of equity interferes by injunction to prevent an injury in respect of a legal right, simply on the ground of the damage it produces to property; and the jurisdiction of the court is not confined to restraining injury to the enjoyment and comfort in the occupation. Therefore it is not necessary that a party filing a bill for an injunction to restrain such an injury should be in the actual occupation of the property. Wilson v. Townend, 1 Drew. & Sm. 324; 30 L. J., Ch. 25; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1109; 3 L. T. 342; 9 W. R. 30. See also Harman v. Jones, Cr. & Ph. 299, ante, col. 1588, and Strelley v. Pearson, ante, col. 1560.

7. Restraining Publication.

Injunction granted to restrain the disclosure of secrets come to the defendant's knowledge in the course of a confidential employment. Ecitt v. Price, 1 Sim. 483.

Injunction to restrain the printing of an unpublished MS., a copy of which had been, by the representative of the author, given to a person under whom defendant claimed, but not with the intention that he should publish it. Queensbury (Duke) v. Shebbeare, 2 Eden, 329.

A plaintiff obtaining information from the production of documents in the defendant's possession, is not at liberty to make it public; and an injunction will, if necessary, be granted to restrain him. Williams v. Prince of Wales Life Assurance Co., 23 Beav. 338; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 55.

Publication of facts contrary to agreement restrained, although occasioned by a very small difference in money arrangements. Anon., 3 Jur. (N.S.) 685.

Proprietors of a newspaper dissolved partnership, and one of them agreed to purchase the whole. Before the completion and pending a suit for specific performance, the purchaser published statements as to the profits and loss of the paper, in order to establish a company to carry it on. A motion for an injunction to restrain him was refused. Marshall v. Watson, 25 Beav. 501.

A plaintiff prayed an injunction to restrain the defendant from falsely representing that the latter was carrying on business in succession to, or in connection with him; the bill averred general acts of misrepresentation, but one case only was made out in which the defendant had opened a letter addressed to the plaintiff, answered it in his own name, and endeavoured to obtain the custom which that letter offered to the plaintiff:—Held, that though this raised a grave suspicion against the defendant, it was not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to an injunction. Edgington v. Edgington, 11 L. T. 299.

A. being indebted to T., an agreement was entered into, by which judgment for the debt was to be signed, but not entered up, against A. for securing payment by instalments, T. agreeing not to enter up judgment (so as to get into the Tradesman's Circular), nor publish it in any way. Shortly afterwards T. threatened to sell the judgment debt at a periodical sale, which would necessarily involve the publication, by advertisements, of A.'s indebtedness. The court, being of opinion that this threat was not bonâ fide for the purpose of sale, but for getting better terms from A., restrained such publication by injunction. A. having in the first place obtained an ex parte injunction, T. offered immediately, and before further expenses were incurred, to submit to a perpetual injunction, but refused to pay costs. A. thereupon brought the matter to a hearing:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs to the hearing. Jamieson v. Teague, 3 Jur. (N.S) 1206.

C. filed a bill to establish the validity of his security in priority to a voluntary settlement executed by his debtor H., who was subsequently in prison for debt, and discharged from custody under the acts for the relief of insolvent debtors. C. succeeded in establishing his claim, and, having been paid, he sent to the trustees of the settlement a notice announcing his intention to impeach the settlement, and warning them not to part with any of the funds in their hands. The trustees replied, that unless certain proceedings were instituted within one month they should disregard the notice. No proceedings were instituted within the time. Subsequently a bill was filed by the cestui que trust under the settlement, praying for an injunction to restrain C. from continuing the notice; the court ordered that the trustees should be at liberty to deal with the income of the funds until further order, according to the trusts of the settlement. Lonergan v. Stourton, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1067; 11 W. R. 984.

A spinning company being obliged to re-adjust its rate of wages, and some of its workmen being members of a trade union, the company applied to such association on the subject; and the president, secretary, and two members went to the mill, and, after consultation, expressed themselves content with such re-adjustment. On the same day, however, the workmen who were members of the association gave a week's notice and left the mill. The association then posted a notice, which was in substance a warning to all workmen not to hire themselves to the company until the dispute was settled, and also advertised the notice in the local papers. The company remonstrated, posted a counter notice of warning, and filed a bill to restrain the publication and posting of such notices by the association, charging that workmen were by the threats and intimidation of the association prevented from hiring themselves to, or remaining in the employment of, the company; that the company was materially injured, their goodwill much lessened in value; and that they were losing 178*l.* per week; and praying an injunction:—Held, that the threatening or intimidating workmen from hiring themselves to or remaining in the employment of a tradesman or manufacturer is within the jurisdiction of a court of equity, because it is injurious to the trader's property. Ib.

Held, that this was a deterioration of the employer's business and property, and that a bill would lie to restrain the workmen from continuing such intimidation. Ib.

Proceedings of Court.]—Injunction until the hearing under the order of the house of lords for publishing Ld. Melville's trial and prohibiting any other publication of it. Gurney v. Longman, 13 Ves. 493.

Jurisdiction of the court to grant or dissolve an injunction, or commit for contempt in cases where the plaintiffs or defendants, or other persons, publish notices or advertisements with reference to the subject of a suit, calculated to prejudice the rights, or misrepresent the relative position or character, of any of the parties to the cause. Mathews v. Smith, 3 Hare, 331.

Although the court possesses the power of preventing the publication of its proceedings pending litigation, it will not undertake to restrain every report published in the columns of a newspaper, which may appear to be unfair in any respect. Brook v. Evans, 29 L. J., Ch. 616; 3 L. T. 571—L.JJ.

To publish and circulate during the progress of an action a copy of the pleadings in the action with comments depreciating the case of one of the parties is a contempt of court, and calculated to prejudice the fair trial of the action, and such contempt, if threatened to be committed, will be restrained by injunction. Kitcat v. Sharp, 52 L. J., Ch. 134; 48 L. T. 64; 31 W. R. 227.

Garbled Statements of Legal Proceedings.]—Pending litigation, the court will restrain publication, by any of the parties, of ex parte garbled statements, calculated to prejudice the case of their opponents, of any of the proceedings in court or before the examiner. The fact that such publication is by way of defence, and in answer to similar publications by the other side, will not prevent the injunction being granted, but may excuse from payment of the costs of the motion. Coleman v. West Hartlepool Ry., 8 W. R. 734.

See also COPYRIGHT—CONTEMPT OF COURT—TRADE.

Public Lecture—Notes taken by Shorthand Writer—Publication in Shorthand Characters.]—Where a lecture is delivered to an audience admitted by ticket without payment, there is an implied contract on their part not to publish such lecture for purposes of profit. Nicols v. Pitman, 53 L. J., Ch. 552; 26 Ch. D. 374; 50 L. T. 254; 32 W. R. 631.

The plaintiff delivered a lecture at a working men's college to an audience who were admitted gratuitously by tickets issued by the committee of the college. The plaintiff had committed the lecture to writing, but delivered it from memory. The defendant, a shorthand writer, attended the lecture, took it down nearly verbatim, and subsequently published his notes in shorthand characters in a periodical brought out and sold by him for the instruction of learners in the art of shorthand writing:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from so publishing the lecture. Ib. See also Caird v. Sime, 57 L. J., P. C. 2; 12 App. Cas. 326; 57 L. T. 634; 36 W. R. 199—H. L. (Sc.).

Libel—Jurisdiction to Grant Interlocutory Injunction.]—The high court has jurisdiction to grant an interlocutory injunction restraining the publication of a libel. Bonnard v. Perryman, 60 L. J., Ch. 617; [1891] 2 Ch. 269; 65 L. T. 506; 39 W. R. 435—C. A.

An interlocutory injunction will not be granted to restrain the publication of a libel unless the court is of opinion that injury will be caused to the plaintiff's person or property by a continuance of the publication. Interlocutory injunction refused where the libel, though unjustifiable, was of such a character that no one would attach the slightest weight to it. Salomons v. Knight, 60 L. J., Ch. 743; [1891] 2 Ch. 294; 64 L. T. 589; 39 W. R. 506—C. A.

Pirated Book.]—Injunction granted to restrain publication of a book which appeared to contain pirated matter, until the trial of an action at law. Sweet v. Shaw, 8 L. J., Ch. 216.

Masters and Workmen—Trade Union—Intimidation—Malicious Injury.]—In consequence of a dispute with reference to an alleged preferential employment of non-union men by a building firm, a trade union published a poster headed "Trollope's Black List," containing the names of non-union men employed by the firm. Upon motion for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the publication, it was decided by Kekewich, J., that the publication was a purely malicious act, and that therefore an interlocutory injunction must be granted. The defendants appealed:—Held, that a primâ facie case had been established that the defendants were doing more than was in fact necessary for their own protection; and that therefore the order for an interlocutory injunction ought not to be interfered with. Trollope v. London Building Trades' Federation, 72 L. T. 342—C. A.

Circular Stating Defendant to be Plaintiff's Successor in Business.]—Injunction granted to restrain the defendants from issuing a trade circular representing to the public that they were the successors in business of the plaintiffs, or were carrying on the same business which the plaintiffs formerly and still carried on. Harper v. Pearson, 3 L. T. 547. See also Scott v. Scott, 16 L. T. 143.

Reputation—Advertisements Injurious to.]—There is jurisdiction to restrain by injunction the publication of advertisements injurious to a man's reputation or mercantile credit. Dixon v. Holden, L. R. 7 Eq. 488; 20 L. T. 357; 17 W. R. 482.

Libel—Injury to Trade—Placard—Circular.]—A motion was made by a firm of manufacturers for an interim injunction to restrain the secretary of a trade union committee and a printer from publishing false and injurious statements to the effect, inter alia, that the plaintiffs practised in their business a pernicious system of sweating. The respondents offered to treat the hearing of the motion as the trial of the action, but such offer was declined by the applicants. The court being of opinion that the statements constituted a trade libel, and that there was nothing reserved for the trial of the action, granted an interim injunction. Bonnard v. Perryman ([1891] 2 Ch. 269) distinguished. Collard v. Marshall, 61 L. J., Ch. 268; [1892] 1 Ch. 571; 66 L. T. 248; 40 W. R. 473.

With the exception of a case of trade libel, the court will not grant an injunction to restrain a libel before the case has been submitted to a jury. Lee v. Gibbings, 67 L. T. 263.

An action was brought by a business firm against a trade union, and the secretary, president, and vice-president, and treasurer of the union, for an injunction to restrain them from publishing a circular in which the plaintiffs were accused of boycotting some lightermen. The circular was signed by the secretary. It was admitted that the vice-president did not belong to the union, and was joined as defendant by mistake. The names of the president and treasurer were printed upon the paper upon which the circular was written, but they gave evidence that the circular was issued without their knowledge and authority, and that they disapproved of it. The plaintiffs in their statement of claim stated that the statements in the circular were untrue and "had been made maliciously and unjustifiably on the part of the defendants." An interim injunction had been granted:—Held, that the injunction must be made perpetual against the society, the secretary, and other officers, servants or agents of the society, with costs. That the plaintiffs were justified in joining the president and treasurer as defendants; the court therefore gave them no costs. Pink v. Federation of Trades Unions, 67 L. T. 258.

Magazine which Defendant had agreed not to Publish—Forms of Order.]—On an interlocutory application to restrain the breach, by the publication of a certain named magazine or any other magazine prohibited by the agreement, of an agreement made between plaintiff and defendant, the publication of the named magazine only will be restrained; and the court will altogether suspend the publication until the hearing of the cause. Ainsworth v. Bentley, 14 W. R. 630.

Trade Circular—Misrepresentation.]—A firm of engineers issued a circular stating that they could sell goods of the same kind as their former employers, but better and cheaper; which statements were untrue:—Held, that the circular was a deceit upon the trade and the public, and that an injunction ought to be granted. Stevens v. Paine, 18 L. T. 600.

8. To Quiet Possession.

Injunction for plaintiff's possession as at time of filing bill, and three years before. Sapcote v. Newport, Cary 47.

Injunction for defendants in possession against plaintiff's entering. Douche v. Perrot, Cary 45.

Commission to put plaintiff into possession, injunction being dissolved or disobeyed. Boles v. Walley, Cary, 38.

Commission granted to put defendant in such possession of lands as he had at time of bill exhibited. Hawkes v. Champion, Cary 36, 45.

Against a writ of ayel, after forty-five years' possession, a perpetual injunction was granted. Knight v. Adamson, 2 Freem. 106.

It is usual in Ireland for a lessee, who has been three years in possession, and is disturbed, to file his bill in the court of chancery there, for an injunction to quiet him in possession, till evicted by due course of law; and this usage is founded upon the equity of the statutes made against forcible entries. But all bills of this kind must allege, and it must also be proved, that the sole and actual possession is in the plaintiff, and that no ownership or possession is in any other person. Vernon v. Dublin City, 4 Bro. P. C. 398.

An injunction was awarded to restore and quiet the plaintiff and his tenants in the possession of the premises in question, but it was at the same time ordered that he should appear to an ejectment to be brought by the defendant, in order to try the title. An ejectment was accordingly brought, and the defendant obtained a verdict, and was afterwards put into possession. But on an appeal by the plaintiff, it was ordered that he should be at liberty to bring an ejectment to recover possession of the premises, and that no mortgage should be set up in bar to his title. Seymour v. Ryan, 4 Bro. P. C. 390.

Bill to be quieted in possession of a right of common, and to prevent distresses. Defendants produced affidavits of fifty years' right of common and quiet possession; but the court would not interpose till after one or more verdicts at law. Anon., Gilb. 183.

An injunction is awarded by a decree to put the plaintiff into possession of the premises in question; and at the same time the parties are directed to try the title at law. This decree is repugnant, and must be reversed as to the injunction. Lanesborough (Lord) v. Elwood, 4 4 Bro. P. C. 385.

Garden grounds used for trades as much protected by the Highway Acts, &c., as private property; plaintiff, therefore, quieted in possession by injunction against the commissioners. Hughes v. Morden College Trustees, 1 Ves. 188.

On a conviction before justices for a forcible entry, and a writ of restitution awarded by them, the record of the conviction was removed by certiorari into the king's bench. The lord chancellor, notwithstanding, granted an injunction to restore the plaintiff to his possession. Stewart v. Stewart, Wall. Lyn. 97.

The crown having obtained judgment in an information of intrusion, which was more than a year old, the court granted a conditional order for liberty to issue an injunction to put the crown in possession, serving the parties in possession of the lands. Att.-Gen. v. Riggs, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 17.

By a grant or patent, dated in 1801, the then Bishop of Ely, having, as the grant stated, "confidence in the probity, fidelity, care, and industry of P.," granted to P., who was a solicitor, "the office of receiver of all issues, profits, sum and sums of money, arising and issuing" from the possessions of the see, to hold to P. by himself or his sufficient deputy or deputies, to be approved of by the bishop and his successors, for his life. The office of receiver was an ancient office, and had been exercised before the restraining stat. of 1 Eliz. c. 19. P. held the office under three successive bishops, during the whole of which time he not only received the rents, but negotiated the renewal of leases, and prepared the leases of the see, and likewise attended all searches for records in the bishop's muniment room, of which he kept a key, for the performance of which acts he received fees and emoluments. It appeared also that his predecessor in office, who had held the office since 1785, had done the same. Upon the accession of A. to the bishopric in 1836, he refused to admit P.'s claim of right to perform these last-mentioned acts; upon which P. filed his bill against the bishop, praying a declaration of the rights in question in his favour, that he might be quieted in the possession of the office, and that the bishop might be restrained by injunction from obstructing the plaintiff in the exercise of such rights, and from doing acts in contravention of them:—Held, first, that the plaintiff's claim was not of such a nature as to induce the court to interfere to protect them, without being well satisfied (which the court was not) that his legal remedy was insufficient to do him complete justice; and, secondly, that the relief sought being analogous to the specific performance of an agreement, the bill must fail on the ground of want of mutuality; the nature of the duties and services asserted by the plaintiff being such as to preclude the possibility of a decree in this court against him, compelling their specific performance. Pickering v. Ely (Bishop), 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 249; 12 L. J., Ch. 271; 7 Jur. 479.

Perpetual injunction granted to restrain the tenant of a farm in part of which was a pool through which ran a stream from the mountains, depositing in its passage mineral substances, from taking and carrying away from and out of the bed and bottom of the pool or any part thereof, any soil, oxide of iron, ochre, shine, deposit, or other mineral substances, and from puddling, loosening, disturbing, and floating, and from causing to be puddled, loosened, disturbed, or floated off any soil, oxide of iron, shine, deposits, or mineral substances, already deposited upon the beds of the said pool, the right of the plaintiffs to the several mineral substances having been established by a verdict in an action at law, brought by them against the defendant, and not in an issue or action directed by the court. Thomas v. Jones, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 510.

Where party had been in possession fifty years, and that title was confirmed in chancery, other party was prohibited by injunction from disputing it again in court of law. Clench v. Tomley, Cary, 23. See also Acherley v. Vernon, 2 Barn. K. B. 212.

Where a defendant is in possession of an estate, and a plaintiff, claiming possession, seeks to restrain him from acts of spoliation, the court will not grant an injunction unless the acts are so flagrant as to justify it in departing from the general principle. Lowndes v. Bettle, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 226; 10 L. T. 55; 12 W. R. 309.

Where a plaintiff is in possession, the court will leave him to his remedy at law against a stranger committing such acts, unless they tend to the destruction of the inheritance. Ib.

But where a plaintiff in possession seeks to restrain the defendant claiming title, the tendency of the court will be to grant the injunction. Ib.

So where a plaintiff in possession filed a bill against a defendant claiming possession, and threatening to come upon the estate, and cut up sods, deal and other timber, the court granted a perpetual injunction to restrain him from so doing. Ib.

Where a managing body of a religious society appointed an agent at a salary, "with six months' notice of separation on either side," with liberty to occupy and carry on his trade in a house belonging to the society, and afterwards summarily dismissed him for alleged misconduct, and resumed the possession of the house, of which they were afterwards forcibly dispossessed by the agent, on a bill by the managing body the court granted an injunction to restrain such agent from disturbing the possession. Spurgin v. White, 2 Giff. 473; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 15; 3 L. T. 609; 9 W. R. 266.

Action for Quiet Possession—Injunction—Joinder.]—A claim for an injunction to restrain interference with quiet possession of real property is not such a separate cause of action as cannot, without the leave of the court, be joined with a claim for quiet possession. Kendrick v. Roberts, 46 L. T. 59; 30 W. R. 365.

C. PRACTICE RELATING TO.

1. How Obtained.

a. On Motion.

i. In General.

Application for injunction and appointment of receiver should be made the subject of two successive motions. Lawson v. Morgan, 1 Price, 303.

In a suit for an injunction the plaintiff is not bound to apply by motion for an injunction in the first instance. Davies v. Marshall, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 720; 4 L. T. 105; 9 W. R. 368.

A motion for an injunction upon notice, and before appearance, cannot be made, unless leave to give notice has been obtained, and the notice express that fact. Cook v. ——, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 141.

Where a motion for an injunction is ordered to stand over, with leave to the plaintiff to bring an action, the plaintiff is not bound to bring his action till the defendant applies to the court. Bell v. Bell, 14 Jur. 1129.

After the dismissal of a bill for the specific execution of an agreement, the plaintiff being unable to make a good title, an injunction to restrain him from proceeding on the agreement at law granted, on motion, the defendant undertaking forthwith to file a bill. M'Namara v. Arthur, 2 Ball & B. 349.

Perpetual.]—By consent, an injunction was made perpetual upon motion. Morrell v. Pearson, 12 Beav. 284.

Granting before Bill Filed.]—When, on account of the offices of the court being closed, the filing of a bill has been delayed, the court may grant an injunction before bill filed, and direct the bill and affidavit to be filed as on the day when the offices were closed. Carr v. Morice, 42 L. J., Ch. 787; L. R. 16 Eq. 125.

In a pressing case the court will grant an injunction before bill filed. Thornloe v. Skoines, 42 L. J., Ch. 788; L. R. 16 Eq. 126; 21 W. R. 880.

An injunction was granted before bill filed to restrain the defendant from levying execution. Campana v. Webb, 22 W. R. 622.

Motion by Defendant for, before Statement of Claim delivered—Cross-action by Defendant.]—A defendant who has appeared cannot, where no statement of claim has been delivered, move for an interlocutory injunction where the relief which he seeks is not incidental to or does not relate to or arise out of the relief sought by the plaintiff's action; but he must either wait till he can put in a counter claim or issue a writ in a cross-action. Relief against breach by the plaintiff of a covenant not to use the defendant's name in carrying on a business which had formed the subject of a partnership between the plaintiff and the defendant is not incidental to relief sought in an action by the plaintiff for breach by the defendant of a covenant not to carry on a like business within a certain radius, though both covenants are contained in the deed of dissolution of partnership. Sargant v. Read (1 Ch. D. 600) distinguished. Carter v. Fey, 63 L. J., Ch. 723; [1894] 2 Ch. 541; 7 R. 358; 70 L. T. 786—C. A.

ii. Ex parte or on Notice.

After Appearance.] — After service of subpœna, and the appearance of a defendant, a motion for an injunction cannot be made ex parte. Langham v. G. N. Ry., 1 De G. & Sm. 486. And see S. C., 16 L. J., Ch. 437; 11 Jur. 839.

Although, in cases in the nature of waste, an injunction will sometimes be granted ex parte, even after appearance; yet, if in such a case an injunction has been obtained for default of appearance, and it turns out that appearance had in fact been entered at the time when the injunction was moved for, the order will be discharged. Harrison v. Cockerell, 3 Meriv. 1.

Plaintiff cannot move for injunction ex parte after he has served the defendant with a subpœna, and defendant has appeared. Perry v. Weller, 3 Russ. 519.

Appearance the day before motion would not suffice to prevent injunction ex parte in case of waste. Allard v. Jones, 15 Ves. 605.

Defendant having appeared, motion for injunction in matter of waste not immediate; without notice, refused. Collard v. Cooper, 6 Madd. 190.

Injunction not granted to prevent transfer of stock until defendants have appeared, or are in contempt, &c., upon notice. Doolittle v. Walton, Dick. 442.

An injunction may be granted ex parte, notwithstanding the defendant has appeared to the bill. Bell v. Hull & Selby Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 616.

An injunction to restrain the pulling down of houses granted on an ex parte motion, although the defendants had appeared. Petley v. Eastern Counties Ry., 8 Sim. 483; 8 L. J., Ch. 209.

After appearance, no special injunction (such as against the navigating of a ship) without notice. Marasco v. Boiton, 2 Ves. 112.

An injunction allowed to be moved for ex parte, in a pressing case, after the defendants had entered an appearance. In this case, counsel having been instructed to oppose the motion, although no notice had been given, the court allowed them to be heard. Acraman v. Bristol Dock Co., 1 Russ. & M. 321.

Notice required—Trading Concern.]—Jurisdiction by injunction, where the effect will be to stop a great trading concern, exercised with caution; not ex parte, but on notice, with the opportunity of opposing on affidavit. Crowder v. Tinkler, 19 Ves. 618; 13 R. R. 267.

Bill of Exchange.]—Injunction granted ex parte to restrain the negotiation of a bill of exchange, by a holder who had given valuable consideration for it, but who had notice that it had been improperly accepted by a partner of the plaintiffs, in the partnership's name. Hood v. Aston, 1 Russ. 412; 25 R. R. 93.

Motion of Course—Order Discharged.]—Court will discharge order for injunction obtained on motion of course, if it ought to have been moved for on notice. Reed v. Bowyer, 1 Price 101.

Defendant Served Personally, and not Appearing.]—Motion granted for an injunction for one partner against another, the defendant being in contempt, and served personally, and not appearing. Read v. Bowers, 4 Bro. C. C. 441.

Want of Answer.]—Where an injunction obtained for want of answer is dissolved on the merits, and the bill is afterwards amended, a motion for an injunction for want of an answer to the amended bill is a special application requiring notice, notwithstanding the defendant may be in contempt. Chimelli v. Chauvet, Younge, 560.

Answer by one of three Defendants—Injunction Irregular.]—Injunction to stay proceedings at law, dissolved for irregularity, plaintiff having obtained the injunction as of course, for want of anwer of two defendants who resided abroad, without notice to the other defendant, who was sole plaintiff at law, and had put in his answer in time. Cooper v. Flindt, Wightw. 409.

Action for Accounts.]—If a bill for an injunction prays for an account and answer from any of the defendants, all the defendants must be served before moving on the bill. Newenham v. O'Sullivan, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 68.

Policy of Insurance.]—A. being sued at law on policy of insurance which he had made as agent for B., on motion for injunction, on affidavit of B.'s residing abroad, A. must have notice. Beachcroft v. Gordon, 3 Anstr. 686.

Notice should be given.]—Notice of an application for an injunction should be given to a defendant where that can conveniently be done without producing any mischief to the plaintiff, and although a subpœna may have been served to appear and answer the bill. Home v. Thompson, Sau. & Sc. 615.

Pulling down Houses.]—An injunction to restrain pulling down houses granted ex parte, after appearance. Petley v. Eastern Counties Ry., 8 Sim. 483; 8 L. J., Ch. 209.

Transfer of Stock.]—When a transfer of stock is about to be made to wrong persons, the court will not grant an ex parte injunction to restrain the transfer, unless the plaintiff swears that he believes the defendant will avail himself of the transfer and will refuse to retransfer. Arkwright v. Gryles, 13 L. J., Ch. 303.

Parting with Legal Estate.]—In an action by an equitable mortgagee for sale or foreclosure, the court granted an interim injunction to restrain dealing with the legal estate till the next motion day, on an ex parte application by the plaintiff; there being ground for believing that the defendants intended to part with the legal estate pendente lite. London and County Banking Co. v. Lewis, 21 Ch. D. 490; 47 L. T. 501; 31 W. R. 233—C. A.

After Notice of Motion.]—Notice of motion for an injunction was given, but owing to press of business in the court it stood over from time to time, and at last stood over without the undertaking as to damages being continued. On a threat by C. and F. to do the act sought to be restrained, G. obtained an interim injunction ex parte:—Held, that notice of motion having been given, the ex parte injunction ought not to have been granted. Graham v. Campbell, 47 L. J., Ch. 593; 7 Ch. D. 490; 38 L. T. 195; 26 W. R. 336—C. A.

To Restrain Execution—Payment into Court.]—Where an unsuccessful plaintiff at law files his bill to restrain the defendant at law from issuing execution against him for the costs, the court will not grant an injunction ex parte unless the plaintiff brings the amount of the taxed costs into court. Fisher v. Baldwin, 1 W. R. 484—L.JJ.

To Restrain Breach of Conditional Agreement, where Condition not Perfectly Performed.]—Injunction granted ex parte to restrain acts agreed not to be done if a certain sum of money were paid, though the plaintiff was not prepared to pay the whole of the agreed sum. Anon., 3 Jur. (N.S.) 685.

Bill of Exchange.]—Injunction granted ex parte to stay negotiation of bills of exchange. —— v. Bozon, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 57.

To Restrain Proceedings at Law.]—Injunction granted ex parte to stay proceedings at law where the action was commenced so late that the plaintiff in equity could not obtain the common injunction in time to serve any useful purpose. Jones v. Bassett, 2 Russ. 205.

iii. Service of Notice of.

Permission for personal service of notice of motion for an injunction granted under special circumstances. Mills v. Pearson, 4 Y. & Coll. 468.

An injunction may be obtained before appearance upon personal service of the notice of motion, but a receiver cannot, except leave be given to serve the notice personally. Ramsbottom v. Freeman, 4 Beav. 145; 10 L. J., Ch. 362.

Such leave will not be granted unless it appears that the plaintiff has used due diligence to compel appearance. Ib.

Held, that, under the circumstances, notice of motion for an injunction ought to have been served on the assignees of the bankrupts. Crawford v. Scott, 6 Jur. 163.

On Housekeeper, Insufficient.]—Service of notice of motion for an injunction to restrain execution on a judgment obtained in an action at law, on the housekeeper to the persons who were the defendants' attorneys in that action, is insufficient. Where the order obtained on such motion stated that it was made on notice to the defendants, they should move to discharge such order, and not to dissolve the injunction. Angier v. May, 3 Eq. R. 488; 3 W. R. 330.

iv. Affidavit.

To Prove Allegation in Bill.]—Affidavit in support of injunction admitted after answer to prove an allegation in the bill as to acts of the parties, neither admitted nor denied by the answer; but such affidavit not to be allowed in contradiction to the answer. Morgan v. Goode, 3 Mer. 10.

To Contradict Answer.]—On a motion for an injunction, the plaintiff cannot read affidavits to contradict the answer. Sommerville v. Buckler, 3 Anstr. 658.

In an injunction cause, affidavits admitted on motion against the answer not on the title, but on questions of fact, as in the instance of waste, &c., and the original affidavit, where the defendant, having obtained time to file affidavits, instead of that puts in an answer. Morphett v. Jones, 19 Ves. 350.

Affidavit of Merits—Foreign Defendant.]—Where injunction is moved in exchequer, you may move to try the cause for staying execution till the merits of injunction be determined; but injunction will not be granted against a foreigner unless on affidavits of merits. Anon., Lofft, 545.

Verifying Letters.]—Letters set forth by the bill, and not admitted by the answer, allowed to be verified by affidavit in support of an injunction. Taggart v. Hewlett, 1 Mer. 499.

In Action to Restrain Publication.]—Injunction, until answer or further order, to restrain the publication of a work as the plaintiff's, upon affidavit, by the plaintiff's agents (the plaintiff himself being abroad), of circumstances making it highly probable that it was not the plaintiff's work; and the defendant refusing to swear as to his belief that it was so. Byron (Lord) v. Johnston, 2 Mer. 29; 16 R. R. 135.

Affidavit by Plaintiff after Answer.]—Court will not, in aid of motion to prevent partner receiving or creating debts, and for appointing receiver, permit plaintiff to use affidavit made and filed after coming in of answer; though in a case analogous with irreparable waste such affidavit made, &c., before answer might be used. Lawson v. Morgan, 1 Price, 303.

In injunction cases, no affidavit as to the title after answer. Platt v. Button, 19 Ves. 447.

As to Plaintiff's Knowledge and Belief.]—If material fact be charged in injunction bill, and deposed to in affidavit in support of it, not positively, but as plaintiff has reason to know, and that he believes it to be true, and fact is one which if true lies only within knowledge of the defendant, who may deny it, if not true, the court will grant injunction if not denied by him. Scott v. Becher, 4 Price, 346; 18 R. R. 722.

Partnership.]—Affidavits admitted on motion after answer, for an injunction and receiver, in the case of partnership, by analogy to waste. Peacock v. Peacock, 16 Ves. 49; 10 R. R. 138.

Against Executor.]—Injunction granted to restrain an executor claiming under a will, and also by gift from testatrix, in lifetime, from selling, upon affidavit of undue influence. Edmunds v. Bird, 1 Ves. & B. 542.

Answer put in before Motion.]—A special injunction was moved for before answer without notice, the proper affidavits being filed, and the court on such motion directed notice to be given, but the answer was put in before the motion came on after notice:—Held, that the affidavits might be read. Atkinson v. Kemble, 7 Sim. 638.

On motion for injunction, affidavits filed before answer may be read, where plaintiff, by saving notice of motion till future day, enabled defendant to file answer before motion read. Glassington v. Thwaites, 1 Sim. & S. 134; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 113; 24 R. R. 153.

On an application for a special injunction, the answer of the defendant and the affidavits in support of the application were filed the same day:—Held, that the affidavits were admissible in support of the motion. Nicholson v. Knapp, 9 Sim. 326; 7 L. J., Ch. 219.

Misnomer of Party.]—An order, obtained on affidavit of service, discharged with costs, on the ground of a misnomer of a party in the affidavit. Salomon v. Stalman, 4 Beav. 243; 10 L. J., Ch. 327.

Interpleader.]—Upon motion for an injunction in an interpleader suit to restrain an action, there is no necessity for an affidavit of merits. Sedgwick v. Clegg, 4 Jur. 742.

Allegations not Noticed in Answer.]—In moving for an injunction after answer, affidavits filed after the answer may be read in support of allegations in the bill, which are not noticed by the answer. Jefferys v. Smith, 1 Jac. & Walk. 298; 21 R. R. 175.

Affidavits Filed before Bill.]—Interim injunction granted ex parte where the affidavits had by mistake been filed before the bill. Fennall v. Brown, 18 Jur. 1051. See also Bowen v. Bowen, 7 Ir. R. Eq. 251.

After Answer.]—Affidavits filed after the answer cannot be read on a motion for a special injunction, in support of which no affidavits had been filed before the answer; and the rule is the same whether notice of the motion was given before the answer was put in or afterwards. Manser v. Jenner, 2 Hare, 599.

Where an answer is filed after notice of motion for a special injunction, affidavits subsequently filed cannot be used to contradict the answer. Lloyd v. Jenkins, 4 Beav. 230; 5 Jur. 697. S. P., Beatty v. Beatty, 2 Moll. 541.

A motion for an injunction and receiver being brought on, stood over at the request of the defendant, who filed his answer the next day:—Held, that the plaintiff might use affidavits subsequently filed, in contradiction to the answer, which, under these circumstances, must be treated as an affidavit. Gibson v. Nicol, 6 Beav. 422.

On a motion after the answer for an injunction to stay waste, affidavits filed subsequently to the answer cannot be read. Smythe v. Smythe, 1 Swan. 252.

A plaintiff in a bill for an injunction to stay waste, cannot read a supplemental affidavit in support of a conditional order for the injunction. The proceedings under such a bill are peculiar to Ireland. Joley v. Stockley, 1 Hog. 247.

Answer, when treated as Affidavit.]—An answer to a bill for an injunction, which has been filed after the service of notice of a motion for an injunction, is no bar to the motion, and can only be used as an affidavit. Atkinson v. Collins, 1 Hog. 110.

After answer, the original bill was amended, and the defendant obtained time to answer it; the plaintiff then gave notice of motion for a special injunction, and filed affidavits in support of it. The motion coming on, the defendant obtained time to answer the affidavits, and then filed both her answer and affidavits in opposition:—Held, that the second answer must be treated as an affidavit, and that the affidavits in support of the motion might be used to qualify the second, but not the first answer. Maden v. Veevers, 5 Beav. 503; 12 L. J., Ch. 38.

Affidavits were filed in support of an application for an injunction to restrain the master and part owner of a ship from taking possession of goods claimed by him as his private property, and by the other partners as partnership property, after which the defendant put in his answer, and several affidavits were subsequently filed on both sides:—Held, under such circumstances, and on such an application, that the answer could only be treated as an affidavit. Gardner v. M'Cutcheon, 4 Beav. 534.

The plaintiff claimed to be a partner with the defendant, and sought, by his bill, accounts and an injunction and receiver. Before the answer was put in he gave notice of motion for an injunction and receiver, and filed affidavits in support of the motion. The answer came in on the day for which the notice of motion was given, and before the motion was made, and it denied the existence of any partnership:—Held, that the affidavits could not be read on the motion, which, therefore, failed; but no costs were given. Rock v. Mathews, 2 De G. & Sm. 227; 12 Jur. 643.

Ex parte Application.]—The affidavits, upon which an ex parte application for an injunction is made, must show, either that notice to the defendant would be mischievous, or that the mischief is so urgent that it would be done, if notice were served upon the defendant, before the injunction could be obtained. When the affidavits fall short of this point, the motion must be directed to stand over, and notice of it to be served on the defendant. Anon., 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 3.

Affidavit not mentioned in Notice of Motion.]—That the notice of motion for an injunction contained no notice of an affidavit in support of the injunction previously filed, is not an objection that can be taken by a defendant who has actually searched for and obtained a copy of the affidavit. Semble, otherwise, when the defendant has not searched further back than the date of the notice of motion. Bent v. Reynolds, 2 Jur. 201.

Neglect to obtain Office Copies.]—A special injunction was dissolved with costs, office copies of the affidavits in support of it not having been obtained, when it was moved for. Jackson v. Cassidy, 10 Sim. 326; 10 L. J., Ch. 356.

An ex parte injunction obtained on an affidavit, of which no office copy was in court at the time of making the motion, dissolved with costs. Elsey v. Adams, 4 Giff. 398.

By Solicitor.]—Motion to extend the common injunction refused, because it was supported by the affidavit of the solicitor only, and no satisfactory explanation was given why the plaintiff himself had not made the usual affidavit. Spalding v. Reiley, 4 L. J., Ch. 169. See also Scotson v. Gaury, 1 Hare, 99; 11 L. J., Ch. 98.

v. Full Disclosure of Material Facts (Ex parte Injunction).

When a plaintiff comes for an ex parte injunction he must state his case in the first instance fully and fairly. Hemphill v. M'Kenna, 2 Dr. & War. 183; 2 Con. & L. 76; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 57.

In cases of injunction, the court exercises discretion; so that, where the effect of continuing an injunction would have been to exclude a question on a doubtful statute from ever being discussed, and no apparent danger to the property was shown, the court dissolved the injunction. Att.-Gen. v. Aspinall, 2 Myl. & C. 613; 7 L. J., Ch. 51; 1 Jur. 812. And see S. C., 1 Keen, 513.

It is an established rule, that where a party obtains an ex parte injunction by misrepresenting the facts of the case, he shall not afterwards be permitted to support the injunction, by showing another state of circumstances in which he would be entitled to it. Ib.

Injunction order in a possessory suit set aside upon the ground that the plaintiff had not fully and fairly stated his case in the first instance. Dease v. Plunkett, Dr. 255.

Before a party makes an application to this court for its interposition by injunction, he ought to make the strictest investigation into the accuracy of the circumstances stated by him. Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 8 Sim. 315; 7 L. J., Ch. 270; 2 Jur. 738.

Upon obtaining an interim order, in the nature of an injunction ex parte, the plaintiff must bring all material facts to the knowledge of the court, at the peril of having his injunction refused. Fuller v. Taylor, 32 L. J., Ch. 376; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 743; 8 L. T. 69; 11 W. R. 532.

Where the fact that the defendant's solicitors denied the plaintiff's right had not been stated to the judge, the court, on the motion for injunction, made no order, except that the costs of the defendant be costs in the cause. Ib.

On an application for an ex parte injunction, a plaintiff omitted to state a material fact. A motion being made to dissolve it, the plaintiff swore that he had forgotten the circumstance:—Held, that it was no excuse for the suppression. Clifton v. Robinson, 16 Beav. 355.

A plaintiff applying for an injunction should fairly state his case, both where the application is ex parte, and where, on notice, the opponent does not appear; but the court does not hold him so strictly to the rule in the latter case as in the former. Maclaren v. Stainton, 16 Beav. 279; 22 L. J., Ch. 274; 1 W. R. 70.

Parties coming for an injunction ex parte ought to state their case fully and fairly to the court. If they do not, they will be made to pay costs, even though successful. Holden v. Waterlow, 15 W. R. 139.

When a plaintiff applies ex parte for a special injunction, he is bound to state in his bill every material fact, and set out every material document bearing upon the subject-matter of the litigation. Harbottle v. Pooley, 20 L. T. 436.

When therefore a plaintiff omitted a material letter written by the defendant, and the attention of the court was not pointedly called to such letter on the application for the ex parte injunction, the court immediately discharged the order for the injunction, and directed restitution of possession of certain premises, which were in question in the suit. Ib.

b. By Action.

i. Claim.

Proper injunction cannot be granted unless expressly prayed by the bill. Savory v. Dyer, Ambl. 70.

The general prayer for relief will not extend to an injunction, which will not be granted unless expressly prayed for. Davile v. Peacock, Barnard. 27. And see Jesus College v. Bloom, 3 Atk. 262.

Though that part of bill, preliminary to prayer for subpœna, asks for injunction, yet if the prayer of process omits it, it is a sufficient ground for refusing injunction. Anon. Urged by Mr. Knight, K.C., 6th Nov. 1829, and acquiesced in by Vice-Chancellor (MSS.). And see cases, Ambl. 70, n.

Excepted case in which an injunction was granted though not prayed for by the bill. Blomfield v. Eyre, 8 Beav. 250; 14 L. J., Ch. 260; 9 Jur. 717.

Whether at the hearing an injunction can be granted, which the bill or information did not seek, quære. Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham & Oxford Junction Ry., 4 De G. & Sm. 490; 15 Jur. 1024.

An injunction granted upon an interlocutory application cannot exceed that prayed by the bill. Munro v. Wivenhoe & Brightlingsea Ry., 4 De G. J. & S. 723; 13 W. R. 880.

Although the prayer of process is no longer part of a bill, the rule of the court still continues, that an injunction granted on motion must be such an injunction as is prayed by the bill. On a motion to dissolve an ex parte injunction, granted in the terms of the prayer of the bill, it is not competent to the court to grant a new injunction in terms not prayed by the bill. Burdett v. Hay, 33 L. J., Ch. 41; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1260; 9 L. T. 429; 12 W. R. 61.

Where a plaintiff alleges and proves, in a case for an injunction, a peculiar and specific injury, the order which he obtains gives him an extended right, in general terms, to restrain any injury of the same kind; but where the peculiar and specific injury is distinctly stated upon the pleadings, and where the words used describe another peculiar and specific injury proposed to be proved, the plaintiff is not entitled to relief. Hertz v. Union Bank of London, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 127; 3 W. R. 49.

Where a bill states that an injury by the defendant will, by a certain mode of operation, be inflicted upon the plaintiff, and then, after giving notice of motion for an injunction, that mode of operation is changed and another adopted, the wholesome arrangement is to amend the bill. Ib.

General words in a motion for an injunction are only justified by establishing a specific case of injury. Ib.

Multifariousness—Want of Parties.]—It is no objection to a motion for an injunction and a receiver that the bill is multifarious or deficient for want of parties, if it is sought to protect funds which are really in danger. Evans v. Coventry, 3 Eq. R. 545; 3 W. R. 149.

ii. Leave to Amend without Prejudice.

Amendment of bill allowed without prejudice to an injunction obtained on merits. King v. Turner, 6 Madd. 255.

Leave given to amend a bill without prejudice to an injunction obtained on affidavit of merits. Pickering v. Hanson, 2 Sim. 488.

After an injunction granted against one of two defendants who afterwards put in their answers, leave was given on application, supported by affidavit, to amend bill without prejudice to injunction. Answer of defendant against whom injunction was not granted, stating facts which were a surprise on plaintiff, and which made amendments necessary. Vesey v. Wilks, 3 Madd. 475.

Plaintiff, in a bill for an injunction, must state at once the whole case within his knowledge; but the court, though very jealous of amendment, permits even reamendment, ascertaining precisely its nature, without prejudice to an injunction, on clear and positive affidavit that the facts, which must be stated, came to the plaintiff's knowledge since the bill filed, and on payment of costs. Sharp v. Ashton, 3 Ves. & B. 145.

After answer not excepted to, liberty to amend the bill without prejudice to the injunction staying proceedings at law, being the common injunction, not upon the merits, refused with costs. Turner v. Bazely, 2 Ves. & B. 330.

Upon an application for the plaintiff to amend his bill without prejudice to an injunction, previously obtained on merits, the particular amendments must be specified. Bell v. Brockbank, 2 Y. & J. 181.

Motion to amend bill of discovery after answer without prejudice to injunction, by adding prayer for relief, or otherwise, as plaintiff should be advised, refused. Jackson v. Strong, M'Clel. 245; 13 Price, 494.

Where injunction has been obtained on merits, motion to amend without prejudice to injunction is motion of course; but where it has issued on account of delay, notice of motion must be given and proposed amendment stated. Pratt v. Archer, 1 Sim. & S. 433. This case is, however, mis-stated. See 2 Sim. 488, n.

After an injunction had been continued on the merits, the plaintiff moved to amend without prejudice to the injunction:—Held, that in such a case the amendment could not prejudice the injunction, and therefore the motion was a simple application to amend, and ought to have been made before the master. Woodroffe v. Daniel, 9 Sim. 410; 8 L. J., Ch. 16.

Injunction obtained ex parte. The answer was put in; whereupon motion was made to amend bill, without prejudice to injunction, and the proposed amendments were stated, but motion refused. Penfold v. Stoveld, 3 Madd. 471.

In an injunction cause, if an injunction has been raised, and exceptions taken to the answer are allowed, the plaintiff may move for liberty to amend the bill, without prejudice to the injunction, and that the defendant should answer the amendment and exceptions together, without giving notice of the motion. Creighton v. Talbot, 1 Hog. 334.

Motion for liberty to amend injunction bill must be on notice, and founded on affidavit, stating what new matter is, and that it came to plaintiff's knowledge after bill was filed; or else on exceptions to defendant's answer, overruled or allowed by notice. Donegal v. Berry, 1 Hog. 46.

Semble, the order to amend before answer, after a common injunction, without prejudice to the injunction, is an order of course. Where the common injunction had issued against one of two defendants for want of answer, such an order could not be objected to by the defendant against whom no injunction had issued. Ferrand v. Hamer, 4 Myl. & C. 143; 8 L. J., Ch. 96; 3 Jur. 236.

The plaintiff obtained a special injunction, and the defendants subsequently filed a general demurrer, after which, and before the demurrer had been set down, the plaintiff obtained an order of course to amend "without prejudice to the injunction":—Held, irregular. Warburton v. London and Blackwall Ry., 2 Beav. 253.

After a demurrer the plaintiff may before it has been argued, obtain an order of course to amend; the only question is what costs he is to pay, and that depends upon whether the demurrer has been set down or not. Ib.

The plaintiff, having obtained the common injunction upon the allowance of exceptions for insufficiency, procured an order to amend without prejudice to the injunction, undertaking to amend within a week, and that the defendant might answer the exceptions and amendments together. The amendments having been made accordingly, the court extended the common injunction to stay trial. Archer v. Hudson, 6 Beav. 474; 12 L. J., Ch. 483.

Where injunction obtained on filing the bill has, upon the coming in of the defendant's answer, been continued till the hearing, and the plaintiff, for the first time, seeks to amend his bill without prejudice to the injunction, the court will grant a motion to that effect if the proposed amendments be not inconsistent with the case previously made by the bill for the injunction. To sustain such a motion there is not any necessity for an affidavit stating when the matter of the proposed amendment came to the knowledge of the plaintiff. Donegal v. Berry (1 Hog. 46) and Hamilton v. Patten (Cr. & Dix. Ab. Ca. 203) observed upon. O'Beirne v. O'Beirne, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 158. Reversing id. 152.

iii. Reference for Scandal.

Where bill found scandalous by master, injunction not granted till matter expunged. Davenport v. Davenport, 6 Madd. 251. And see Neale v. Wadeson, 1 Cox, 104; 1 Bro. C. C. 574.

iv. Other Matters.

Injunction against waste not prevented by appearance gratis the day before the motion. Allard v. Jones, 15 Ves. 605.

Where a suit was abated, and defendant would not appear to revivor, an injunction was granted, notwithstanding the cause was not revived. Hamilton (Duke) v. Macclesfield (Earl), 1 Eq. Abr. 285.

In an action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from using certain premises as a small-pox hospital, application was made under (Jud. Act) Ord. XVI. r. 13, by the plaintiff, to join another person, with his consent, who was an inhabitant of the neighbourhood, on the ground that since the action was brought the original plaintiff had given up business, and was going abroad. The application was refused on the ground that the cause of action was injury to the plaintiff's own property only, and it was not "necessary in order to enable the court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action" that any other person should be added as plaintiff within Ord. XVI. r. 13. Dalton v. St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, 47 L. T. 349.

2. Irregularity in Obtaining, when Waived.

Where injunction was held irregular:—Held, defendant had not waived objection to the irregularity, by asking for time to answer. Travers v. Stafford, Ambl. 105; 2 Ves. 19.

If the defendant puts in his answer, and then moves to dissolve the injunction, this waives an irregularity in obtaining it. Davile v. Peacock, Barnard. 27.

3. Appeal.

An appeal, after the lapse of a month, from the refusal of a motion for an injunction to restrain a public company from proceeding with their works, ordered to stand over till the hearing, as being brought too late. Williams v. St. George's Harbour Ry., 2 De G. & J. 547.

Delay from October to March in appealing from the refusal of a motion for an injunction held fatal to the appeal. Burgess v. Burgess, 3 De G. M. & G. 896; 22 L. J., Ch. 675; 17 Jur. 292.

4. Dissolution.

a. Proceedings for.

i. Evidence in Support.

In supporting motion to dissolve injunction, the plaintiff cannot use any allegations in the bill, unless confessed by answer. Maxwell v. Ward, 11 Price, 3.

Upon motion to dissolve an ex parte injunction, the defendant cannot read affidavits filed after his answer. Barwell v. Brookes, 12 L. J., Ch. 457; 7 Jur. 364.

ii. Time.

The common injunction may be dissolved in the long vacation. Lane v. Barton, 1 Ph. 363; 13 L. J., Ch. 25.

When an interim injunction is granted over the next motion day or until further order, it signifies that the injunction may be dissolved, before the day fixed, but cannot be extended beyond that period except with the leave of the court. Bolton v. London School Board, 47 L. J., Ch. 461; 7 Ch. D. 766; 26 W. R. 549.

The court refused to hear a motion to dissolve an injunction, pending a motion, of which the plaintiff had given notice, for production of documents mentioned in a schedule to the answer, no unnecessary delay having taken place in giving notice of the latter motion. Storer v. Jackson, 12 Sim. 503.

iii. Other Matters.

An injunction is not dissolved in exchequer court, as a consequence of course, on allowing a demurrer to the bill on the equity of which it was obtained: it must be moved that the injunction be dissolved on that ground. Barclay v. Curtis, 9 Price, 661.

An injunction being obtained ex parte to restrain the publication of a work by a defendant, the defendant, who claimed a property in, and a right to proceed with the publication, subsequently became bankrupt:—Held, that a motion to dissolve the injunction might be made on behalf of the defendant, without his assignees being made parties. M'Beath v. Ravenscroft, 8 L. J., Ch. 208.

A defendant may move to dissolve injunction for insufficient service of subpœna, although he has not appeared. Menzies v. Rodrigues, 1 Price, 92.

Cross-motions—Right to Begin.]—Where an interim order has been obtained, and simultaneous applications are made, on the part of the plaintiffs for an injunction in terms of the order, and on the part of the defendants to discharge the order, the plaintiffs have the right to begin. Fraser v. Whalley, 2 Hem. & M. 10.

Injunction till Answer.]—Replying to answer, and serving subpœna to rejoin, will not prevent defendant from moving to dissolve, unless cause, an injunction granted till answer. Molineux v. Luard, Dick. 684.

Plaintiff Neglecting to Speed Cause.]—Injunction granted on merits; plaintiff ordered to speed cause; he replied, but proceeded no further:—Held, that defendant could not move to dissolve injunction, as he might proceed with suit. Flower v. Herbert, Dick. 349.

Plaintiff consenting to Dissolution, but afterwards Objecting.]—If plaintiff in injunction bill, filed to restrain defendant from proceeding in action at law, gives a cognovit, and undertakes in writing to dismiss his bill, and consents to a dissolution of injunction, but afterwards refuses to do so, the court, on motion by defendant, and notice to plaintiff, will dissolve it, but not dismiss the bill. Norway v. Eade, 6 Price. 156.

Standing Over—Plaintiff ordered to Speed.]—Injunction cause stood over at hearing for want of parties; injunction not dissolved nor receiver appointed on motion, without special case of waste, but plaintiff compelled to speed the cause. Price v. Williams, 1 Ves. J. 401.

Motion to Dissolve—Granting New Injunction.]—It is irregular for the court upon a defendant's motion to dissolve an injunction obtained against him ex parte, to grant any new injunction, and especially so if the new injunction is not granted in the terms of the prayer of the bill. Burdett v. Hay, 4 De G. J. & S. 41; 33 L. J., Ch. 41; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1260; 9 L. T. 429; 12 W. R. 61.

Ex parte Motion to dissolve ex parte Injunction.]—The court declined to hear ex parte a motion to dissolve an ex parte injunction. Spanish General Agency Corporation v. Spanish Corporation, 63 L. T. 161.

b. Grounds.

i. In General.

Discretion.]—The court exercises a wide discretion as to keeping up or dissolving injunctions; and where plaintiff, who had obtained an injunction, became an insolvent, and delay occurred in appointing an assignee, and the suit was thereby retarded, on an application by the defendant, the injunction was ordered to stand dissolved, unless a supplemental bill in a week; and a supplemental bill having been filed and answered, the plaintiff, on a second application by defendant, was ordered to set down the cause forthwith, or the injunction stand dissolved; Lord Chancellor, disregarding the objection, that, by the course of the court, the plaintiff in the supplemental suit was entitled to time to bring the cause regularly to hearing. Caird v. Campbell, 1 Moll. 484.

Practice.]—Court will set aside injunction.

granted after trial and verdict, and obtained on ground that one of the defendants (a plaintiff at law), in whom the interest was averred to be, was in contempt for not having answered, and that his answer was most material to the defence at law of the plaintiffs (in equity) to the action, as it might show that property was not in truth in him, notwithstanding strong affidavit of merits, and a new trial being granted nisi on same merits. Whitmore v. Thornton, 3 Price, 241.

Injunction dissolved, plaintiff's legal title being doubtful, and the continuance of the injunction being unnecessary for the protection of plaintiffs, and injurious to the defendants. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Ry. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 3 Macn. & G. 70; 20 L. J., Ch. 90; 14 Jur. 1125.

Defendants at law having three grounds of defence to action, of which two were legal and one equitable, the injunction which the Master of the Rolls had continued to the hearing was dissolved on appeal; because if the legal grounds were good, the aid of the court was not wanted; if bad, the court would have the verdict as to damages as a measure of amount to be paid into court. Barnard v. Wallis, Cr. & Ph. 85; 2 Railw. Cas. 162; 5 Jur. 813.

An application for an injunction to restrain an alleged breach of covenant had been once ordered to stand over until the decision of two legal questions raised by the defendant. On those questions being decided in the plaintiff's favour, and the motion coming on again, the defendant raised a third legal objection, and the court below, at his request, directed a case to be stated for the opinion of a court of law upon it, but on the ground of the delay in bringing it forward granted an injunction in the meantime. On appeal, however, the Lord Chancellor dissolved the injunction, notwithstanding that circumstance, on the ground of the much greater facility of indemnifying the plaintiff than the defendant, according as the one or the other might succeed at law. Rigby v. G. W. Ry., 2 Ph. 44; 1 Coop. C. C. 7; 10 Jur. 531.

On a motion to dissolve an injunction, there being no answer, the court will not dissolve the injunction upon the sole ground that the plaintiff's equity is denied by the defendant's affidavit where the affidavit did not traverse all the facts on which the plaintiff's equity rested. Pyecroft v. Pyecroft, 2 Sm. & G. 326.

Injunction for want of an answer dissolved because not served for several months after answer came in. Morice v. Bank of England, Kel. 43.

Where plaintiff obtained injunction for want of answer, but suffered defendant in equity to go to trial, and obtain verdict, and did not serve injunction till defendant in equity sued out fi. fa. on judgment, court dissolved the injunction. Anon., 2 Eq. Abr. 525.

Special injunction dissolved with costs, office copies of affidavits in support of it not having been obtained when it was moved for. Jackson v. Cassidy, 10 Sim. 326; 10 L. J., Ch. 356.

Where an injunction was obtained ex parte, there being at the time no office copy in court of the affidavit which was filed in support of the motion, the court, on the application of the defendant, dissolved the injunction, with costs. Elsey v. Adams, 32 L. J., Ch. 616; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 788; 8 L. T. 451; 2 N. R. 263.

When plea is allowed, injunction dissolved absolutely. Philips v. Langhorn, Dick. 148.

Injunction nisi not dissolved by putting in answer, until costs of contempt be paid. Hall v. Darney, Dick. 289.

Injunction nisi for want of answer; answer put in, but costs of contempt not paid; order nisi to dissolve injunction. Plaintiff should move to discharge order for irregularity. Ib.

Variance between affidavit in support of motion for injunction and bill, in date of bill of exchange, on which defendant had commenced proceedings at law, is a sufficient ground for dissolving the injunction obtained. Wattleworth v. Pitcher, 2 Price, 189.

A plaintiff resident abroad having made default in giving security for costs, the court ordered that he should give the security within four days, or that an injunction which he had obtained ex parte should be dissolved, but it refused to order the bill to be dismissed. Fort v. Bank of England, 10 Sim. 616.

A., in consideration of B. engaging him as his assistant in the business of an apothecary at a stated salary, agreed in writing with B. not to practise as an apothecary within seven miles of the town of M., under a penalty of 500*l.* A., having been discharged by B. from his service, proceeded to practise as an apothecary in the town of M.; whereupon, B. moved for an injunction to restrain A. from so practising; but the motion was ordered by the court to stand over, with liberty for B. to bring an action. In the action, B. recovered 500*l.* damages and the costs against A., and entered up judgment for the same, and afterwards proved under a fiat in bankruptcy issued against A. for the amount of the costs, but not for the damages:—Held, that an injunction granted against A., on a renewed motion, could not be maintained; and that B. was not entitled to any equitable right arising out of the legal contract entered into between the parties:—Held, also, that the court had no power to set off the costs recovered at law by B. in the action against the costs given to A. on the renewed motion for the injunction. Sainter v. Ferguson, 1 H. & Tw. 383; 1 Macn. & G. 286; 19 L. J., Ch. 170; 14 Jur. 255. And see S. C. at law, 18 L. J., C. P. 217.

Injunction granted pending notice of motion for a dedimus, is dissolved of course, on the dedimus being granted. M'Mahon v. O'Brien, 1 Sch. & Lef. 237.

On a motion to dissolve an injunction, the defendant may rely on an objection, although it would have been a ground for demurring to the bill. Hudson v. Maddison, 12 Sim. 416; 11 L. J., Ch. 55; 5 Jur. 1194.

A conditional consent to proceed at law waives an injunction. Grant v. Priddell, 1 Anstr, 62.

Undertaking to amend Writ — Non-Performance.]—An ex parte injunction was obtained by the plaintiffs shortly before two o'clock on a Saturday afternoon on condition that a party should be added as plaintiff for the purpose of his counsel giving on his behalf the usual undertaking as to damages. The writ was not amended until the following Tuesday morning, whilst a motion was being made to dissolve the injunction. The court dissolved the injunction without deciding the merits, on the ground that the plaintiffs had not fulfilled the terms on which the injunction was granted, and had thereby left the defendant without the protection of the undertaking as to damages.

Spanish General Agency Corporation v. Spanish Corporation, 63 L. T. 161.

Alleged Death of Defendant.]—Common injunction will not be dissolved on doubtful evidence that the defendant is dead. Janson v. Sclarte, 2 Y. & C. 127 ; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 75.

ii. Suppression of Facts, on Ex parte Application.

If a plaintiff, applying ex parte for an injunction, suppress a material fact, it will be a ground for dissolving the injunction with costs. Hemphill v. M'Kenna, 3 Dr. & War. 183 ; 2 Con. & L. 76 ; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 57. See also Hatch v. Borsley, 4 L. J., Ch. 160.

Injunction order in possessory suit, set aside on the ground that plaintiff had not fairly stated his case. Dease v. Plunkett, Dr. 255.

An injunction having been obtained ex parte, with constructive notice of its being untenable, the court, after answer filed, dissolved the injunction, and gave costs on the ground of such notice. Greenwood v. Bairstow, 5 L. J., Ch. 179.

An ex parte injunction had been obtained, to stay an ejectment to which the plaintiffs in equity stated, in their bill, they had no defence at law ; and there was not sufficient time for the defendants to move to dissolve it before the day of trial. It appeared afterwards, that the injunction had improperly issued, but without any misrepresentations as to the facts in the plaintiff's affidavits. The injunction was dissolved, with costs ; but held, reversing an order of the court below, that the court had no power, on motion by the defendant, to order the plaintiffs to give judgment in the ejectment. Brown v. Newall, 2 Myl. & C. 558 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 348 ; 1 Jur. 422.

An order for an ex parte injunction, made after the appearance of the defendant, without that fact being represented to the court, will be discharged. Randall v. Commercial Ry., 8 L. J., Ch. 252.

Where a plaintiff, upon an application for an ex parte injunction, suppresses material facts, the injunction will be dissolved on that ground alone, and the plaintiff will not be allowed on a motion to dissolve to maintain it on the merits then disclosed. Hilton v. Granville (Lord), 4 Beav. 130 ; Cr. & Ph. 283 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 398.

A party is entitled to move to dissolve an injunction if, from ambiguity in its terms, he may under any construction of the order be prejudicially affected. Dalglish v. Jarvie, 2 Macn. & G. 231 ; 2 H. & Tw. 437 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 475 ; 14 Jur. 945.

It is the duty of a party asking for an injunction to bring under the notice of the court all facts material to the determination of his right to that injunction ; and it is no excuse for him to say that he was not aware of the importance of any facts which he has omitted to bring forward. Ib.

Thus, where a plaintiff obtained an ex parte injunction on the facts stated in the bill, but other facts came out in the defendant's answer raising a question of law on which the right of the plaintiff to the injunction depended :—Held, that the omission of the plaintiff to bring these facts under the notice of the court was of itself a sufficient ground for dissolving the injunction. Ib.

Injunction about to Expire.]—A motion to discharge an ex parte injunction on the ground of its having been obtained by misrepresentation is proper, though the injunction is about to expire. Wimbledon Local Board v. Croydon Sanitary Authority, 32 Ch. D. 421.

Defendant must apply Promptly.]—Although an injunction ex parte upon a statement, in which material facts are concealed or misrepresented, would, on a speedy application, be dissolved with costs, yet that is not a sufficient ground for a motion to dissolve that injunction, after a period of several months has elapsed before notice of such motion is given ; nor will the question, whether there has been such concealment or misrepresentation, be taken into consideration, on appeal from an order made by the court in which the injunction was granted, and by which order the injunction was continued and the costs reserved. Bell v. Hull and Selby Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 616.

Interim Order—Ex parte—Motion to Discharge Order, whether necessary.]—Upon a motion by the plaintiffs for an injunction, or in the alternative to continue an interim order already obtained ex parte, no cross notice of motion to discharge the interim order was given by the defendant. The interim order was irregularly obtained on suppression of material facts : —Held, that the court may discharge an ex parte order without a formal notice of motion to discharge being given by the defendant. Boyce v. Gill, 64 L. T. 824.

c. Without Special Order.

i. By Amendment of Bill.

Injunction falls by amending bill, unless expressly saved. Bliss v. Boscowen, 2 Ves. & B. 102.

Injunction does not drop of course on plaintiff amending bill. Mason v. Murray, Dick. 536.

Amendment of bill after exceptions allowed and not answered does not prejudice an injunction previously obtained. Therefore it is a motion of course for leave to amend, and that defendant may answer amendments and exceptions together. Dipper v. Durant, 3 Mer. 465.

Amendment of bill after exceptions to answer allowed does not prejudice injunction previously obtained. Adney v. Flood, 1 Madd. 449.

Amendments made to bill after injunction cannot be used in support of injunction. Vere v. Glynn, Dick. 441.

Therefore, if injunction is obtained on original bill, and defendant answers, and plaintiff amends, proceedings to get rid of injunction are on original bill and answer to it. Ib.

Semble, the order to amend before answer, after a common injunction, without prejudice to the injunction, is an order of course : where the common injunction had issued against one of two defendants for want of answer, such an order could not be objected to by the defendant against whom no injunction had issued. Ferrand v. Hamer, 4 Myl. & C. 143 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 96 ; 3 Jur. 236.

After an injunction has been granted, or continued upon the merits, the amendment of the bill does not prejudice the injunction ; and a special motion to the court for leave to amend in such a case is unnecessary and improper. Woodroffe v. Daniel, 9 Sim. 410; 8 L. J., Ch. 16.

Although irregular to file an amended bill without leave, after an order to continue an injunction on the terms of speeding the cause, yet the amendment being material and such as the court would have allowed, and the plaintiff offering terms which tended to prevent delay, the injunction was continued, plaintiff paying the costs of defendant's motion to dissolve it. Welsh v. Hannan, 2 Sch. & Lef. 516.

An injunction having been obtained, the bill was amended by adding a plaintiff:—Held, that the injunction had thereby ceased to exist. Att.-Gen. v. Marsh, 16 Sim. 572; 18 L. J., Ch. 272; 13 Jur. 317.

The common injunction is not dissolved by the plaintiff obtaining an order to amend without saving the injunction, unless the record is altered. Davis v. Davis, 2 Sim. 515.

The mere fact of amending a bill does not of itself dissolve or discharge the common injunction, though it may furnish a ground for dissolving or discharging it on an application for that purpose. Brooks v. Purton, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 271; 11 L. J., Ch. 122; 6 Jur. 94.

A new issue, which has been raised by amendments to the bill after an arrangement and undertaking given on an application for an injunction, vitiates the undertaking; from which the defendant who has given it will be discharged. Clarke v. Clarke, 11 L. T. 366; 13 W. R. 133.

An injunction, if granted upon merits, is not dissolved by amendment of the bill, though the amendment be without saving the injunction. Harvey v. Hall, L. R. 11 Eq. 31; 23 L. T. 391.

ii. By Dismissal of Bill.

Bill being dismissed, an injunction falls with it without special order. Willis v. Yates, Coop. t. Brougham, 498.

On dismissing a bill it is unnecessary to dissolve an injunction, as it falls of course. Green v. Pulsford, 2 Beav. 70.

On the dismissal of a bill of interpleader, the plaintiff is entitled to be paid back the money which he lodged in court for the purpose of obtaining an injunction; and the injunction falls without an order for the purpose, though it is the general practice to apply for an order to dissolve it. Blennerhasset v. Scanlan, 1 Hog. 363.

d. Evidence.

An indictment for perjury in defendant's answer, and a true bill proved thereon by grand jury, not sufficient ground for refusing to dissolve common injunction. Forster v. Seward, 5 Jur. 1031.

A plaintiff who has obtained the common injunction cannot sustain it on grounds contained in the answer, but not stated in his bill. Cresy v. Beavan, 13 Sim. 99.

Semble, on showing cause against dissolving the common injunction affidavits are admissible to prove facts alleged by the bill, but which are neither admitted nor denied by the answer. Ord v. White, 3 Beav. 357.

On showing cause against dissolving an injunction, the plaintiff cannot read affidavits to prove allegations in the bill of matters of fact, which the answer neither denies nor admits. Castellain v. Blumenthal, 12 Sim. 47; 10 L. J., Ch. 223; 5 Jur. 501.

Where the obligor in a bond has obtained the common injunction to restrain the obligee from proceeding in an action which has been commenced in his name by an assignee of the bond, the answer of the obligee cannot be read in opposition to a motion to dissolve the injunction made by the assignee. Montague v. Hill, 4 Russ. 128.

Plaintiff obtained an ex parte injunction; defendant filed his answer, and served a notice of motion to dissolve the injunction. Exceptions were taken to the answer, to which the defendant submitted, and then filed a further answer. Between the filing of the exceptions and the putting in of the further answer, the plaintiff filed affidavits in support of the injunction. The defendant then moved to dissolve on the notice served prior to putting in his further answer:—Held, that the affidavits so filed by the plaintiff might be read on the hearing of the motion. Smith v. Cleasby, 10 Sim. 91; 10 L. J., Ch. 163; 5 Jur. 383.

Defendant moved, on affidavits, to dissolve an ex parte injunction. The motion stood over at the plaintiff's request. The defendant then filed his answer, after which the plaintiff filed several affidavits. On the motion being resumed, those affidavits were held to be inadmissible. Woodin v. Field, 15 Sim. 307.

Not necessary for plaintiff, who claims an estate as tenant in tail under settlement of parents, to prove by affidavit their marriage, before he shows cause against dissolving an injunction, to restrain an ejectment brought against him to recover the estate. Hodgson v. Dean, 2 Sim. & S. 221; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 95; 25 R. R. 188.

On a motion to dissolve an injunction to stay proceedings at law, the plaintiff in equity has no right, under s. 40 of the stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, to require that the motion shall stand over, in order that he may examine orally witnesses who had made an affidavit for the defendant. Normanville v. Stanning, 10 Hare, App. xxvi.

Upon a motion to dissolve an injunction it is not the proper time to object to the form of the plaintiff's affidavit denying collusion; but any such objection should be taken on demurrer, when the court might grant leave to amend the affidavit. Hamilton v. Marks, 5 De G. & Sm. 638.

Where a special injunction has been obtained on affidavits, and on the answer coming in, the defendant moves to dissolve, such affidavits may be used against the answer. Custance v. Cunningham, 13 Beav. 363.

e. Payment of Money out of Court.

The plaintiff, in equity, having been taken in execution, and discharged by a judge of the court of law, on payment into the hands of the master of that court of the amount of the sum indorsed on the writ, with sheriff's poundage; and the common injunction having afterwards been issued; on motion to dissolve the injunction, it was ordered that the plaintiff might apply to the court of law for payment to him and to the defendants of the sum paid into the hands of the master, that sum, when received, to be paid into the bank to abide the event of the cause. Hawkshaw v. Parkins, 2 Swan. 539; 19 R. R. 125.

B., the holder of certain bills accepted by F., attached by proceedings in the lord mayor's court, in the hands of C., a large sum of money belonging to F.; F. filed a bill to restrain the action; a special injunction was granted, and the money was paid into court by the garnishee. B., by his answer, denied the whole of the equity suggested by the bill:—Held, that though the injunction must be dissolved, the money in court would not be paid out to B. before he has obtained judgment in this action. Furnival v. Bogle, 4 Russ. 142; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 91; 28 R. R. 34.

On the dismissal of a bill of interpleader, the plaintiff is entitled to be paid back the money which he lodged in court for the purpose of obtaining an injunction. Blennerhasset v. Scanlan, 1 Hog. 363.

See also INTERPLEADER.

f. Delay and Acquiescence, Effect of.

An injunction was obtained before answer. The defendant filed his answer, but delayed moving to dissolve until several months after replication, and at a period when the evidence would have been published but for the defendant having obtained an enlargement of the publication. The motion was, on that ground, refused. Feistel v. King's College, Cambridge, 10 Beav. 491; 16 L. J., Ch. 339; 11 Jur. 506.

The court possesses, and will exercise, jurisdiction over a bottomry bond in a case of fraud; and will, for that purpose, restrain proceedings upon the bond in the admiralty court by injunction. It is not necessary for the purpose of supporting an interlocutory injunction of that kind, that the court should find a case which would entitle the plaintiff to relief at all events; it is sufficient if the court finds, upon the evidence then before it, a case which makes the transaction a proper subject of investigation in a court of equity. After long acquiescence under such an order, the court will not readily entertain an application for dissolving it. Glascott v. Lang, 8 Sim. 358; 3 Myl. & C. 451; 2 Jur. 909.

By three acts of parliament of the same session a railway company was empowered to make three distinct lines, forming a cluster and not a continuous line. In the next session an act was passed declaring the company to have lines and to be only one company, and authorising and requiring them to grant a lease of the lines to another company. They completed only one of the lines, which was worked by the other company under the provisions of the last act. Some months after it was obvious that the other two lines could not be completed within the time prescribed by the acts. A shareholder in the company filed a bill seeking to restrain it from applying its funds otherwise than for the purpose of constructing all three of the lines, but he did not make the company who were lessees parties to the suit:—Held, that more inconvenience would arise from the court interfering than from its abstaining to do so; and on this account, as well as on the grounds of acquiescence and want of parties, an injunction granted by the court below was dissolved. Hodgson v. Powis (Earl), 1 De G. M. & G. 6; 21 L. J., Ch. 17; 15 Jur. 1022. Reversing 12 Beav. 392, 529; 19 L. J., Ch. 356, 418; 14 Jur. 906, 965.

Where an injunction is obtained for want of answer, and answer is afterwards filed, but defendant does not move to dissolve until two terms after, and when bill has been amended, yet injunction may be dissolved by motion of course. Patton v. Panton, 3 Anstr. 651.

By a decree made thirty years ago, an account had been directed of a testator's personal estate, and of his debts and testamentary expenses, and an injunction had been granted to restrain the bank from permitting the transfer of a small sum of stock belonging to the testator's estate, but no further proceedings had been had in the suit. The court, upon the petition of the only party interested, dissolved the injunction, so that an immediate transfer of stock might be made to the petitioners, without carrying the suit any further. De Beaufort v. Archdeacon, 1 Y. & Coll. 549; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 72.

Injunction obtained two years back, on granting commission to examine in India, not yet returned, dissolved. Penney v. Edgar, 1 Anstr. 276.

Bill for injunction and commission to examine, and both parties at liberty to examine and cross-examine; defendant examined witnesses, and plaintiff cross-examined them, but plaintiff takes out no commission; injunction dissolved, and publication ordered. Emmet v. Ayliffe, Dick. 239.

5. SUSPENDING.

Account of Profits.]—Where, upon motion for an injunction in a matter involving the making of profits, the granting the injunction is suspended, it is the usual practice to direct the defendant to keep an account of profits in the meantime. Swallow v. Wallingford, 12 Jur. 403.

In Interpleader.]—Where the court sees that the continuance of the injunction in an interpleading suit, in full force, may have the effect of enabling a stranger to deprive the parties to the suit of the legal rights which they have already acquired, the injunction will be suspended so far as to allow proceedings at law to go on to judgment. Siereking v. Behrens, 2 Myl. & C. 581. And see S. C., 1 Jur. 50.

Where Plaintiff's Right doubtful.]—Where a plaintiff asks for an injunction, and has not, in the opinion of the court, completely established his case, the court may direct an issue, and will let the motion for the injunction stand over in the meantime. Freeman v. Tottenham & Hampstead Ry., 11 Jur. (N.S.) 254; 13 W. R. 1004—L.JJ.

Injunction granted by C. A.—Application to Suspend.]—Where the court of appeal has granted an injunction that had been refused in the court below, an application to suspend its operation is properly made to the court below. Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co. 64 L. J., Ch. 736; [1895] 2 Ch. 388; 12 R. 441; 73 L. T. 42; 44 W. R. 198—C. A.

6. CONTINUING.

Common injunction which had been obtained under the old practice extended under the new on the application of the plaintiff. Holme v. Brown, 9 Hare, App. xxix.; 1 W. R. 5.

Where Important Question Raised.]—A point which materially concerns merchants in general, will induce the court to continue an injunction. Green v. Suasso, 2 Atk. 229.

Bill by the Universities—Sale of Bibles.]—Upon the answer to a bill by the universities, the king's printer not joining, but being made defendant, an injunction restraining the sale, in England, of bibles, prayer-books, &c., printed by the king's printer in Scotland, was continued to the hearing. Oxford and Cambridge Universities v. Richardson, 6 Ves. 689.

To Protect Property.]—Injunction continued against the lord, to protect the property until the determination of the right. Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Dimes, 2 Jur. 1077.

Landlord and Tenant—Breach of Covenant.]—A lessee covenants not to dig up a particular part of the demised premises for raising sand, gravel, &c., under the penalty of 100*l.* per acre. He breaks this covenant, and thereupon the lessor files a bill for an injunction; on affidavit of the waste committed, the injunction is granted till answer, and further order. After the answer put in, a motion is made to dissolve the injunction, and upon showing cause the defendant consents to appear and plead to an action of debt or trover, and to take short notice of trial; thereupon, the injunction is dissolved. But, on an appeal, this order was discharged, and an injunction granted to continue till the hearing of the cause. London City v. Pugh, 4 Bro. P. C. 395.

Till Trial at Law.]—Injunction continued on terms till it could be ascertained by trial at law whether a forfeiture had been incurred. Algar v. Murrell, 6 Jur. 775.

Ex parte Injunction.]—The infringement of a strict legal right will not necessarily induce the court to continue an injunction which has been granted ex parte. Att.-Gen. v. Eastern Counties Ry., 7 Jur. 806.

Doubtful Question of Law.]—Doubts in matters of law are always sufficient ground for continuing an injunction once granted. Maxwell v. Ward, 11 Price, 3.

Answer referred for Scandal or Impertinence.]—The answer being referred for impertinence is a good ground to continue an injunction. Hurst v. Thomas, 2 Anstr. 591.

Reference of answer for scandal and impertinence is not cause for continuing injunction. Milner v. Golding, Dick. 672.

Revival of Suit.]—Injunction after revival of suit continues without order. Kennedy v. Lloyd, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 581.

To Stay Execution.]—Injunction granted last term to stay execution; ordered that injunction shall stand in force. Burtet v. Redman, Cary, 47.

On Plaintiff Giving Security.]—An injunction obtained on the filing of the bill continued to the hearing (the plaintiff giving security and undertaking to speed his cause), it appearing that there was a serious question for the hearing, which, if decided in the plaintiff's favour, would entitle him to the relief sought. Donnell v. Church, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 630.

Plaintiff with Defeasible Right.]—It is not necessary for a party who seeks to continue an injunction to the hearing to show an indefeasible right to the decree prayed by bill; where, therefore, assignees of a bankrupt sought a specific performance of an agreement for a lease against a party, who was herself a lessee and restrained from assigning without the consent of the lessor in writing thereto obtained, the court continued the injunction to restrain proceedings at law, there being a probability of obtaining the consent of the lessor to the assignment. Powell v. Lloyd, 1 Y. & J. 427; 31 R. R. 662.

Bill Irregularly Amended.]—Although irregular to file an amended bill without leave, after an order to continue an injunction on the terms of speeding the cause, yet the amendment being material and such as the court would have allowed, and the plaintiff offering terms which tended to prevent delay, the injunction was continued, plaintiff paying the costs of defendant's motion to dissolve it. Welsh v. Hannan, 2 Sch. & Lef. 516.

On Terms.]—An injunction, though not to be continued with a view to specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease, if under a clause for re-entry the lease, when granted, would be at an end by the tenant's acts, was maintained upon undertaking to give possession, when required by the court, and paying the rent due, by waiver of the forfeiture, if incurred, viz., distraining for subsequent rent. Gourlay v. Somerset (Duke), 1 Ves. & B. 68; 13 R. R. 234. See also Solby v. Moore, 8 Price, 631; Attwood v. Barham, 2 Russ. 186.

Laches of Plaintiffs.]—Injunction not continued where the plaintiffs had neglected to make use of the powers they possessed. Ellison v. Bignold, 2 J. & W. 503.

Farm Agreement—Restraining Ejectment.]—Bill for specific performance of parol agreement to grant farm lease, with usual covenants of neighbourhood, and injunction to prevent ejectment, plaintiff having taken possession. Upon answer, stating insolvency of plaintiff, and various breaches of agreement during five years' possession, the injunction was continued, on undertaking to give judgment in ejectment, go to commission, and set down cause for next term, paying rent into court. Defendant also insisted on covenant not to assign; that is subject of inquiry as to custom of neighbourhood. Boardman v. Mostyn, 6 Ves. 467.

Restraining Publication—Evidence.]—A bill filed by A. against C. stated that A. and B. had together made various etchings for their own amusement, and without any view to publication, and that C. had improperly and surreptitiously obtained impressions of those etchings, and had printed and advertised for sale a catalogue of the etchings. Upon affidavits in support of the bill, an injunction was granted to restrain C. from publishing the catalogue. C. put in an answer, in which he stated that he believed that the impressions had not been improperly obtained, but did not suggest any mode in which they could have been properly obtained. Upon a motion by C., after answer, for dissolving the injunction, it was ordered that the injunction should be continued. Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Macn. & G. 25; 1 H. & Tw. 1; 18 L. J., Ch. 120; 13 Jur. 109.

On Amended Bill.]—An injunction was granted to stay an action until answer. The defendant having put in a full answer gave notice of motion to dissolve, after which the plaintiff amended his bill. The answer showing a mere legal question:—Held, that the injunction must be dissolved, and that the plaintiff was not, on this occasion, entitled to have it continued on the case alleged by the amendments. Mollett v. Enequist, 26 Beav. 466.

Injunction over certain Day or until further Order.]—Semble, that where an interim injunction is granted over a certain day, "or until further order," the injunction is not continued after the day named "until further order," but may be stayed before the day named by order of the court. Bolton v. London School Board, 47 L. J., Ch. 461; 7 Ch. D. 766; 26 W. R. 549.

Not ex parte.]—Ex parte motion to continue refused, until two defendants in contempt should have appeared and answered. Highham v. Antwis, 11 Price, 759.

7. Reviving.

a. In General.

Injunction dissolved on the answer, not revived of course, without special motion on amendments verified by affidavit. James v. Downes, 18 Ves. 522; 11 R. R. 247.

That an indictment for perjury upon the answer has been found by the grand jury is not a ground for reviving an injunction. Clapham v. White, 8 Ves. 35.

The common injunction having been dissolved upon the coming in of the answer, and the bill being subsequently amended, the injunction was revived upon special application, supported by affidavit of the facts stated by way of amendment, the defendant being in default (though not in contempt) for not answering the amended bill. Vipan v. Mortlock, 2 Mer. 476.

The inspection of documents set forth in the schedule to the answer in an injunction cause may be obtained before the dissolution of the injunction, and used to oppose the motion to dissolve it. Hence, when the injunction has been dissolved, and the plaintiff afterwards, by inspecting the documents referred to by the answer, discovers new matter, he cannot move to revive the injunction upon an amended bill containing the new matter, and verified by affidavit. Powell v. Lassalette, Jac. 549.

Upon a motion to revive the common injunction, the court will hear the defendant on the merits. Blake v. White, 1 Y. & Coll. 420; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 48.

b. On Death of Party.

Not necessary to revive perpetual injunction on death of party. Askew v. Townshend, Dick. 471.

Where injunction abates by death of defendant, defendant's representatives should move that plaintiff revive in a reasonable time, or injunction be dissolved. Stuart v. Ancell, 1 Cox, 411.

Where a defendant dies pending an injunction against him to restrain proceedings in an ejectment, the heir-at-law may move that the plaintiff in equity may revive within a week, or that the injunction be dissolved. Hill v. Horre, 2 Cox, 50.

See also Browne v. Warner, 3 Beav. 296; Jones v. Massey, 3 Beav. 295; and Turner v. Cole, ib.

8. Form.

Injunction with clause, si ita sit. Christopherus v. Chomeley, Cary, 37.

Form of the common injunction restraining proceedings at law touching the matters in question in the cause. Land v. Blanshard, 4 Hare, 31.

A writ of injunction issued after execution is in the same form with the common writ before execution. Hawkshaw v. Parkins, 2 Swan. 539; 19 R. R. 125.

If the order for an injunction on payment of costs of the action is in the usual form of injunctions after decree for administration, it will be improper if the parties entitled to injunction, having to pay costs as a preliminary, might, from the situation of the estate, be enabled to obtain it in time. Drewery v. Thacker, 3 Swan. 541; 19 R. R. 274.

The right to an injunction is founded on the fact, that injury is accruing to the plaintiff, and it is, therefore, necessary that that fact should be inserted in the order granting the injunction. Lingwood v. Stowmarket Papermaking Co., 13 L. T. 540.

Where the matter in dispute is distinctly raised by the motion for an injunction, and is ready for decision, the right should be declared by the injunction founded thereon, that the order may inform the defendant what is the opinion of the court as to the limits of such right. Cother v. Midland Ry., 2 Ph. 469; 17 L. J., Ch. 235; 5 Railw. Cas. 187.

In an action for the imprisonment under a commitment for contempt, the order is pleaded, and the plaintiff demurs:—Held, that an injunction ought not to issue limiting the plaintiff as to the particulars in respect of which he might on such demurrer question the validity of the order. Van Sandau, Ex parte, Martin, In re, 1 De G. 55; 1 Ph. 455; 14 L. J., Bk. 9; 9 Jur. 193.

When the court grants an injunction, the order ought not merely to direct that an action shall forthwith be brought, with liberty to the parties to apply in case of delay, but to give such directions of its own, in the first instance, as will insure the speedy trial of the action. An injunction granted pending an action to be brought by the plaintiff, for the speedy trial of which special directions were given, was dissolved on the ground of the plaintiff not having duly complied with those directions. Stevens v. Keating, 2 Ph. 333.

In an injunction, the words pro defectu placiti are intended of an issuable plea; and the words judicium intrare are intended of a final judgment; therefore, if the defendant be in execution, and pleads plene administravit, and the plaintiff at law enters judgment de bonis testatoris cum acciderint, he may proceed to a scire facias to inquire of assets, and enter judgment thereupon; for the meaning of the injunction is, that the defendant may proceed so far as that nothing shall remain but to take out execution after the injunction is dissolved. Morrice v. Hankey, 3 P. W. 146. And see 2 Eq. Abr. 528.

By the common order for an injunction, in an interpleading suit, the injunction is directed to issue upon bringing the fund in question into court; and if, without the special direction of the court, the order is so drawn up that it does not make the bringing of the fund into court a condition precedent to the issuing of the injunction, the order will be discharged for irregularity. Sieveking v. Behrens, 2 Myl. & C. 581; 1 Jur. 50.

Semble, if there is not time to bring the fund into court, a special order will be made to provide for the emergency. Ib.

Restraining Publication.]—Where an injunction is granted, restraining the publication and sale of a work, pending a trial at law, to determine the question of alleged piracy, it is not necessary that the order should specify the particular articles alleged to have been pirated, although the plaintiffs do not claim a copyright in the whole of the articles contained in their publication; it being admitted, that some of the articles in the two works had been derived from a source common both to the plaintiffs and defendants. Sweet v. Maugham, 11 Sim. 51; 9 L. J., Ch. 323; 4 Jur. 479.

When all Defendants have resigned Office.]—A bill having been filed against a local board of health alleging that it was committing a nuisance, and praying for an injunction to restrain it, all the members of the board resigned. There being no defence to the suit, the injunction was granted in the terms of the first paragraph of the prayer of the bill. Hardinge v. Southborough Local Board, 32 L. T. 250.

9. Service.

Original need not be Delivered.]—Injunction served, and copy delivered; the party serving is not bound to deliver the injunction itself to be compared. Woodward v. King, 2 Ch. Ca. 203.

Notice to Defendant Sufficient.]—Exception to the rule requiring personal service of an order of injunction, where the party was present when the order was made, established by Lord Hardwicke; further extended since to notice by information. Kimpton v. Eve, 2 Ves. & B. 350; 13 R. R. 116. S. P., Anon., 3 Atk. 567; Powel v. Follet, Dick. 116.

Where to be Served.]—Service of injunction at defendant's house, good. Holgate v. Grantham, Cary, 58.

At last Place of Abode.]—Injunction upon affidavit of an intended marriage with a male infant aged eighteen, restraining communication with him until further order; and that service of the order at the house which appeared to be the last place of abode, though apparently shut up, should be good service. Pearce v. Crutchfield, 14 Ves. 206.

Substituted Service.]—Substituted service of an injunction ordered. Kirkman v. Honnor, 6 Beav. 400; 12 L. J., Ch. 336.

Notice to Defendant's Clerk.]—A defendant's clerk in court was held not to be his agent for the purpose of receiving notice of an injunction granted in the cause. Gooseman v. Dann, 10 Sim. 517.

To Agent.]—Quære, whether service of notice of injunction on an agent, when the principal is out of the jurisdiction, can be good service, especially when that agent is merely an agent for sale of the goods of the principal. Carron Iron Co. v. Maclaren, 5 H. L. Cas. 416.

Corporation.]—Service of notice of injunction on one member of a corporation is sufficient. Ib.

Before Order Passed and Entered.]—Plaintiff, who has obtained an order for injunction, is not entitled in point of practice to serve it with the writ of execution before it be passed and entered, although usual to do so; and if he should so serve it, and there should be an error in drawing up the order, to the prejudice of the defendant, it will be considered contempt, and so treated by the court on application to punish the plaintiff for so doing; nor will plaintiff be suffered to avail himself of the excuse of its being a mistake, and all the costs incurred by defendant, arising from such an irregularity, will be ordered to be paid by plaintiff. Scott v. Becher, 4 Price, 346; 18 R. R. 722.

Defendant Present in Court.] — Defendant being in court when order for injunction is made is bound by it from that time, and not from formal service thereof only. Ib.

On Defendant's Solicitors—At Address given by Defendant.]—Injunction granted ex parte restraining the receipt of a pension, and order made that service of the bill, the interrogatories, and the injunction on the solicitors, who were in communication with the defendant, or had means of being so, and also service at an address previously given by him, should be good service. Heald v. Hay, 9 W. R. 369.

10. Proceedings for Breach of.

a. Breach, what amounts to.

Injunction against Hindering Navigation of Canal—Action against Canal Company.]—Where an injunction had been granted restraining the stopping of vessels, and the hindering the navigation of a canal:—Held, that bringing actions against the canal company, and warning their servants that they were trespassers, was not a breach. Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Dimes, 17 Sim. 38; 18 L. J., Ch. 419; 13 Jur. 779.

But bringing actions against the company in respect of such barges having passed was contrary to the tenor of the decree, and in that respect an injunction was granted to restrain the actions. Ib.

Plaintiff's Solicitor.]—An annuity was granted to A., in consideration of certain services performed by him. A. assigned the annuity for a valuable consideration to B., the deed of assignment containing the usual power of attorney to sue and give discharges, which power was declared to be irrevocable. A., shortly after the assignment quitted England. B., having brought an action in the name of A. for arrears of the annuity, the grantors filed their bill against A. and B. to restrain the proceedings at law, alleging that the annuity had been obtained through fraud and misrepresentation, and that it had been assigned to B. colourably and without consideration. B., by his answer, denied all knowledge of the alleged fraud or misrepresentation, and claimed to be a purchaser for a full consideration. No answer being put in by A., who continued abroad, an injunction, obtained by the plaintiffs against A. and B., was dissolved as to B., who proceeded to trial in the action at law commenced by him in the name of A. (the plaintiffs in equity appearing on such trial), and recovered a verdict. The plaintiffs subsequently moved for an attachment against the solicitor of B., for a breach of the injunction, but the court refused the application. Imperial Gas Light Co. v. Clarke, Younge, 580.

Injunction against Proceedings at Law—Taking Money out of Court.]—Taking money out of court of law, paid in there by rule of court, is breach of common injunction against proceedings at law. A motion for that purpose was refused. Parke v. Shrewsbury (Earl), M'Clel. 103; 13 Price, 289.

—— Showing Cause.]—Showing cause against a rule nisi for a new trial is not a breach of an injunction. Whitmore v. Thornton, 3 Price, 241.

—— Delivery of Declaration.]—Delivery of declaration is a breach of the common injunction to stay proceedings at law. Effect of plaintiff's acquiescence. Mills v. Cobby, 1 Mer. 3.

—— Giving Notice of Trial.]—Giving notice of trial is a breach of injunction to stay trial. Bird v. Brancker, 2 Sim. & S. 186; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 84.

—— Obtaining Order to Change Venue.]—It is a breach of an injunction to stay trial to obtain an order to change the venue in the action. Pariente v. Bensusan, 13 Sim. 522; 7 Jur. 618.

—— Proclamations by Sheriff.] — Plaintiff obtained the common injunction after four proclamations had been made under an exigent issued in an action commenced against him by defendant:—Held, that it was a breach of the injunction for defendant to sue out a writ to compel the sheriff to make a fifth proclamation. Marsack v. Baillie, 2 Sim. & S. 576. S. C. sub nom. Marack v. Bailey, 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 205.

After a plaintiff at law had obtained a writ exigi facias, and the first of the five necessary proclamations had been made, the defendant served him with an injunction to restrain him from taking further proceedings at law. After such service, in consequence of the plaintiff refusing to give any instructions to the sheriff, three of the further proclamations were made:—Held, that this amounted to a contempt by the plaintiff at law, and that he should not have the benefit of any proclamations made since the injunction had been served. Woodley v. Boddington, 9 Sim. 214; 7 L. J., Ch. 196; 2 Jur. 513.

—— Obtaining Rule to Show Cause why Money should not be Paid Out.]—In an action at law, the defendant paid into the court of law the sum demanded in the action, and filed his bill in equity to restrain the action, and obtained the common injunction restraining the plaintiff at law from proceeding to execution. The plaintiff at law having tried the action, and obtained a verdict, applied for and obtained a rule nisi to show cause why the money paid into the court of law should not be paid out to him:—Held, that this proceeding was a step towards execution, and was a breach of the injunction. Brooks v. Purton, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 271; 11 L. J., Ch. 122; 6 Jur. 94.

—— Second Civil Bill in Continuation of Civil Bill Dismissed without Prejudice.]—A landlord obtained a civil bill decree in an ejectment against an overholding tenant, who appealed, and filed a bill for specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease, and for an injunction. The common injunction was obtained, and, on the appeal, the civil bill was dismissed without prejudice, and the landlord brought a second civil bill, and obtained a decree. An attachment for breach of injunction was refused, as second civil bill was only continuation of first. M'Girr v. Jervis, Hay. & J. 501.

—— Obtaining Rule to Show Cause against Attachment.]—An injunction for want of an answer had been obtained to restrain the defendant from all proceedings at law against the plaintiff, on an award of payment of money. The award having been made a rule of the court of king's bench, the defendant applied to that court for an attachment for non-performance of the award, and obtained a rule to show cause; this is not of itself any breach of the injunction. Franco v. Franco, 2 Cox, 420.

—— Plaintiff should get Leave to Sue on Bail Bond.]—Where defendant has been arrested on attachment for contempt in not appearing to subpœna ad resp., and he has given a bail bond to sheriff, and there is an injunction restraining further proceedings in the action, plaintiff should apply for leave to be permitted to sue on the bail bond, notwithstanding the injunction, where the defendant has not complied with condition by appearing. Birdwood v. Hart, 6 Price, 32.

Breach of injunction by proceeding against bail. —— v. Hancock, 17 Ves. 385.

—— Injunction after Execution—Sheriff Paying over Money.] — Where an injunction is obtained, even after execution executed, it is a breach of the injunction to call on the sheriff to pay over the money; but if the sheriff had voluntarily paid the money, it seems that would be no breach of the injunction. Sed quære. Franklyn v. Thomas, 3 Mer. 234.

If an injunction is obtained on bill filed after execution executed, the goods not yet being out of the hands of the sheriff, and the sheriff proceeds to sell without process, he will be ordered to pay the money into court. Ib.

Attaching and receiving money levied by sheriff, though levied before bill was filed, is breach of injunction. Axe v. Clarke, Dick. 549.

Technical Breach Provoked by Plaintiff.] —Where plaintiff misrepresents to the public what has been done by the court, and defendant, to correct that misstatement, does what in strictness is a breach of the injunction, the court will not entertain any complaint by plaintiff. Bar- field v. Nicholson, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 90; 25 R. R. 144.

Where Injunction Dissolved as to Two of Three Plaintiffs.]—Where the common injunction is dissolved with respect to two out of three plaintiffs at law, it is a contempt of court for three afterwards to go on with the action. Money v. Jordan, 13 Beav. 229; 20 L. J., Ch. 174; 15 Jur. 49.

An order nisi, to dissolve the common injunction, was obtained by two out of three co-plaintiffs at law, and made absolute generally and not as to the two only:—Held, that they were not guilty of a contempt by afterwards proceeding in the names of the three; but the order was afterwards varied, and the plaintiff, who had been arrested in the meanwhile, was set at liberty on undertaking to confess judgment, in order that he might not afterwards say that the judgment had been satisfied by the execution. Ib.

Execution.]—Effect of an injunction in the court of chancery before action commenced, staying all proceedings at law after action commenced, permitting the defendant to call for a plea and proceed to judgment at law, if in a condition to do so, or if not to do only what is necessary to enable him to sue, restraining execution. Therefore, after bail excepted to, ruling the sheriff to bring in the body, is a breach of the injunction. Bullen v. Ovey, 16 Ves. 141.

—— On Joint Judgment, where Injunction obtained by One of Two Defendants.]—Injunction obtained by one co-obligor, the other not being made party, is no breach of injunction to sue out execution on a joint judgment, with notice to sheriff of injunction, and directions not to take plaintiff in equity. Chaplain v. Cooper, 1 Ves. & B. 16.

After injunction obtained by principal, proceeding against bail is a breach. Ib.

Recovering Costs.]—Solicitor may proceed to tax his costs after a verdict at law, with a view to commence an action in his own name for the amount, after a final settlement between the parties by arbitration without his concurrence, notwithstanding an injunction to stay execution. Brooks v. Bourne, 1 Price, 72.

Where, previous to injunction to stay proceedings after verdict in ejectment, plaintiff at law had taxed costs at law, and obtained writ of possession, it is a breach of injunction to sue out attachment for costs; but injunction being improperly obtained, Lord Chancellor would not commit for contempt. Partington v. Booth, 3 Mer. 148; 17 R. R. 48. Woodward v. King, 2 Ch. Ca. 203.

Injunction obtained by Shareholders suing on behalf, &c.—Action against other Shareholders.]—A suit by some partners in a joint-stock banking company, on behalf of themselves and the other shareholders, to restrain a creditor of the company from suing the shareholders for a debt alleged to have been equitably created. The common injunction restrained the defendants from proceeding at law against the plaintiffs touching the matters in question:—Held, that the common injunction in terms only protected the plaintiffs named on the record, and that therefore a proceeding by the defendants against the other shareholders, not individually named, was no breach of the injunction. Lund v. Blanshard, 4 Hare, 290; 14 L. J., Ch. 332.

Waste—Planting Potatoes in Ploughed Land.]—Planting potatoes in land previously ploughed is not such a breach of an injunction to stay waste as will be punished by attachment. Brophy v. Quarry, Hayes, 449.

Injunction against Pulling Down House—Forcible Entry by Breaking Window.]—Parties claiming to be equitable mortgagees in possession of certain freehold houses commenced pulling down the wall of one of them. The party claiming to have the legal estate thereupon filed his bill against the equitable mortgagees, and obtained, ex parte, an injunction to restrain them from pulling down, destroying, or damaging the houses or buildings, and from removing or carrying away the bricks or materials thereof, and from doing or committing any waste, injury, or spoil to, in, or upon the premises, or any part thereof. The plaintiff afterwards put workmen into the houses, who excluded the defendants by shutting the doors and windows. The defendants thereupon obtained an entry by breaking a window in one of the houses, broke the lock of one of the doors, and ejected the plaintiff's workmen:—Held, that, under the circumstances, no breach of the injunction had been committed. Loder v. Arnold, 15 Jur. 117.

Injunction Against Permitting Certain Effect from Certain Cause—Effect Happening—Dispute as to Cause.]—After an injunction had been granted, restraining a defendant from permitting a certain injurious effect to be produced by a given cause (but not otherwise restraining any definite act), the apprehended injury took place; but the defendants denied, to the best of their belief, that it arose from the alleged cause. The court, in such circumstances, refused to treat the defendants as contumacious, until it should have been conclusively determined, by a verdict at law, that the injury complained of was produced by the cause assigned. Dawson v. Paver, 5 Hare, 424; 4 Railw. Cas. 81; 16 L. J., Ch. 274; 11 Jur. 766.

The verdict of a jury having found that the forbidden cause would produce the effect, but, a new trial being directed, the court declined to proceed as for a breach of the injunction till after the second trial. Ib.

The rule that an individual must so use his own property as not to injure his neighbours, applies to persons acting under inclosure and other acts of parliament of a similar nature. Ib.

Exercise of Right by Stranger.]—One, not party to injunction, exercising an antecedent right, cannot commit a breach of it. Booth v. Stanley, 2 Eq. Abr. 528.

Alleged Breach by Agent of Person Restrained.]—By the terms of an injunction A. B. was restrained, but it did not extend to "his servants and agents." A motion to commit his agent, C. D., for breach of the injunction held irregular; but semble, that he might be proceeded against for "a contempt," if he knowingly aided and assisted A. B. in breach of the injunction. Wellesley (Lord) v. Mornington (Earl), 11 Beav. 180; 12 Jur. 367.

Person Restrained Aiding and Abetting Breach.]—If a party, who together with others has been restrained by injunction from doing a particular act, is afterwards present, aiding and abetting, when that is done which the injunction has prohibited, he is guilty of a breach of the injunction. St. John's College v. Carter, 4 Myl. & C. 497; 8 L. J., Ch. 218; 3 Jur. 18.

Alleged Breach of Undertaking not to Publish Statement.]—An action having been brought to restrain the defendant from publishing an advertisement termed a "caution," as injurious to the plaintiffs, the defendant, on a motion for injunction, undertook not to publish the caution till the trial. A newspaper published an inaccurate account of the proceedings, and the defendant then published an advertisement giving an accurate account, in which he stated that he had undertaken not to repeat the caution till the trial, but he did not set out the terms of the caution. A motion was made to commit the defendant for contempt and for breach of the undertaking:—Held, that the motion must be refused without costs. Buenos Ayres Gas Co. v. Wilde, 29 W. R. 43.

Allowing Sewage to Flow.]—A local board of health was restrained by a decree of the court, at the suit of an individual, from allowing sewage to flow into a river after a certain date. The board did not stop the sewage, but tried, and failed, to render it inoffensive:—Held, that the board had committed a contempt of court, and was not excused by the fact that the board was acting in the matter on behalf of the public, and carrying out duties imposed on it by act of parliament. Spokes v. Banbury Local Board, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1010; 13 L. T. 453; 14 W. R. 169—L. JJ. Affirming 35 L. J., Ch. 105; L. R. 1 Eq. 42.

Public Body—Sequestration.]—An order for sequestration for contempt granted against a public body having property vested in it for various public purposes, it appearing to the court that there was property on which the sequestration would operate. Ib.

Trustees Restrained, and their Successors, Agreeing to Commit Breach.]—An injunction was granted against certain trustees of a friendly society by name, restraining them from dividing 2,000*l.*, part of the society's funds, among its members. These trustees shortly afterwards retired, and others were appointed in their place. A fresh resolution was then passed by the society for dividing the 2,000*l.*, and this was carried out by the new trustees. One of the former trustees was present when the resolution was passed, and assisted in distributing the money. All received their shares of the money, but had repaid them. On motion to commit all the trustees, old and new, for contempt:—Held, on the evidence, that the new trustees had notice of the order; that they and the old trustees, who actively assisted in dividing the money, must be committed to prison, and the costs of the motion must be paid by all. Avory v. Andrews, 51 L. J., Ch. 414; 46 L. T. 279; 30 W. R. 564.

Disobedience by Third Parties—Attachment.]—The plaintiff having obtained an injunction whereby the defendants were restrained from interfering with or disturbing his markets and fairs, or doing any acts whereby he should be deprived of the tolls and customs to which he was, by the judgment, declared entitled:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an order that writs of attachment should issue against persons, not defendants in the action, who had knowingly acted in contravention of the injunction. Smith-Barry v. Dawson, 27 L. R., Ir. 558.

Person not Enjoined knowingly "Aiding and Assisting" in Breach—Committal.]—A person who knowingly aids and assists in the doing of acts which have been expressly prohibited by injunction (although he is not a party to the litigation nor named in the order granting the injunction) may be committed for contempt of court. Wellesley (Lord) v. Mornington (Earl) (11 Beav. 180, 181) followed. Seaward v. Paterson, 66 L. J., Ch. 267; [1897] 1 Ch. 545; 76 L. T. 215; 45 W. R. 610—C. A. Affirming 61 J. P. 281.

Act Contrary to the Spirit, not the Letter, of Injunction.]—The court will interfere to restrain an action at law, the bringing of which is against the spirit, though not within the letter, of a former injunction. A solicitor assisting his client in bringing such an action may be called upon by the court to answer the matters of the affidavits. Brenan v. Preston, 1 W. R. 173—L.JJ.

b. Notice of Injunction, What is Sufficient.

Personal Service Necessary.]—Gooch v. Marshall, 8 W. R. 410.

Order not Served.]—Breach of injunction after notice of the order, without personal service of the injunction or order. Kimpton v. Eve, 2 Ves. & B. 349; 13 R. R. 116.

Defendant committed for breach of an injunction after notice of its having been obtained, although the order for the injunction had not been served. Vansandau v. Rose, 2 Jac. & Walk. 264; 22 R. R. 114.

A party who has notice of an order of the court is bound by it from the time the order is pronounced; and if the order be an injunction, and the party, after notice, be guilty of a breach of it, he may be committed for the contempt without the production of the writ of injunction, and although the writ have not actually issued. M'Neil v. Garratt, Cr. & Ph. 98; 10 L. J., Ch. 297; 5 Jur. 826.

Party having knowledge of injunctions being granted proceeds at law; he is guilty of contempt, though not sealed. Powel v. Follet, Dick. 116.

It does not excuse a party proceeding at law, after injunction, that it was not sealed; for where a party, or his solicitor, has been present on an order for an injunction, they will be bound, although it be not sealed. Anon., 3 Atk. 567.

It is not the rule on applications for commital for contempt by disregarding an order of the court, that the court will only commit where, there having been time to draw up, enter, and serve the order, such order has been actually served on the offending party. On the contrary, even where the order is ten or eleven months old, and has never been so served, the party disregarding it will be committed if it appears that he really knew of its existence and purport, and wilfully disobeyed it. United Telephone Co. v. Dale, 53 L. J., Ch. 295; 25 Ch. D. 778; 50 L. T. 85; 32 W. R. 428. See also Robinson v. Elton, 4 L. J., Ch. 197.

An attachment may be issued for breach of an injunction, although no writ of injunction has been actually issued, when the defendant, after being served with the decree or order for injunction, has disobeyed it. Mining Co. of Ireland v. Delany, 21 L. R., Ir. 8.

Notice after taking in Execution.]—Where a party is taken after he has obtained an injunction, but before notice given of it, the detaining him after notice is no contempt. Willis v. Daniel, 1 Anstr. 36.

Defendant in Court—Delay—Order not Drawn up.]—Contempt by breach of injunction by defendant, present in court during the motion, though retiring before the order pronounced; but motion to commit after a considerable lapse of time, and the order not drawn up, refused with costs. James v. Downes, 18 Ves. 522; 11 R. R. 247. See Scott v. Becher, 4 Price, 346; 18 R. R. 722.

Defendant in Court, Leaving before Judgment.]—Contempt by breach of injunction by persons who were present in court during the motion, though absent when the order was pronounced. Hearn v. Tennant, 14 Ves. 136; 9 R. R. 253.

Drawing up Order.]—In November, 1847, an order was made for an injunction, but was not drawn up. Upon an ex parte application in April, 1849, to have it drawn up:—Held, that notice of the application must be given to the defendant. Bateman v. Wiatt, 11 Beav. 587.

Defendant's Counsel in Court without Instructions.]—The presence of a defendant's counsel in court without instructions, when an interim injunction is continued against him in the absence of and without notice to his solicitor, does not constitute such notice to the defendant as will justify committal for contempt for a subsequent breach of the order. Carrow v. Ferrior, 37 L. J., Ch. 569; L. R. 3 Ch. 175.

Notice of Injunction—Proper Mode of Giving.]—A London solicitor who obtains an order from the court of bankruptcy in London restraining a sale under an execution in the country ought, instead of telegraphing the order to the sheriff's officer, to telegraph it to a solicitor at the place, as his agent, asking him to give notice of it to the persons affected. Langley, Ex parte, Bishop, In re, 49 L. J., Bk. 1; 13 Ch. D. 110; 43 L. T. 181; 28 W. R. 174—C. A.

Notice by Telegram.]—Sufficient notice of the granting of an injunction may be given by telegram; but, if it is sought to commit for contempt a person who, after receiving such a notice, disregards it, the court must decide upon the particular facts whether he had in fact notice of the injunction, and it is the duty of those who ask for the committal to prove this beyond reasonable doubt. Ib.

A sheriff's officer and an auctioneer proceeded with the sale of the property of a trader seized under a fi. fa. after they had received notice by a letter from the debtor's solicitor that he had filed a liquidation petition, and had also received notice by telegram that the court of bankruptcy had made an order restraining further proceedings under the writ:—Held, that the sheriff's officer and the auctioneer had been guilty of contempt of court, and that they must pay the costs of a motion to commit them. Bryant, In re, 4 Ch. D. 98; 35 L. T. 489; 25 W. R. 230.

Semble, that it is equally a contempt of court, if he had received notice of an act of bankruptcy. Ib.

c. Motion for Committal or Attachment.

i. In General.

Interfering with Pastor of Dissenting Church—Parties.]—The consistoire, or governing body of the French Protestant church of London, was, in 1860, restrained by injunction from interfering with the plaintiff, a pastor of the church, in the discharge of his duties as pastor. In 1866, M., a defendant in the suit, and also a pastor of the church, was present at a meeting of the consistoire, when they resolved to suspend the plaintiff from the discharge of his duties. M., as agent of the consistoire, took an active part in enforcing, though he did not in passing, that resolution. The plaintiff then moved for an order to commit M. for contempt of court, on the ground of the alleged infraction by him of the injunction granted in 1860. The members of the consistoire were not served with, and did not appear upon, the motion:—Held, that the court would not, in their absence, decide upon the validity or invalidity of the act of suspension, and that, upon the whole case stated in support of the motion, it must be refused; the only order to be made being, that the plaintiff must pay the costs of it. Dangars v. Rivaz, 14 L. T. 348. Affirmed, 15 L. T. 196—L.JJ.

Acquiescence.]—The court will not assist a plaintiff in enforcing attachment if he has not exercised due vigilance in maintaining his right secured by injunction. Rodgers v. Nowill, 1 W. R. 122.

Acquiescence by the plaintiff in the defendant's breach of the injunction must be of the distinctest and clearest kind, almost enough to support a claim founded on such acquiescence, or the defendant will be liable to be committed. Rodgers v. Nowill, 1 W. R. 205—L.JJ.

Defendant not Contumacious.]—Where defendant, after breach, had taken some steps to put himself in the right, motion ordered to stand over till the following term, defendant paying the costs of the application. Cornish v. Upton, 4 L. T. 862.

Form of Order.]—An order to commit for breach of an injunction which omitted to state the affidavit of service of the order for the injunction, or the notice to commit, or that the defendant had appeared by counsel on the motion, held irregular, and discharged, but without costs. Stephens v. Workman, 8 L. T. 232; 11 W. R. 503.

ii. Notice of.

Personal Service necessary.]—Personal service of a notice of motion to commit for breach of an injunction is necessary, and cannot be dispensed with, though counsel undertake to appear for the party. Ellerton v. Thirsk, 1 Jac. & Walk. 376.

A notice of motion to commit the defendant for breach of an injunction, need not be served on his clerk in court, as well as on himself personally. Bowdler v. Bowdler, 9 L. J., Ch. 394; 4 Jur. 626.

An order that a defendant in contempt for breach of an injunction shall stand committed, unless cause be shown on a stated day, is not irregular if it be personally served. Durant v. Moore, 2 Russ. & M. 33; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 12.

Upon breach of injunction to restrain an act, the proper course is personal service of notice of motion that defendant shall stand committed. It is not the practice to move that he show cause why he shall not stand committed. Angerstein v. Hunt, 6 Ves. 488.

Where it is to do anything, the course is to move that he shall do it on a particular day, or stand committed. Ib.

Affidavit must be Specific—Service of Order.]—An attachment will not be awarded for breach of an injunction, unless the charging affidavit contains a specification of the time and place when and where the act complained of was committed; or if the party could have been, but was not, served with the injunction. Morris v. Morris, 1 Hog, 238.

Husband and Wife.]—After a decree and an injunction against husband and wife restraining proceedings abroad:—Held, that a motion to commit the husband for his wife's breach of the injunction could not be sustained; that where a wife is living separate from her husband, and abroad, though she has appeared jointly with him by the same solicitor in all the proceedings in the cause, a notice of motion to commit for contempt must be served upon her personally, and that substituted service ought not to be ordered; and that either the plaintiff or the husband may obtain an order for the wife's separate appearance; and therefore the court refused the motion, with liberty to the plaintiff and the husband to make such application as they respectively might be advised to obtain the separate appearance of the wife. Hope v. Carnegie, L. R. 7 Eq. 254.

II. Costs.

a. Of Motion for Injunction.

The costs of an injunction order await the event of the cause, and are taxed with the costs of the cause. They are never given in the first instance. Anon., 2 Moll. 327.

An action on a post obit, as contrary to the principles of this court, was restrained, and subsequent motion to set injunction aside was refused with costs, such case being an exception to general rule, that costs of motion for injunction, or to dissolve injunction, refused are costs in cause. Marsack v. Reeves, 6 Madd. 108.

The course of the court provides for the costs of motions for injunctions in a way most just, by leaving the party moving, if his suit fails, to pay the costs; and if his suit succeeds, providing for his costs effectually. G. W. Ry. v. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., 5 De G. & Sm. 437; 16 Jur. 443.

The application for an injunction having partly failed and partly succeeded, no costs were given on either side. Rochdale Canal Co. v. King, 22 L. J., Ch. 604; 17 Jur. 1001; 1 W. R. 278.

An application was made after answer, for an injunction to stay proceedings at law, and was refused. The plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs. Barwell v. Barwell, 5 Beav. 373; 12 L. J., Ch. 9; 7 Jur. 272.

Successful Application—Case not fairly stated.]—If parties applying for an injunction ex parte do not state their case fully and fairly they will have to pay the costs even if successful. Holden v. Waterlow, 15 W. R. 139.

Set-off of Costs.]—As to set-off of costs of motion for injunction against costs of a trial at law for the same breach of covenant. Sainter v. Ferguson, 1 H. & Tw. 333; 1 Macn. & G. 286; 19 L. J., Ch. 170; 14 Jur. 255.

Where no Order as to Costs.]—When a motion for an injunction involving the merits of the cause was ordered to stand over to the hearing, and afterwards the bill was changed into an information and bill, and at the hearing a decree for a perpetual injunction was made with costs, the plaintiff's costs of the motion, though not specifically mentioned, are costs in the cause, and will be allowed him on taxation. Att.-Gen. v. Lonsdale (Lord), 40 L. J., Ch. 198; L. R. 6 Ch. 141; 23 L. T. 794; 19 W. R. 235.

Injunction with Costs—Interim Injunction.]—An order made on notice and continuing an injunction with costs will, in the absence of special directions to the contrary, include the costs of an interim injunction previously obtained on an ex parte application. Blakey v. Hall, 56 L. J., Ch. 568; 56 L. T. 400; 35 W. R. 592.

b. Of Cause.

Plaintiff proceeding, after Interlocutory Injunction, for Costs only.]—On an interlocutory application, an injunction was granted, which determined the principal subject of dispute between the parties. The court held, that the plaintiff was not justified in afterwards proceeding in the cause for the costs only, and gave him no costs subsequent to that time. Taylor v. Davis, 7 L. J., Ch. 179.

A. being indebted to T., an agreement is entered into by which judgment for the debt is to be signed, but not entered up, against A. for securing payment by instalments, T. agreeing not to enter up judgment (so as to get into the "Tradesman's Circular"), nor publish it in any way. Shortly afterwards T. threatened to sell the judgment debt at a periodical sale, which would necessarily involve the publication, by advertisements, of A.'s indebtedness. The court, being of opinion that this threat was not bonâ fide for the purpose of sale, but for getting better terms from A., restrained such publication by injunction. A. having in the first place obtained an ex parte injunction, T. offered immediately, and before further expenses were incurred, to submit to a perpetual injunction, but refused to pay costs. A. thereupon brought the matter to a hearing:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs to the hearing. Jamieson v. Teague, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1206.

Interim Injunction—Perpetual Injunction.]—Where the general merits of a plaintiff's bill, praying an injunction to restrain an infringement of the plaintiff's copyright, have not been displaced by the defence, the plaintiff will be entitled to his costs for bringing such cause to a hearing to obtain a perpetual injunction after an interim injunction has been obtained in such cause. Mayhew v. Maxwell, 3 L. T. 847.

Trademark—Imitation—Injunction refused.]—If a trader imitates another person's label or trademark, and sails so near the wind as just to avoid an injunction, the court, on refusing the injunction, will not willingly give him any costs of the proceedings. Bass v. Dawber, 19 L. T. 626.

Perpetual Injunction.]—Where the plaintiff is entitled to have the injunction made perpetual, the defendant will have to pay the costs of the suit, however trivial the subject-matter may be, unless, after the interlocutory injunction was granted, he tendered the costs up to that time. Fradella v. Weller, 2 Russ. & M. 247.

c. Of Motion for Committal or Attachment.

Unintentional Breach.]—A party guilty of a breach of an injunction through mistake will not be committed, but will have to pay the costs of the application bringing that breach under the notice of the court. Newman v. Ring, 10 Jur. 463. And see S. C., 15 L. J., Ch. 365.

Breach by Defendant's Servant.]—A defendant, whose servant has committed a breach of an injunction of the court, but to whom personally no blame attaches, is liable to pay the costs of a motion for committal. Rantzen v. Rothschild, 13 L. T. 399; 14 W. R. 96.

d. Of Inquiry as to Damages.

Where in an action to restrain the defendant from polluting a stream, and for damages, judgment was given for the plaintiff with costs, and an inquiry as to damages ordered, the costs of such inquiry were reserved in order that the court might exercise control over the manner in which the inquiry was conducted, and prevent the costs being unduly increased by the plaintiff. It is the usual practice to send such an inquiry to the chief clerk and not to a referee. Slack v. Midland Ry., 50 L. J., Ch. 196; 16 Ch. D. 81; 43 L. T. 434; 29 W. R. 302.

1. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES.

Duty to Admit.]—A person who keeps an inn is bound to admit all persons who apply peaceably to be admitted as guests. Hawthorn v. Hammond, 1 Car. & K. 404.

An indictment lies against an innkeeper who refuses to receive a guest, he having room in his house at the time; and it is not necessary for the guest to tender the price of his entertainment, if his objection is not on that ground. And it is no defence for the innkeeper that the guest was travelling on a Sunday, and at an hour of the night after the innkeeper's family had gone to bed; nor is it any defence that the guest refused to tell his name and abode, as the innkeeper has no right to insist upon knowing those particulars; but if the guest comes to the inn drunk, or behaves in an indecent or improper manner, the innkeeper is not bound to receive him. Rex v. Ivens, 7 Car. & P. 213.

—— Not to Particular Apartments.]—Although a traveller is entitled to reasonable accommodation in an inn, he is not entitled to select a particular apartment, or to insist on occupying a bedroom for the purpose of sitting up all night, so long as the innkeeper is willing and offers to furnish him with a proper room for that purpose. Fell v. Knight, 8 M. & W. 269; 10 L. J., Ex. 277; 5 Jur. 554.

A landlord of an inn may, after a request to withdraw, remove a guest from a particular room in an inn where he has misconducted himself, but he may not remove him from the house. A guest has no right to select his own accommodation, but it is the duty of the landlord to find such accommodation for the guest as he may choose. Scrivenor v. Reed, 6 W. R. 603.

Duty to Continue to Lodge Guest.]—A traveller who goes to a common inn is not necessarily entitled to accommodation therein as long as he chooses to remain on payment of the inn charges and conducting himself properly, and if he forms an intention of staying in the inn and has no intention of going on to any other place, he ceases to be a traveller, and the innkeeper is entitled to terminate the relation of host and guest by reasonable notice. The question whether a traveller staying in a common inn has ceased to be a traveller is a question of fact, in determining which the length of his stay in point of time must be taken into consideration, but is not of itself conclusive. Lamond v. Richard, 66 L. J., Q. B. 315; [1897] 1 Q. B. 541; 76 L. T. 141; 45 W. R. 289; 61 J. P. 260—C. A.

Duty to Supply Refreshments.]—Attached to an hotel and under the same roof and licence, but entered by a separate door from the street, was a refreshment bar, at which persons casually passing by obtained refreshments at the counter. A householder living within twelve hundred yards had been in the habit of coming to the bar with several large dogs, which had been found an annoyance to other guests; and letters had passed in which the innkeeper had objected to the dogs being brought into the bar, and the visitor had asserted his right to bring them. The visitor subsequently, while taking a walk for pleasure, went with one large dog to the bar and claimed to be served with refreshment, which was refused. On an indictment charging the proprietor of the bar, as an innkeeper, with refusing refreshment to the prosecutor:—Held, that he could not be convicted: first, because the refreshment bar was not an inn; secondly, because the prosecutor was not a traveller; and thirdly, because, had it been otherwise, the innkeeper had reasonable ground for his refusal. Reg. v. Rymer, 46 L. J., M. C. 108; 2 Q. B. D. 136; 35 L. T. 774; 25 W. R. 415; 13 Cox C. C. 378.

As to Post-Horses.]—An innkeeper, though licensed to let post-horses, is not liable to an action for refusing to supply them for a guest. Dicas v. Hides, 1 Stark. 247.

For Loss of Goods—Who are Liable.]—It seems that an hotel-keeper is subject to the same liabilities as an innkeeper. Jones v. Osborn, 2 Chit. 484.

—— Salaried Manager.] — The salaried manager of an hotel belonging to a company is not an innkeeper so as to be by law responsible for the goods and property of the guests, although the usual licence under 1 Geo. 4, c. 61, has been granted to him personally. Dixon v. Birch, 42 L. J., Ex. 135; L. R. 8 Ex. 135; 28 L. T. 360; 21 W. R. 443.

—— Who are Guests.]—The plaintiff on arriving at the platform of a station handed his goods to the defendant's porter, who was awaiting the arrival of the train. He proceeded to the hotel, whither his goods were subsequently conveyed, intending to stay the night. On receipt of a telegram he gave up his intention of remaining, but ordered refreshments. He was directed to the railway refreshment-room, which was not actually part of the hotel, but connected with it by a passage in which the hotel lock-up room, where the plaintiff's goods were placed, was situated. After lunching and paying for his lunch in the refreshment-room, he found that certain of his goods were missing:—Held, that the plaintiff was not a guest. Strauss v. County Hotel and Wine Co., 53 L. J., Q. B. 25: 12 Q. B. D. 27; 49 L. T. 601; 32 W. R. 170; 48 J. P. 69.

M. went to an hotel early in the morning and asked for a bedroom. He was told that he could not have a bedroom, but that he could use a room, engaged by persons expected to arrive during the day, for the purpose of dressing, and he was shown up and his luggage was taken to this room. He then dressed and went down to breakfast, leaving the room unlocked and the stand of his dressing-bag outside the bag and exposed upon the dressing-table. After breakfasting he paid for his breakfast and went out, and did not return till late at night. In the meantime the persons who had engaged the room arrived, and one of the hotel servants removed M.'s luggage into the corridor as it was, leaving the dressing-stand out of the bag. On his return M. asked for his room and was told he had none, but one being subsequently found, his luggage was brought to it. M. then found that jewellery had been stolen from a drawer in the dressing-stand, and sued the hotel company for 140*l.* for the loss thereof. A notice pursuant to 26 & 27 Vict. c. 41, s. 3, was exhibited in the hall of the hotel:—Held (Fry, L.J., diss.), that M. occupied the room as a guest until the arrival of the persons who had engaged the room, and that as, in the ordinary course, the relationship of innkeeper and guest continues until the guest's property is brought and redelivered to him on his departure, the hotel company were negligent in placing M.'s goods as they did in the corridor. By so doing they debarred themselves from proving that the loss was contributed to by M.'s negligence in leaving his goods exposed in the room, and M. was therefore entitled to recover to the extent of 30*l.*, the limit prescribed by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 41, s. 1. As, however, M.'s negligence debarred him from proving that the loss occurred wholly by the "wilful act, default, or neglect" of the hotel company, he was not entitled to recover beyond that amount. Medawar v. Grand Hotel Co., 60 L. J., Q. B. 209; [1891] 2 Q. B. 11; 64 L. T. 851; 55 J. P. 614—C. A.

—— Liability for.]—An innkeeper, though guilty of no negligence, but even diligent, is liable for the loss or injury of the goods of his guest not arising from the negligence of the guest, the act of God, or the queen's enemies. Morgan v. Ravey, infra.

—— Loss Occasioned by Negligence of Guest—Evidence.]—A guest at an inn went to bed, leaving a bag containing about 27*l.* in his trousers pocket. He left his trousers on the ground at the side of his bed farthest from the door. There was a key in the lock of the door, but he only shut the door and did not lock it. He had previously pulled the bag containing the money out of his pocket in the commercial room for the purpose of paying somebody some money. In the course of the night somebody entered his bedroom through the door and stole the bag of money:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on his part, which occasioned the loss in such a way that it would not have happened had he used the care that a prudent man might reasonably be expected to have taken under the circumstances. Oppenheim v. White Lion Hotel Co., 40 L. J., C. P. 231; L. R. 6 C. P. 515; 25 L. T. 93.

When a guest at an inn has an opportunity given him of securing valuables in his possession, by giving them over to the custody of the innkeeper or otherwise, and neglects such opportunity:—Held, that his conduct amounts to such negligence as to deprive him of his right to recover against the innkeeper, in case of such valuables being lost or stolen. Jones v. Jackson, 29 L. T. 399.

—— Display of Wares by Guest.]—If there has been negligence on the part of the guest, the innkeeper will not be liable. Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & S. 306; Holt, 211, n.; 1 Stark. 251, n.; 16 R. R. 473.

An innkeeper is not answerable for the goods of his guest, which are lost through the negligence of the guest, out of a private room in the inn chosen by the guest for the purpose of exhibiting to his customers his goods for sale, the use of which room was granted by the innkeeper, who at the same time told the guest that there was a key, and that he might lock the door, which he neglected to do. Ib.

If a guest at an inn deposits his goods in a room which he uses as a warehouse, and of which he has the exclusive possession, the innkeeper is not liable for the loss. Farnworth v. Packwood, 1 Stark. 249; Holt, 209.

—— Not Locking Door—What is Sufficient Evidence of Negligence to leave to the Jury.]—The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant to recover the value of property, consisting of jewellery worth 19*l.* 10*s.*, which was stolen during the night from a table in the plaintiff's bedroom while he and his wife were staying as guests at the defendant's hotel. There was a bolt inside the door of the plaintiff's bedroom and a key on the outside, and a wardrobe with drawers in the room. The plaintiff left the key on the outside of the door, but he swore positively that he bolted the door on the inside when he went to bed, at the same time admitting that he had said, in reply to an observation that the door could not be unbolted from the outside, "If that is so I must have made a mistake." The plaintiff's wife had been wearing valuable jewellery in the hotel during the evening:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the plaintiff to be left to the jury. That, even if leaving the door unbolted was not in itself sufficient evidence, there were other circumstances which, coupled with it, would be sufficient. That it cannot be laid down as a proposition of law that leaving the door unbolted is not evidence of negligence; but that each case must depend upon its own circumstances. Herbert v. Markwell, 45 L. T. 649; 46 J. P. 358. Affirmed in C. A., W. N. 1882, 112.

There is no obligation on the part of the guest at an inn to lock or fasten the door of the room in which he sleeps; and the omission to do so does not discharge the innkeeper from his liability to answer for goods of the guest stolen from the room in which he slept. Mitchell v. Woods, 16 L. T. 676.

An innkeeper is liable for the value of property of his guest lost while in his house, unless caused by the negligence of the guest. Morgan v. Ravey, 6 H. & N. 265; 30 L. J., Ex. 131; 3 L. T. 784; 9 W. R. 376. S. C., at nisi prius, 2 F. & F. 283.

The omission of a guest to leave valuable articles with an innkeeper, or to fasten his door on retiring to rest, is not necessarily such negligence as disentitles him to recover. Ib.

An action is maintainable against the executors of the innkeeper, if brought within the time limited by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 2. Ib.

When property has been stolen from a guest in an inn, the innkeeper is liable unless the guest has contributed by his own negligence to the loss; but not locking his door is not such negligence. Filipowski v. Merryweather, 2 F. & F. 285.

—— Direction to Jury.]—If the jury finds that the guest was guilty of gross negligence, the innkeeper is relieved from his liability. Armistead v. Wilde or White, 17 Q. B. 261; 20 L. J., Q. B. 524; 15 Jur. 1010.

Where a guest had, on the evening of the night in which the theft was committed, and on several previous occasions, opened his driving-box, and counted the bank notes kept in it, in the presence of persons in the commercial room, and the box was so insecurely fastened that it might be opened without a key:—Held, that the jury was warranted in finding the guest guilty of gross negligence; though it was the custom of travellers to leave their driving-boxes in the commercial room during the night. Ib.

Where the goods of a guest at an inn are lost the innkeeper is liable as for breach of duty, unless the negligence of the guest occasions the loss in such a way as that the loss would not have happened if the guest had used the ordinary care that a prudent man may be reasonably expected to have taken under the circumstances. Cashill v. Wright, 6 El. & Bl. 891; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1072; 4 W. R. 709.

Where there is such negligence the innkeeper is not responsible. Ib.

Therefore where an innkeeper set up such negligence in answer to an action by the owner for the loss of goods, and the judge told the jury that the innkeeper was responsible, unless there had been gross negligence on the part of the owner, but did not explain what would constitute gross negligence:—Held, a misdirection, inasmuch as the jury might have understood that the owner was entitled to recover unless there had been an absence on his part of even the loosest degree of care. Ib.

—— Goods, where placed.]—An innkeeper is liable for the loss of a parcel left in the lobby or hall of the inn. Candy v. Spencer, 3 F. & F. 306.

An admission by an innkeeper that he left money entrusted to him for the purpose of taking up a bill in his cash-box in his tap-room, where it was lost, together with a much larger sum of his own, is evidence of gross negligence to go to a jury. Doorman v. Jenkins, 4 N. & M. 170; 2 A. & E. 256; 4 L. J., K. B. 29.

If a guest at an inn directs valuable goods to be placed in the public room, and if the innkeeper does not require them to be removed to a safer place, he is liable as an insurer, in the event of the goods being stolen. Richmond v. Smith, 2 M. & Ry. 235; 8 B. & C. 9; 6 L. J., (o s.) K. B. 279.

—— Refusal to take charge of.]—If an innkeeper refuses to take charge of goods till a future day, because his house is full of parcels, still he is liable to make good the loss if the owner stops as a guest and the goods are stolen during his stay. Bennett v. Mellor, 5 Term Rep. 273; 2 R. R. 593.

—— Evidence of Landlord's Negligence.]—The plaintiff while a guest at the defendants' hotel had certain jewellery stolen:—Held, that the fact that the defendants' servants did not cause the premises to be searched upon the discovery of a poker and a knife on the bed in the plaintiff's room from which the jewellery was stolen was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants' servants. Huntly (Marchioness) v. Bedford Hotel Co., 56 J. P. 53—C. A.

Notice limiting Liability—Contents of.]—In the plaintiff's room was a notice that "articles of value, if not kept under lock, should be deposited with the manager, who will give a responsible receipt for the same." The jewellery was kept in a locked jewel-box inside a basket-trunk, that was also locked, in the plaintiff's room:—Held, that this notice did not constitute a special bargain with the plaintiff that the defendants would be responsible if jewels were kept under lock. Ib.

A mere verbal error in a copy of s. 1 of the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1860, exhibited for the purpose of limiting an innkeeper's liability, will not vitiate the notice so as to make it ineffectual, provided the notice states correctly the provisions of the act; but the omission of a material portion of the statute will render the notice ineffectual to protect the innkeeper. Spice v. Bacon, 46 L. J., Ex. 713; 2 Ex. D. 463; 36 L. T. 896; 25 W. R. 840—C. A.

In an hotel a notice was exhibited containing a copy of the first section of the act, correct in every particular, only that in the exception the word "act" was accidentally omitted:—Held, that this was a material omission, and that the notice was insufficient to protect the innkeeper. Ib.

A guest at the inn had stolen from his bedroom at night property amounting to the value of 119*l.*:—Held, that the notice contained no statement which admitted the continuance of the common law liability for the goods or property stolen, lost or injured through the wilful act of the innkeeper or his servant, and therefore did not protect him. Ib.

—— Meaning of "Wilful."]—The word "wilful," in s. 1 of the Innkeepers Liability Act, 1860, applies only to the following word "act," and not to the next following words, "default or neglect." Squire v. Wheeler, 16 L. T. 93.

Restaurant—Customer's Overcoat—Delivery to Waiter.]—The plaintiff went into the defendant's restaurant for the purpose of dining. His overcoat was received by the waiter at the table, and, without any directions, hung up on a peg in the room. The coat was stolen:—Held, that the jury were justified in finding that there was a bailment and such negligence as rendered the defendant liable. Ultzen v. Nicol, 63 L. J., Q. B. 289; [1894] 1 Q. B. 92; 10 R. 13; 70 L. T. 140; 42 W. R. 58; 58 J. P. 103.

Liability for Money.]—An innkeeper is responsible for money belonging to his guest. Kent v. Shuckard, 2 B. & Ad. 803; 1 L. J., K. B. 1.

Loss of Carriage.]—A., on a fair-day, coming to an inn kept by B. with a horse and gig ordered the horse to be put into the stable, but giving no special direction as to the gig. The horse was put into the stable, and the gig was placed with other carriages in the public highway, near the house, where it was the practice of B. to put carriages on fair-days. The gig was stolen:—Held, that B. was answerable for the loss. Jones v. Tyler, 3 N. & M. 576; 1 A. & E. 522; 3 L. J., K. B. 166.

When a guest arrives at an inn with a horse and gig, and gives direction to the ostler to take his horse in, but says nothing about the gig, a promise to take the gig into the inn may be implied. Ib.

Injury to Horse—Evidence of Negligence.]—The horse of a guest, at an inn, was stabled with another horse, and kicked and injured by it:—Held, that though these facts raised a presumption of negligence against the innkeeper, he might defend himself by showing that due care had been used, for that he was not liable without negligence. Dawson v. Chamney or Cholmley, D. & M. 348; 5 Q. B. 164; 13 L. J., Q. B. 33; 7 Jur. 1037.

—— Relationship of Innkeeper and Guest.]—By an arrangement between an innkeeper and her ostler, he had the profit of the stables, paying no rent, but providing hay, corn, &c., and supplying not only the guests in the inn, but residents in the town, whose horses he was allowed to take care of. D., who had no knowledge of this arrangement, arrived at the inn with his horse and gig, which were taken to the stable, and he became a guest. He subsequently left, saying that he should not be back till the following Monday, and requested that his horse should be attended to. He did not return for a fortnight, and in the meantime the ostler (for the purpose, as he said, of exercising the horse) drove it out, when it took fright at a locomotive steam-engine and was injured:—Held, that the relation of innkeeper and guest subsisted between the parties, and consequently the former was liable for the injury done to the horse. Day v. Bather, 2 H. & C. 14; 32 L. J., Ex. 171; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 440; 8 L. T. 205; 11 W. R. 575.

A person who takes in horses to agist does not, like an innkeeper, insure their safety; he is answerable only in case of negligence. Broadwater v. Blot, Holt, 547.

Liability for Injury to Person of Guest.]—The general duty of an innkeeper to take proper care for the safety of his guests does not extend to every room in his house at all hours of night or day, but must be limited to those places into which guests may be reasonably supposed to be likely to go, in a reasonable belief that they are entitled or invited to do so. Walker v. Midland Ry., 55 L. T. 489; 51 J. P. 116—H. L. (E.)

It is the duty of an hotel-keeper to take reasonable care of the persons of his guests, so that they are not injured by reason of a want of such care on his part whilst they are in the hotel as his guests. Sandys v. Florence, 47 L. J., C. P. 598.

A statement of claim alleged that, while the plaintiff was using an hotel, of which the defendant was proprietor, as a guest for reward to the defendant, by his negligence the ceiling of the room in which the plaintiff then was, fell upon and injured him:—Held, that such statement sufficiently showed a cause of action. Ib.

Injuries caused by a Dog.]—An innkeeper is, by reason of s. 2 of the Dogs Act, 1865, deemed to be the owner of a dog living in his hotel, and is liable for injuries to cattle caused by it, notwithstanding the dog was at the time of the injuries complained of under the control of a person staying at the hotel, to whose care it had been committed by the real owner. Gardner v. Hart, 44 W. R. 527.

Liability for Expense of Dinner.]—Where a party of several persons dine together at a tavern, they are jointly liable for the whole expense, and not merely each for his own share. Forster v. Taylor, 3 Camp. 49; 13 R. R. 748.

Account for Spirits—Legality.]—The 24 Geo. 2, c. 40, s. 12, which prevents a person from recovering for spirits supplied to a smaller amount than 20*s.* at a time, does not apply to spirits supplied by an hotel-keeper to a guest who is resident in his hotel. Proctor v. Nicholson, 7 Car & P. 67.

Washing Linen of Guests.]—The master of an hotel is not liable to pay for the washing of the linen of the guests at his house. Callard v. White, 1 Stark. 171.

2. LIEN.

What is an Inn.]—A person keeping a house of public entertainment in London, where provisions and beds are furnished for all persons applying for and paying for the same, but which was merely termed a tavern and coffee-house, and not frequented by stage-coaches or waggons, and had no stables attached to it, is to be considered an innkeeper, subject to the privileges and liabilities of such persons; and therefore he has a lien on the goods of his guests for the payment of his bill. Thompson v. Lacy, 3 B. & Ald. 283; 22 R. R. 385.

No Lien on Person.]—An innkeeper, although he has a lien on the goods, has none on the person of his guest, and cannot therefore detain him for any reckoning due; still less has he any right to take any of his clothes off his person as a security for the same. Turnbolf v. Alford, 3 M. & W. 248; 1 H. & H. 13; 7 L. J., Ex. 60; 2 Jur. 110.

Not limited to Things which he is bound to Receive.]—An innkeeper's lien extends to all the goods which he has actually received with a guest whether the property of the guest or not, and is not limited to such things as he was bound to receive with the guest. Threfall v. Borwick, 44 L. J., Q. B. 87; L. R. 10 Q. B. 210; 32 L. T. 32; 23 W. R. 312—Ex. Ch.

—— Piano.]—A person went to an inn and stayed there with his family for some time; he took with him to the inn a piano, as his own, which he had hired. A. having left the inn in debt to the innkeeper, he claimed as against the owner of the piano to detain the piano by virtue of his lien as innkeeper:—Held, that, whether he as innkeeper was bound to take in the piano or not, having done so he had a lien upon it. Ib.

But where B. lent a pianoforte to a professional pianist whilst staying as a guest at an inn, the innkeeper well knowing that the pianoforte was the property of B.:—Held, that the innkeeper had no lien on the pianoforte for a bill due from his guest. Broadwood v. Granara, 10 Ex. 417; 24 L. J., Ex. 1; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 19; 3 W. R. 25; 3 C. L. R. 177.

On Property of Third Persons.] — Goods brought by a guest to an inn are subject to the innkeeper's lien, though they may turn out to be the property of a third party, provided they are such as a person might ordinarily travel with. Snead v. Watkins, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 267; 26 L. J., C. P. 57.

A., who had formerly been clerk to the plaintiff, an attorney, was subpœnaed as a witness in an action brought by his employer to recover the amount of a bill of costs. A. put up at a public house of entertainment at Westminster, kept by the defendant, bringing with him a bag containing, amongst other things, a letter-book belonging to the plaintiff. Whilst at the defendant's house he became indebted to the defendant for lodging and refreshments, and quitted without paying his bill, leaving behind him the bag with the letter-book, which the defendant refused to deliver up to the plaintiff on demand, claiming a lien for his bill against A.:—Held, that the claim of lien was valid. Ib.

The plaintiffs' traveller, in the course of his business, stayed at the defendant's inn. The plaintiffs forwarded goods to the traveller at the inn for sale to customers in the neighbourhood. The defendant knew that the goods were the property of the plaintiffs. The traveller having failed to pay the defendant a bill he had incurred for board and lodging:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to a lien upon the goods for the debt. Robins v. Gray, 65 L. J., Q. B. 44; [1895] 2 Q. B. 501; 14 R. 671; 73 L. T. 252; 44 W. R. 1; 59 J. P. 741—C. A.

—— Credit given to Husband—Separate Property of Wife.]—The defendants, husband and wife, stayed at the plaintiffs' hotel; the wife had with her a quantity of luggage, which was her separate property; credit was given to the husband, who made payments on account. The balance of the plaintiffs' bill not being paid, the plaintiffs detained the wife's luggage in the alleged exercise of their right of lien:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a lien upon the goods, notwithstanding that they were the separate property of the wife. Gordon v. Silber, 59 L. J., Q. B. 507; 25 Q. B. D. 491; 63 L. T. 283; 39 W. R. 111; 55 J. P. 134.

On Horses and Carriages.]—An innkeeper has no lien on a horse placed in his stable for the amount of its keep, unless placed there by a guest. Binns v. Pigot, 9 Car. & P. 208.

Where an innkeeper receives horses and a carriage to stand at livery, the circumstance of the owner, at a subsequent period, taking occasional refreshment at the inn, or sending a friend to be lodged there at his charge, will not entitle the innkeeper to a lien in respect of any part of his demand. Smith v. Dearlove, 6 C. B. 132; 17 L. J., C. P. 219; 12 Jur. 377.

An innkeeper has a lien on a horse for his keep, although wrongfully seized under colour of a legal proceeding, unless he knew that the party making the seizure was a wrongdoer at the time it was made. Johnson v. Hill, 3 Stark. 172; 23 R. R. 764.

An innkeeper has a lien on a carriage, brought to the inn by a guest, for its standing room, though the carriage does not belong to the guest himself. Turrill v. Crawley, 13 Q. B. 197; 18 L. J., Q. B. 155; 13 Jur. 878.

A man went to an inn, with two racehorses and a groom, in the character of a guest, and remained there for several months, taking the horses out every day for exercise and training, and being occasionally absent for several days together, at races in different parts of the country, but always with the intention of returning to the inn:—Held, that, in the absence of evidence of any alteration in the relation of the parties, that of innkeeper and guest must be presumed to continue; and that the occasional absences did not destroy the innkeeper's lien upon the horses for his bill. Allen v. Smith, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 638; 31 L. J., C. P. 306; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 230; 6 L. T. 459; 10 W. R. 646. Affirmed, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1284; 11 W. R. 440—Ex. Ch.

Held, also, that the fact of the innkeeper's having claimed a lien for the whole time, when in truth he was entitled for a part of it only, was not such an excess of claim as to dispense with a tender of that which was really due. Ib.

For Money Lent.]—The landlord of an inn has a lien for money lent to his guest, if it was agreed between them at the time of the loans that the guest's goods should be a security for the sums lent. Proctor v. Nicholson, 7 Car. & P. 67.

Execution—Goods subject to Lien.]—The landlord of an inn has a lien on the goods of a guest for board and lodging, and wine supplied to such guest's order, whatever may be the amount, provided the guest is possessed of his reason, and not an infant. Therefore the sheriff, under a fi. fa. against the guest, can only take the guest's goods, subject to the lien of the landlord for such his bill, and not merely subject to a lien for a reasonable quantity of wines, &c., only. Ib.

Extends to all Goods, &c., of Guest.]—The lien of an innkeeper is general, and extends to all goods and chattels belonging to his guest; and therefore a chattel, although deposited with the innkeeper and placed by him apart from the personal goods of the guest, may be detained by him on account of money owing to him for the lodging, food, and entertainment of the guest. Mulliner v. Florence, 47 L. J., Q. B. 700; 3 Q. B. D. 484; 38 L. T. 167; 26 W. R. 385—C. A.

Waiver.]—The lien of an innkeeper over a chattel belonging to a guest is waived, if in order to reimburse himself he sells it, unless under the Innkeepers Act, 1878, and this rule holds good even although the retention of the chattel is attended with expense. Ib.

An innkeeper who accepts security from his guest for the payment of hotel charges does not waive his lien at common law upon the goods of the guest for the amount of such charges unless there is something in the nature of the security, or in the circumstances under which it was taken, which is inconsistent with the existence or continuance of the lien and therefore destructive of it. Angus v. McLachlan, 52 L. J., Ch. 587; 23 Ch. D. 330; 48 L. T. 863; 31 W. R. 641.

What Care Necessary.]—An innkeeper retaining the goods of his guest by virtue of such lien is not bound to use greater care as to their custody than he uses as to his own goods of a similar description. Observations on Cowell v. Simpson (16 Ves. 275; 10 R. R. 181). Ib.

Termination of.]—Semble, the innkeeper's lien upon the traveller's goods for his charges terminates at the same time as the right of the traveller to be lodged in the inn as a traveller (per Lord Esher, M.R.). Lamond v. Richard, 66 L. J., Q. B. 315; [1897] 1 Q. B. 541; 76 L. T. 141; 45 W. R. 289; 61 J. P. 260—C. A.

By Court.]—On an interlocutory judgment, the court may assess damages with the assent of the plaintiff, without the intervention of a jury. Gould v. Hammersley, 4 Taunt. 148.

By Master.]—Before the provision contained in 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 92, which abolished rules to compute, the court refused to refer it to the master to compute principal and interest on a covenant to pay over to the plaintiff the first-fruits or proceeds which should be realised, and be at the disposition of defendant, under a writ of sequestrari facias. Smith v. Nesbitt, 2 C. B. 288; 3 D. & L. 420; 15 L. J., C. P. 31.

A defendant having suffered judgment by default in an action on a foreign judgment, the court would not refer it to the master to see what was due, and give the plaintiff leave to enter up final judgment for such sum without executing a writ of inquiry. Messin v. Massareene (Lord), 4 Term Rep. 493.

In an action upon a deed, whereby the plaintiffs covenanted to indemnify the bank of England against advances to L. and B. on bills of exchange to the amount of 100,000*l.*, and the defendant and others agreed to sub-indemnify the plaintiffs to the same amount in certain aliquot proportions, of which the defendant's proportion was 5,000*l.*; and the plaintiffs alleged that they had been obliged to pay the whole 100,000*l.* to the bank, and demanded of the defendant his proportion of 5,000*l.*; in which action the plaintiffs had judgment upon demurrer; the court refused to refer it to the master to compute the principal and interest due on the deed; considering that it was not a mere question of computation of principal and interest, but that it was open to the defendant, before the sheriff's jury, to enter into questions of collateral satisfaction of the plaintiffs' demand from securities and effects of L. and B., the principals, in their hands. Denison v. Mair, 14 East, 622.

A reference to the master was made to compute what was due in an action on a covenant for non-payment of rent. Byron v. Johnson, 8 Term Rep. 410. S. P., Hoard v. Hunt, 3 Jur. 24.

But in an action upon an indenture of lease, the breaches assigned being the non-payment of rent and of land-tax, the court refused a rule to compute. Morris v. Thompson, 4 Scott, 295; 1 Jur. 71.

The court referred it to the master to compute what was due for principal and interest on a mortgage. Berthen v. Street, 8 Term Rep. 326.

The amount due on a judgment, deducting payments made and proved at the trial, or the amount due for costs on a contract to pay costs of suing, is a matter of calculation, which may be referred to the master, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 94. National Assurance Association v. Best, 27 L. J., Ex. 19.

—— Interfering with Finding of Master.]—Where the parties agree to withdraw the case from the jury, and to submit it to the master under a judge's order, the master sits as an arbitrator appointed by the parties, and the court will not interfere with his finding as to the facts. Fisher v. Pyne, 1 Man. & G. 265.

Writ.]—A writ of inquiry may be tested in vacation. Collett v. Curling, 5 D. & L. 605; 12 Jur. 854.

The teste of a writ of inquiry may be amended by the award on the roll. Johnson v. Toulmin, 4 East, 173.

Service of Notice.]—It is not sufficient to serve a notice of inquiry on the defendant personally; it should be upon his attorney. Brookes v. Till, 2 Y. & J. 276.

Notice of a writ of inquiry was allowed to be served by sticking it up in the office, and leaving it at the defendant's last place of abode, though neither the process nor notice of declaration had been personally served. Watson v. Delcroix, 2 C. & M. 425; 2 D. P. C. 396; 4 Tyr. 266; 3 L. J., Ex. 94.

In an action by a public officer of a banking company for the balance of an account, the court allowed notice of executing a writ of inquiry to be served at the last place of abode of the defendant, and by sticking up in the master's office, in Michaelmas term, 1841, interlocutory judgment for want of a plea having been signed on the 11th January, 1839, and it being sworn that the defendant had gone to South Australia, in March, 1839, to evade payment of his debts. Probin v. Locock, 1 D. (N.S.) 197.

Irregular Notice.]—A defendant, to whom an irregular notice of inquiry is given, ought to return it forthwith, and state what objection he has to it. Stevens v. Pell, 2 C. & M. 421; 2 D. P. C. 355; 4 Tyr. 6; 3 L. J., Ex. 83.

Length of Notice.]—Where a defendant is under terms to take short notice of trial, he is not bound to take short notice of inquiry. Ib.

Notice of Continuance.]—If notice of a writ of inquiry, to be executed at a particular hour and place, is continued, the notice of continuance need not express any hour or place. Jones v. Chune, 1 Bos. & P. 363.

Time for Inquiry.]—On notice to execute a writ of inquiry at a certain hour, the party is not tied down to the exact time fixed by the notice. Williams v. Frith, 1 Doug. 198; Lofft, 193.

Notice of executing a writ of inquiry on "Tuesday, the 14th of January instant," when the 14th of January fell on a Thursday, and on which day the writ of inquiry was executed; the court refused to set aside the execution of the writ of inquiry for this irregularity, but rejected "Tuesday" as surplusage, it appearing that the defendant was not misled thereby. Batten v. Harrison, 3 Bos. & P. 1. S. P., Eldon v. Haig, 1 Chit. 11.

Before whom taken.]—An inquisition taken before two under-sheriffs extraordinary was set aside, because the high sheriff can appoint no more than one under-sheriff extraordinary. Denny v. Trapwell, 2 Wils. 378.

In an action on an administration bond, judgment by default having been suffered, and breaches assigned, under 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 8, the court allowed a writ of inquiry to be executed before the chief justice, notwithstanding 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 44, s. 16, but only granted a rule nisi in the first instance. Canterbury (Archbishop) v. Burlington, 1 D. (N.S.) 285.

Trial.]—A cause coming down for trial on writ of inquiry may be tried, though it has not been entered. Crisp v. Cordery, 2 F. & F. 864.

Irregular Notice Cured.]—An irregular notice of executing a writ of inquiry is cured by the defendant's lying by, and allowing the writ of inquiry to be completed. Viner v. Clarke, 1 Anstr. 175.

Special Jury.]—Where it appears that a common jury is improper to assess damages on a writ of inquiry before the sheriff, the court will direct the sheriff to summon a jury to be taken from the special jury book. Price v. Williams, 5 D. P. C. 160.

Counsel.]—It is sufficient notice of a plaintiff's intention to appear before the sheriff on the execution of a writ of inquiry by counsel, that the plaintiff's attorney informs the attorney for the defendant of such intention. Elliot v. Nicklin, 5 Price, 641.

Where no intimation has been given of an intention on the part of a plaintiff to appear by counsel on an inquisition of damages, the defendant should apply to the sheriff to put off the execution of the writ of inquiry. Ib.

Oath—By Whom Administered.]—In executing an inquiry, the under-sheriff, and not his deputy, should administer the oath to the jury. Rex v. Ferrand, 3 B. & Ald. 260; 1 Chit. 745; 22 R. R. 373.

Evidence—Judgment by Default.]—A judgment by default admits the facts stated on the record. Green v. Hearne, 3 Term Rep. 301.

Where in an action for slander the defendant suffered judgment by default, and on the execution of the writ of inquiry the plaintiff produced no evidence, and the jury assessed the damages at 40*l.*:—Held, first, that the plaintiff was not bound to produce any evidence; and, secondly, that the jury was not bound to give nominal damages only. Tripp v. Thomas, 5 D. & R. 276; 3 B. & C. 427; 1 Car. & P. 477; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 42.

At the execution of a writ of inquiry after judgment on demurrer, it is not competent to the defendant to controvert anything but the amount of the sum in demand. De Gaillon v. L'Aigle, 1 Bos. & P. 368.

In an action on a special agreement by the defendant, for certain considerations to pay the plaintiff a particular sum of money, a judgment by default admits the sum alleged to be due, and the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict for that amount without any evidence of damage. King v. Beak, 8 D. P. C. 735 ; 4 Jur. 633.

Where a defendant suffers judgment by default in an inferior court, and removes the proceedings into a superior court, in which he pleads to issue, the judgment by default is not even primâ facie evidence of the right of action. Bottings v. Firby, 4 M. & Ry. 567 ; 9 B. & C. 762 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 329.

In an action on a bond for the performance of covenants in a lease, judgment and suggestion of damages to be assessed on the writ of inquiry, the lease need not be proved. Collins v. Rybot, 1 Esp. 157.

In an action on a policy on a foreign ship, where there is a stipulation that the policy shall be sufficient proof of interest ; if there is judgment by default, the plaintiff on the writ of inquiry need only prove the defendant's subscription to the policy, without giving any evidence of interest. Thellusson v. Fletcher, 1 Dougl. 315 ; 1 Esp. 73.

In an action for work and labour, the defendant, on a judgment by default, is at liberty to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses, who are called to prove the work done, as to whether the work was done on the defendant's retainer or not. Williams v. Cooper, 3 D. P. C. 204.

Upon a judgment by default or on demurrer, the contract or contracts are admitted as stated in the declaration, and evidence to contradict them ought not to be admitted. Stephens v. Pell, 2 D. P. C. 629.

Where a plaintiff in an action upon a bill of exchange has obtained judgment on demurrer to a plea, he may, on execution of a writ of inquiry, recover the amount of the bill without producing it in court. Lane v. Mullins, 2 Q. B. 254 ; 1 G. & D. 712 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 562 ; 11 L. J., Q. B. 51 ; 5 Jur. 1084. S. P., Watson v. Glover, 12 L. J., C. P. 184 ; 7 Jur. 68.

Adjournment.]—Where a writ of trial issues to a sheriff, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, he has the same power as a judge at nisi prius to adjourn the trial, or the plaintiff may withdraw the writ. Shaw v. Owen, 17 C. B. 524 ; 25 L. J., C. P. 103.

Amendment.]—The teste of the writ may be amended. Johnson v. Toulmin, 4 East, 173.

The return may also be amended by the award, even after the inquisition of damages has been taken, and consequently a defect in the return does not vitiate the proceedings or affect the jurisdiction of the sheriff. Pippet v. Hearn, 1 D. & R. 266 ; 5 B. & Ald. 634.

Where in an action for treble value of tithes, the declaration contained a count for treble value, and counts for tithes bargained and sold, and on an account stated ; and the defendant suffered judgment by default ; and the jury, on a writ of inquiry, assessed the damages at 17*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* on the first count for the treble value, and 9*l.* for the single value on the other counts, but omitted to find costs : the court ordered the return of the inquisition to be amended by the insertion of nominal damages as to the last counts, on which costs de incremento might be added. Bale v. Hodgetts, 7 Moore, 602 ; 1 Bing. 182 ; 1 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 34.

If two sued in trespass suffer judgment by default, and the plaintiff executes writs of inquiry against them separately, and takes several damages against them, it is irregular ; and if the plaintiff enters up final judgment with those several damages against them, it is erroneous ; but the court will permit the plaintiff to amend his own proceedings before final judgment, on payment of costs. Mitchell v. Milbank, 6 Term Rep. 199.

Staying Execution.]—The court will not, at the instance of the sheriff, stay the execution of a writ of inquiry, on a judgment by default in an action for a libel, on the ground that the house of commons has voted the libel to be a privileged publication, and that all persons concerned in bringing any action in respect of such publication are guilty of a breach of the privileges of that house. Stockdale v. Hansard, 8 D. P. C. 148.

Setting aside.]—It is not necessary that a rule to set aside a writ of inquiry should be drawn up on reading the under-sheriff's notes. Stephens v. Pell, 2 C. & M. 710 ; 2 D. P. C. 629 ; 4 Tyr. 267 ; 3 L. J., Ex. 214.

No affidavit of merits is required where the execution of a writ of inquiry is set aside on the ground of irregularity in not giving notice of the inquiry. Williams v. Williams, 4 Tyr. 368.

Where, on the execution of a writ of inquiry in an action for slander, the jury is incorrectly informed by the under-sheriff, that any amount of damages will carry costs, and they find for less than 40*s.*, that is no ground for a new writ of inquiry, or for increasing the amount of the verdict. Grater v. Collard, 7 D. P. C. 503 ; 1 W. W. & H. 294 ; 2 Jur. 568.

A new trial will not be granted where the sum sought to be recovered is under 5*l.*, merely because it is of importance to the plaintiff. Lee v. Evans, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 368.

The court will not grant a rule for setting aside an inquisition after judgment by default, on the ground that the under-sheriff directed the jury to consider the poverty of the defendant, in mitigation of damages. Kingston v. Haychurch, 1 Chit. 644.

The court set aside an inquisition taken on a writ of inquiry, because some of the jury were debtors in prison, and taken out of custody for the purpose of attending. Staunton v. Beadle, 4 Term Rep. 473.

A judgment upon a writ of inquiry was set aside because the jury was returned by the attorney for the plaintiff. Baylis v. Lucas, Cowp. 112.

More Damages than Claimed.]—Though the jury on a writ of inquiry assesses more damages than are laid in the declaration, yet if judgment is entered accordingly, it is error. Cheveley v. Morris, 2 W. Bl. 1300.

Excessive Damages.]—The court refused to quash a writ of inquiry on account of excessive damages, though the court acknowledged them to be so, from the peculiar circumstances of the case. Benson v. Frederick, 3 Burr. 1845.

A motion to set aside an inquisition for excessive damages must be made on affidavits. William v. Reeves, 2 Chit. 218.

After judgment by default and writ of inquiry executed, the court ordered a new inquiry, on the ground that, as to part of the damages found, there was no evidence to warrant the finding of the jury ; the defendant, however, in order to save the expense of a second inquiry, paid the plaintiff the whole of his demand :—Held, notwithstanding, that he was not bound to pay the plaintiff the costs of the inquiry. Porter v. Cooper, 2 C., M. & R. 232; 3 D. P. C. 662; 4 L. J., Ex. 192.

On motion to set aside an inquisition taken on a writ of inquiry before the under-sheriff for excessive damages, the court will not admit minutes of what passed before the under-sheriff to be read, unless verified by affidavit. Lathbury v. Brown, 10 Moore, 106; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 81.

Where, in an action against custom-house officers for entering plaintiff's house and searching for run goods, where they found none, the jury assessed 100*l.* damages on a writ of inquiry against them, though they did little or no damage: the court refused to set aside the inquisition. Bince v. Rawlins, 3 Wils. 16.

Too Small Damages.]—Upon the execution of a writ of inquiry, in an action for dilapidations, two surveyors were called on each side; those called for the plaintiff estimated the dilapidations, the one at 119*l.*, the other at 124*l.*; those called by the defendant estimated them, the one at 63*l.* 15*s.*, the other at 68*l.*; the jury returned a verdict for 36*l.* 10*s.* The court ordered that the inquisition should be set aside, without costs, unless the defendant would consent to the verdict being entered for 63*l.* 15*s.* Wedding v. Mason, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 382.

Rule to Return.]—Where a sheriff does not return in due time a writ of inquiry, the court will compel him by rule so to do. Stockdale v. Hansard, 8 D. P. C. 296; 3 Jur. 1174.

Application for New Writ.]—Where in an action in the high court to recover damages the defendant does not appear, and a writ of inquiry issues to the sheriff to assess damages with a jury, if either party desires to question the assessment of damages, the motion for a new writ of inquiry must be made to the court of appeal under s. 1 of the Judicature Act, 1890, and not to the queen's bench division. William Radam's Microbe Killer Co. v. Leather, 61 L. J., Q. B. 38; [1892] 1 Q. B. 85; 65 L. T. 604; 40 W. R. 83—C. A.

Appeal.]—An appeal lay against the decision of the court on a rule to enter a verdict or a nonsuit upon a point reserved at the trial of a cause before an under-sheriff under the writ of trial act. Lery v. Green, 1 El. & El. 969; 28 L. J., Q. B. 319; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1245; 7 W. R. 486—Ex. Ch.

Costs.]—The amount of special fees paid to a good jury at the trial, before the secondary of the sheriffs of London, of a writ of inquiry to assess damages may be allowed on taxation of the plaintiff's costs. Vines v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 39 L. J., Ex. 175; L. R. 5 Ex. 201; 22 L. T. 448; 18 W. R. 814. S. P., Vickery v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 39 L. J., C. P. 169; L. R. 5 C. P. 165; 22 L. T. 270; 18 W. R. 549.

Since the 46th rule of Hilary Term, 1853, the costs of a good jury upon the execution of a writ of inquiry are allowed on taxation. Wilkinson v. Malin, 1 C. & M. 237; 1 D. P. C. 630; 3 Tyr. 255.

A declaration contained three breaches for arrears of sleeping rent due upon a mining lease, for not keeping the mine in repair, and for not properly working the mine. The defendant suffered judgment by default, and upon the execution of a writ of inquiry, the jury gave the plaintiff 50*l.* damages on the first breach, but refused to find any damages on the second and third breaches:—Held, that the plaintiff was, nevertheless, entitled to the expenses of witnesses called to prove those breaches whom the master in the exercise of his discretion thought material and necessary, the plaintiff being entitled as matter of law to nominal damages on those breaches. Dods v. Evans, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 621; 33 L. J., C. P. 146; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 154; 9 L. T. 723; 12 W. R. 432.
